The appearance of the portrait in the King's bedchamber has aroused the Queen to still greater fury. He has had it mounted in a panel of his bedstead, just above his pillow. Leonardo, fearing its destruction, hides in the room. When the Queen comes he begs her to spare the picture and let him take it away with him, to which she finally consents. He removes the painting from the aperture and is about to depart when sounds of the King approaching prompt him to hide it. The Queen departs before the King enters, and the old man is left to get out of the situation as best he can. He is telling the King of having taken the picture away in order to save it, when Mona Lisa herself is ushered in. While they are talking over their complicated affairs the Queen, having probably been advised of the woman's presence, is heard approaching. To avoid discovery La Gioconda is placed behind the bedstead and poses herself in the empty panel in the same position in which she appears in the portrait. The King and Queen have a violent quarrel, incident to which she rushes at the supposed portrait to destroy it with her dagger. The knife, intended to slash the canvas, plunges into the heart of Mona Lisa. She expires in Leonardo's arms, and when she is dead the poor old man kneels before her picture and weeps to the depths of his heart.

The Spectre Bridegroom

A Two-Part Eclair Subject Adapted in Pleasing Fashion From One of Washington Irving's Tales.

Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman.

WITH a few variations the Eclair Company is now offering for popular approval "The Spectre Bridegroom," a two-part release based upon Washington Irving's well-known story of the same name, which appears in his justly renowned "Sketch Book." The tale as related by Irving is founded upon the superstitions of German peasantry during medieval times. For reasons best known to itself, the Eclair Company has changed the time and locale of the story to the Revolutionary period in America. While this variation does not materially change the effect of the story, neither does it injure the tale in any way; it was perhaps done as a matter of studio convenience.

The only criticism of the Spectre Bridegroom himself, worth mentioning is the fact that he appeared to be a pretty well fed spectre. There was nothing of the gaunt Hamlet-like spectre, on the Forbes-Robertson plan, that one might logically expect under the circumstances, merely, of course, for the sake of sustaining a supernatural atmosphere throughout the piece. Otherwise the affair passed off happily, and on the whole the picture makes a good story and is well photographed and acted. Pretty girls are pretty girls, whether they be arrayed in old Dutch fashion or as daughters of the revolution, and there are plenty of them in this picture. The weight of the story, however, is carried principally by Mr. Alec B. Francis in the role of the Baron. His work in the part is finished and holds the piece together nicely. The picture is one that will be particularly pleasing to lady audiences, which is a quality that exhibitors usually desire in a picture.

BURIAL OF L. G. COOVER.

The remains of Mr. L. G. Coover, the well-known and popular young Eclair publicity man, who died recently in New York, were laid at rest in the Lutheran Cemetery near New York City on Friday, January 10th. As many of the Eclair office force as could be spared assembled for the funeral services at O'Connell's undertaking establishment in Hudson street, New York City. Among the number were Mr. Ch. Jourjon, president of the Eclair Company, and Mr. O. E. Offerman, general manager of the New York office. It reflects only credit upon the Eclair company to mention that the entire funeral expense was defrayed by the company of which the deceased was an employee. So ends the career of a promising young man who was a hard worker and well liked by all who knew him.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

WANT SQUARE DEAL IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Exhibitors See Great Menace in Enforcement of the "Aisle Law."

By D. L. Manley.

THE convening of the Pennsylvania State Legislature has again brought about the immediate prospect of an enforcement of the so-called "three four-foot aisle law." This measure which was fostered by interests that never dared show its origin is in danger of being foisted on the exhibitors of this State through the threats of the original backers of the bill, who promise to bring about a speedy enforcement of this bill. To everyone interested in the least way in the moving picture industry, whether as manufacturer or exhibitor, the absurdities of the bill are apparent. To require every moving picture theater to have three aisles, each one four feet wide, is the most drastic and thoroughly unfair piece of legislation that has ever been enacted by the State Assembly. The absurdity of requiring the many smaller theaters scattered through the State, many of them not having more than a twenty-foot hall to use up twelve feet of space for aisles can be appreciated when the fact is taken into consideration of the existence of the many so-called "legitimate" theaters and playhouses with a body sixty, seventy and a hundred feet wide, and yet containing only two or three aisles with the usual width of three feet. If the law were made to apply to the "legitimate" theaters in the same condition as it will to the moving picture theaters, or in other words, if these same playhouses were required to devote more than half their floor space to the use of aisles, the howl that would arise from these who, heretofore have been quiet, would readily indicate the real source of this unfair legislation.

The enforcement of this law means, practically, that the seating capacity of Pennsylvania moving picture theaters would be reduced from fifty to twenty per cent. and, with the consequent loss of these admissions, many of the smaller houses would find it necessary to close their doors and retire from business. In any growing business or industry the antiquated trades and business concerns that are hurt by this very growing use of every method at their command to encompass the destruction of the rapidly increasing industry. Just so with the moving picture business. Every year shows greater strides towards immensity and perfection made by this business and the ones that are hurt are bringing into play every possible system that great financial backing and established connections can furnish. There is only one business being injured by the growth of the motion picture industry, and it is is this rich and powerful body that is causing and advocating such palpably unfair legislation as that which cuts down the earning power of a business about fifty per cent.

Every motion picture exhibitor, every manufacturer, every individual and business concern in any way connected with the moving picture business should bring their influence to bear on the legislators from their district. A fair and impartial bill has been presented to the legislature, which is amply strict enough to keep picture theaters safe and yet at the same time accord them the right to utilize their floor space to the best advantage. If the motion picture people of this State will insist on their representative in the legislature getting away from the promises made by the lobbyists and voting for a fair square law, the danger from this adverse legislation will have been done away with and the business at large have won a signal victory in their fight for a square deal.

GOVERNMENT TAKING TESTIMONY.

Hearings in the Government's action against the Moving Picture Patents Co., the General Film Co., and the several licensed manufacturers, for alleged violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust law, began in New York January 15, before Edward Hacker, sitting as special examiner, at the Hotel McAlpin. During the week witnesses from various parts of the East will testify. Subsequent hearings will be held in Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis and St. Paul, Minn.

LAST CALL FOR OHIO CONVENTION.

This is the last opportunity the Moving Picture World will have to remind moving picture exhibitors in the state of Ohio that the annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of that state will be held at Columbus on January 21st and 22nd. An extraordinary effort is being made by the officers of the Ohio League and the special Committee of arrangements on the ground at Columbus, to get out a big attendance of members and other exhibitors who ought to be members. Latest reports from the field of action indicate that these efforts will be highly successful and that the Ohio convention will be the largest ever held in that state.

In addition to the regular state convention there will be held at Columbus a meeting of the vice-presidents of the various state organizations. There is much business scheduled to be considered by the committee of vice-presidents, and considerable interest is attached to their deliberations.

All meetings will be held at the Southern Hotel where special concessions have been secured for the accommodation of the convention. Space has also been provided for the use of manufacturers of machines and supplies who desire to make an exhibit, and it is reported that the greater part of this space has already been assigned and that the big display will be made by the manufacturers.

A committee from the local Chamber of Commerce has been co-operating with the committee of exhibitors to provide entertainment for members and their guests. Special attention will be given to the entertainment of the ladies, so that members who intend bringing their wives will be assured that they will be provided for. The meeting will conclude with a banquet on the evening of the 22nd at which a number of prominent speakers will be beard, including Governor James M. Cox, Senator Joseph B. Foraker, Hon. J. J. Lentz. No member of the Ohio league can afford to miss this meeting. Put your business in shape so that it will run a few days without you and be prepared to answer to your name when it is called at Columbus.

HALLBERG'S NEW TICKET COUNTING AND DISPENSING MACHINE.

Every amusement place using roll tickets of any standard make and especially those conducting motion picture theaters, where the standard roll of 2,000 tickets in varying prices is used, will be interested in the Hallberg Ticket Counting and Dispensing Machine, within which may be placed a standard roll of tickets in a few seconds' time. After the roll has been put in the device is closed to the operator by a lock to which the manager or proprietor only carries the key. By the action of a single lever, operated with one hand by the ticket seller, the machine automatically takes one ticket from the roll, counts it on an automatic continuous register, just the same as a cash register would do. After the ticket has been counted, it is pushed through an opening in front of the dispenser where it is discharged and picked up by the purchaser.

The use of this machine makes it unnecessary for the ticket seller to tear off or handle a single ticket. The customer or purchaser soon becomes accustomed to receiving the tickets directly from the mouth of the machine, which absolutely prevents the reselling of tickets and keeps an accurate account under lock and key of every ticket sold.

The machine is heavily and simply constructed; is of artistic design and occupies very little room, requiring only a space 8¾" high, 14" long and 3" wide. Where tickets of more than one price are sold two machines can be installed, one on either side of the window opening, and the speed at which the tickets can be delivered is many times the possibility of the seller making change; as a matter of fact, more than 150 tickets a minute have been dispensed on test. The design is perfect and attractive and the finish is high class throughout. They are available at the present time in either oxidized copper or nickel finish.

Pathe, in its Film d'Art "Romeo and Juliet" gave us two reels of surpassing beauty. The procession that followed the bier of Juliet formed a picture that is rarely equaled.

"Hop o' My Thumb" (Gaumont.)

THIS two-part reproduction of Perrault's fairy story will make excellent entertainment for the holidays—and afterward. It will appeal especially to the little folks. It is not difficut to foresee that the youngesters will wax enthusiastic over the adventures of the seven children of the woodcutter; one reason why they will do so, is that the seven boys are led by the redoubtable Jimmie, who essays the role of Hop o' My Thumb. There is only one Jimmie, and his presence in the cast is sufficient to guarantee the interest of others than children. He always holds an audience of adults. The part of the mother of the seven children is played by Mme. Rene Carll, the splendid actress so popular with all Gaumont followers. The films are hand colored.

Scene from "Hop O' My Thumb" (Gaumont).

The story opens in the cottage of the woodcutter. Harassed by the problem of trying to feed so many mouths, the woodman adopts the singular plan of losing them in the depths of the forest rather than see them starve at home. Hop is too shrewd for his scheming parent; all through the woods, as he is led away, he sprinkles pebbles, so that when the desertion takes place, it is a simple matter for him to guide his brothers straight home to their mother's arms. They had escaped the goblins of the forest. Fortune smiles on the parents. They receive ten crowns for a bit of work the woodcutter has done. When this money has been spent, poverty returns. The woodcutter determines there are two many mouths to feed, and the children are again led into the forest. This time Hop can get no pebbles, so he drops crumbs of bread.

Scene from "Hop O' My Thumb" (Gaumont).

When Hop starts to retrace his steps, he discovers that the birds have eaten the crumbs—the "path," as the title reads. Hop climbs a tree, and in the distance sees a castle. He leads his brothers to it. He pulls the great knocker. A large woman opens the castle door. All the children bow to her. She is alarmed for the safety of the boys, and tells them of the great ogre, her husband. She cannot alarm Hop, however. He calmly intimates that the wolves will get them anyhow if she turns them out. The big woman's alarm is real, however, when there comes a knock on the door. Hop leads the children under a bed. The great ogre, arrayed in gorgeous costume, enters. He glares wildly around, displaying his enormous molars. He utters the famous "Fe, fi, fo, fum! I smell the blood of chickens, some!"

The ogre hears the children under the bed, and drags them out. He takes an enormous knife and prepares to carve Hop. His wife interferes, saying that the children are scrawny, and suggesting that she be given an opportunity to fatten them. So the children are put to bed, alongside the seven daughters of the ogre. The girls all wear a golden crown. Here is Hop's opportunity. During the night he takes the caps from the heads of his brothers and the crowns from the heads of the daughters and transfers them. The ogre tells his wife that he feels like absorbing something. He goes to the bedroom, where the fourteen are all asleep. He reaches into the bed of the woodcutter's children and from a tousled head pulls a crown. This he sees will not do. He replaces the crown and looks for a cap. One the head of one of the sleeping daughters he locates one. We see the great knife in the air and the scene changes. The ogre has slain all wearing a cap. After his departure Hop arouses his brothers and escapes.

The ogre in the morning discovers how he has been fooled by Hop. He gets into his seven-league boots and starts after the children. He flies over the ground. As he is tired out, he stops to take a nap. Hop removes the boots and put them on his own feet. The famous boots shrink to fit him. Away goes Hop back to the castle and informs the wife of the ogre, that her bloodthirsty individual has been captured by "suffragettes" and that he wants money for ransom. The good wife turns over to Hop a bag of gold. Hop returns home, and is warmly welcomed. He pours over the floor of the hut the gold of the ogre.

The seven-league boots have made Hop famous. He is appointed a messenger to the king. He establishes the family of the woodcutter at court. There we see him arrayed in silks and fancy garb waiting on the king and queen. The whole family are likewise arrayed. Their poverty is at an end.

GEORGE MURRAY SELLS POSTERS.

The Morgan Lithograph Company's appointment of George H. Murray as representative of the New York office shows conclusively that this progressive firm are alive to the conditions of the times. In making this selection they have secured one of the best known theatrical, and circus men in this country, who has not only travelled the World, but every city, town and hamlet of the North American continent, and possesses probably the greatest acquaintance of any man ever in his line. He has been identified with many of the greatest attractions, and many of the famous "Stunts" which served to keep Sarah Bernhardt before the country, her last two tour's were of his conception. The past season Mr. Murray, handled Montgomery and Stone, also Elsie Janis for Mr. Charles Dillingham. With such a varied career there is no question but what he will prove a valuable adjunct to the resources of this firm.

George H. Murray.

MARTIN TO BUILD ANOTHER PICTURE HOUSE.

E. Wayne Martin, sole owner and manager of three high-class vaudeville and moving picture houses in the city of Hutchinson, Kansas, announces that he has in course of construction another vaudeville and moving picture house in that city. The new theater is to be a thoroughly modern and fireproof structure in every respect, and will cost when completed about $50,000. Mr. Martin says that his new place will unquestionably be the finest in the state of Kansas.

Music for the Picture

BY CLARENCE E. SINN

HERE'S that old complaint again, this time from New England: "Dear Sir.—Won't you please give the exhibitors a jolt? Several Boston picture houses permit their drummers (or some Eastern product) to beat a tumpty-tum as of horses trotting on asphalt pavement—a terrific racket—during the army and Indian pictures, when it is plain the horses are on soft or sandy soil—the dust flying so they can hardly be seen. It's anything but "Western," is ridiculously absurd and intensely annoying to the audience. Many people speak of it.—C. D., Dorchester, Mass."

One would have a right to hope that this sort of thing belonged to the past. Whoever is to blame, be it manager or drummer (and I fear it is usually the latter), he can hardly plead ignorance as an excuse. Noisy, silly and incorrect "sound effects" have been so often criticised by the public, the daily papers and the moving picture trade journals—particularly the Moving Picture World—that even the most thoughtless and careless ought to know better. I believe "sound effects" had an immense value a few years ago. I think they contributed largely to the awakening of managers and others to the importance of appropriate music for accompanying the picture. Previous to the sound effect period anything in the shape of a "bally-hoo" was good enough for the musical part of the show; phonographs, mechanical pianos, and rag-time "thumpers" amused (?) the easily entertained patron of the moving picture novelty. Then the sound effects were introduced adding a new element of interest. They were generally noisy, crude and misplaced, but the average picture of six or seven years ago was not harmed to an appreciable extent. Even then the better element among the picture patrons resented the incorrect and noisy "effects." To the best of my knowledge the value of appropriate music began to be advocated at that time by critics, patrons and musicians. Music for the picture has advanced to a much higher plane in the past six years; the "sound effect" idea (with many) is practically the same now as it was in its crude beginning. It must either change for the better or be doomed to oblivion.

Music Programs.

Gaumont's three-reel feature entitled "The Vengeance of Egypt" gives an opportunity for the "thematic" treatment which occasioned some comment in this page a couple of years ago. Some musical theme may be chosen to represent the mummy's ring and its malignant power (as Wagner uses a motif for the Shield, Fire, Sword or other important object), and this theme should be repeated each time the ring changes hands—that is, when it is developed that the ring has found a new victim. This theme should be of a weird mysterious character; the third movement (doloroso) of Theo. Bendix's "Hindoo Priest's Incantation" is offered as a suggestion. If this is used it should be played slowly to end of the number if necessary; if not long enough repeat from the same place (3rd movement doloroso). I believe it would be a good idea to use one plaintive also for the death of each victim of the ring; though not really necessary, it would still further carry out the "thematic" form and emphasize the dominant idea of the picture—the vengeance following the ring.

"THE VENGEANCE OF EGYPT" (Gaumont).

1. Marseilles. Begin softly, swell as Napoleon enters; diminish when slaves stoop to raise mummy casket. When casket is upright change to:
2. First part of "Sultan's Dream" (Bendix) or any Oriental of a mysterious character. At title: "Lieut. Berard, Officer of the Guard," very softly until case is opened. Swell to mf until "The Mummy is Despoiled."
3. Mysterious until he takes ring from mummy's finger, then:
4. Theme of the ring. I have suggested the third movement of Theo. Bendix's "Hindoo Priest's Incantation" for this. It will be referred to as "Theme" whenever it occurs. Repeat until title: "The Home of Charlotte Gartier."
5. "Daisies" (from Bendix's Floral Suite) until "A Weird Dream."
6. "Theme" till vision; then:
7. First part of "Sultan's Dream," until vision over.
8. "Theme" again until after newspaper item shown.
9. Plaintive until end of reel.

Part Two.

1. Gavotte until he takes ring from cabinet.
2. "Theme" until next title.
3. "Lilies" (or any bright little waltz) until: "The Ring's Second Victim."
4. "Theme" until burglar enters behind girl.
5. Mysterious till change of scene.
6. Waltz lento ("Devotion") until title: "The Antiquary Loves to Descend to His Shop."
7. "Theme" until: "The Ring's Third Victim."
8. "Miama" (by Neil Moret) until: "The Ring's Fourth Victim."
9. Waltz until man is seen with gun.
10. Mysterious until "The Empty Boat."
11. Pathetic (some as end of first reel) until end of reel.

Part Third.

1. Waltz or Novelette until he puts ring on girl's finger.
2. "Theme" until title: "Paul Is a Daring and Successful Aviator."
3. Lively Intermezzo till machine starts.
4. "Theme" (faster this time—agitated character) until machine is seen wrecked. Crescendo until title: "From the Fingers Cold in Death."
5. Pathetic (same as before) until title: "The Journey."
6. "Passion" (by Hager) until: "Into the Depths of Doom."
7. Agitato until: "The Fisherman's Discovery."
8. "Passion" again until mummy case is opened.
9. First part of "Sultan's Dream" until close.

Another fine picture with the atmosphere of ancient Egypt is

"WHEN SOUL MEETS SOUL" (Essanay).

1. "Autumn" (by Losey) until letter is shown.
2. "Egyptian Love Dance" pp and crescendo until: "Off to Battle."
3. Soft agitato until: "The Return From the War."
4. "Isis" (Witmark). Begin with soft and slow through two scenes, then crescendo and quicken to march tempo until they are about to drink at the table.
5. Agitato (soft) until change of scene.
6. "Egyptian Love Dance" until old man awakes.
7. "Heartsease" (by Moret) until close.

---

Through favor of W. E. King, of the Orpheum Theater, Chicago, I offer the musical accompaniment (as played by his orchestra) of

"ROMEO AND JULIET" (Pathe).

1. "A Little Story" (by Zimmerman; pub. by Carl Fischer) until title: "Hopelessly in Love with Romeo."
2. "Reconciliation" (Bendix) until reception scene.
3. Gavotte (Harp effect) until all exit but two.
4. Barcarolle from "Tales of Hoffman," until they enter church.
5. Religioso until: "Provoked By His Rival."
6. Soft agitato until he is brought before the duke.
7. Rather slow and solemn. (Could use introduction of "Poet and Peasant."—Ed.) "Romeo Takes Leave of Juliet."
8. "The Roses Honeymoon" (Bratton) until end of reel.

Part Second.

1. "Roses and Memories" (Ted Snyder) until: "Friar Laurence Gives Juliet."
2. "Melody of Peace" (Carl Fischer) until title: "Romeo Ignorant of the Death of Juliet."
3. "Pansies" (Witmark) until funeral procession seen coming down steps.
4. Funeral March (Sousa's "Our Honored Dead") until Romeo is left alone with bier.
5. "Longing" (pathetic) from Theo. Bendix suite until close.

Photoplayers to Give St. Valentine Ball—Olive Skinner Joins Picture Players—Wallingford on the Screen.

PLANS for the St. Valentine's Ball to be given by the photoplayers on the night of February 14 have been perfected. The ball will be given in Shrine Auditorium, the largest dancing floor in Southern California, having a capacity of 6,000 persons. William E. Wing has been appointed "manager of the ball" and will devote his entire time to it between now and the big date. Nearly all of the local exhibitors have agreed to run stereopticon slides in their houses for a week before the event and advertising space has been contracted for in all the daily newspapers. Every member of the organization, which now comprises practically every motion picture actor, director and camera man in this locality, is to be required to be on hand with his white breasted clothes. The women of the various producing companies have promised to help in every way in their power, so that there is a reasonable prospect that the industry will be well represented. As for the public; tickets are one dollar and everything else thrown in.

Olive Skinner in Pictures.

Olive Skinner, leading woman for many years with the Old Kentucky road company, made her first venture into the motion picture field this week when she played the leading role in a railroad melodrama produced by Director James Young Deer, of the Pathe West Coast company. Miss Skinner has been playing an engagement at the Lyceum theater in this city. Both she and Deer found the experience so satisfactory, with the picture, that she may close with the dramatic company soon and come here to locate permanently.

Incidentally her first experience came very near being her last. One of the scenes required her to fall unconscious across a railroad track on which a train was approaching. "How close can you run without danger," Director Deer asked the engineer in charge of the train he had rented for the day. "I can come within six feet of her," he answered, and Deer told him to go to it. The engineer turned out to be a bad guesser, for when he brought the train to a stop the pilot was actually touching Miss Skinner's clothes.

A "Wallingford" Picture.

A photoplay version in four reels of George Randolph Chester's "Get Rich Quick Wallingford" story, "The Cash Intrigue," is to be the next production of the Utah motion picture people, who have just finished the five-reel subject "100 Years of Mormonism." The Mormon pictures are now ready for projection. In finishing up it was found that only 225 feet of retakes were necessary out of a total of 9,000 feet. This 9,000 feet has been condensed by judicious elimination of unnecessary detail to the 5,000 feet in which the historical picture will go to the public.

Work on the Wallingford picture began this week when Director Norval MacGregor staged the first scenes at the company's studio on Washington Heights. The price paid the Bobbs-Merrill Company and the author for the right to film the story has not been given out, but it is a matter of record that Oliver Morosco, the theatrical manager, will pay $1,500 a week for three weeks to produce the drama in this city.

The story as written was not well adapted for photoplay purposes and the copy was turned over to Nell Shipman, who has been doing most of the scenario work for the company, to put into technical form. Three or four scenes not in the original story had to be written in order to "get over" important points.

Adventures of the Donner Party.

The thrilling story of the Donner party, one of the most remarkable tales of human interest and heroism in the history of the West, is to be reproduced in accurate detail by the Universal Company. Director Frank E. Montgomery, who has made a careful investigation and study of all the historical data bearing on the subject and has long wanted to reproduce it in motion pictures, is fortunately the man who is to handle the subject. The Donner party, consisting of about 100 emigrants from the Middle West, started for California in a wagon train several years before the discovery of gold in this State. Their journey was without unfortunate incident until they reached Utah, when they were directed over a bad trail that detained them nearly sixty days. When they reached the Sierra Nevada mountains at the California State line the season was so far advanced that if they had had anyone in the party who was familiar with the impassible state of the range, once the snows came, they would never have attempted to cross before spring. In their ignorance they pushed on and the first snow storm caught them in the heart of the mountains. The snow grew deeper until when at length they reached the shores of what is now Donner Lake, near Lake Tahoe, they could proceed no further and camped for the winter. Their provisions were nearly gone and starvation became an immediate peril before they had time to build shelters. They were without food except for dried skins and almost without fuel. The stronger members of the party set out on foot to walk to Fort Sutter, now Sacramento, to bring relief. Most of them perished. Another party followed later and one or two lived to the end of the journey. A relief party was sent, but the members endured such hardships that they were nearly dead when they reached the famine camp. Eventually only a handful reached civilization, but there is probably no other episode in history which presents so many instances of supreme heroism and self sacrifice as there are connected with this one. Montgomery will take a company to Donner Lake as soon as snow conditions are right to reproduce the original scenes in the original settings.

Flashes.

Smiling Billy Horne, who now shows the only licensed films on Spring Street, anticipated possible objections of the temperance folks and beat them to it this week when he ran the Biograph release, "Three Friends." There were several drinking scenes. "It's Only Cold Tea They Drink in This Picture," a placard in front of the theater announced.

The price paid by William H. Clune for the California and Arizona State Rights for the Kalem picture, "From the Manger to the Cross," was $8,000. First reports among the local exhibitors was that it was about $10,000, which was too high.

Another company has joined the ever-growing producing colony in Los Angeles. This time it is the Lubin people, back again. Their old studio at Hollywood was leased during their absence by Arthur Mackley, of the Essanay forces, so they have taken the studio formerly belonging to the Los Angeles company at 137 East Avenue 49.

MYSTERY SURROUNDS NEW FILM.

Because they prefer to wait until they attain perfection, the makers of a new film in California that will release shortly, have withheld their identity and particulars about the picture they are producing. On the latter score, the only information given out is to the effect that they have succeeded in obtaining some films that will be voted a revelation in production and photography.

Further details, however, the makers of the new California picture are not anxious to make public until their product is ready for release. At that time, they state, they will be pleased to come forth into the open and stand or fall on the reception accorded their work. They preferred to do the preparatory work in quiet, and without fear of disturbance. Indeed, their advertisement in last week's World was the first piece of publicity that they issued, notwithstanding that the work was finished in a first-class studio in the Land of Sunshine many weeks ago.

It is stated by the producers that although their plans have been kept from the general public, exchange men have inspected their first work, and almost two-score in the Mutual group have "ordered." The name of these exchange offices, and details on the kind of picture which the new company will soon ship them, will be given full publicity shortly. Thus far it is merely vouchsafed that a name has been decided upon for the new film, and it is "Royal."

ARTISTIC GREAT NORTHERN POSTERS.

The Great Northern Special Feature Film Company is boasting of one of the most artistic series of posters ever prepared for motion picture theater display. "In a Den of Lions" and "Conquered, Or The Madcap Countess," the two big features now being exploited by the company afford excellent opportunity for the lithograph artist, and the posters covering these subjects are pronounced exceptional in every detail. There are one, three, six and nine sheets for "In a Den of Lions," and these portray scenes in actual circus and drawn from photographs. The nine sheet showing wild animals in action under their tamer is an exceptional example of artistic poster work. The "paper" for "Conquered" is fully as attractive and includes one, three and six sheets replete with detail. The three sheet shows a thrilling rescue from drowning and the six sheet depicts a giant loop the loop, around which the hero of the film feature rides in a motor car.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

THE second week of the new year brought out quite a number of developments of a practical nature in the motion picture field, far more than during the same period last year, and if there are as many during the second week of January, 1914, the dramatic columns of the newspapers will devote more space to motion pictures than to the bookings of the regular theaters. Twelve months have brought about great changes to the advantage of the photoplay form of amusement. The dramatic critics and editors who considered them too insignificant for their attention, except for the purpose of ridicule, or disparagement are now sitting up and taking notice.

The change of attitude towards motion pictures shown by the newspapers was not made without reluctance. In the discounting of the pictures as an important factor in the amusement world they fought to the last ditch. Like many of the regular theatrical managers they refused to allow themselves to believe that photoplays had the remotest chance of becoming a serious competitor for favor against the regular attractions. But the time has come. One of the most widely known theater owners and managers in the country said a few days ago: "Just think of it! I have been in the regular field for years with many others who thought they knew all about the theatrical business; look at the number of theaters and companies we control and the amount of money we have spent; and yet these moving picture people come along and show us how to get the money. They have made their way into many of my houses and the results have won my respect for them, as well as my confidence, for I don't mind telling you that no house I control is too good for a good moving picture proposition, and they are becoming quite numerous."

Yes, the pictures have the skeptics on the run. Compare the theatrical advertisements in the newspapers of a year ago with those of the present period and see the strides they have made. Not one of the regular theaters was in the straight picture ranks, while to-day they are so plentiful that managers are asking "What house will go next?" In New York the Bijou continues to do good business at prices ranging from twenty-five cents to a dollar. The Park theater has been leased for the production of first and second run pictures, and the Berkeley theater falls into line this week with travel views. Then we have the Carnegie Lyceum with the Kinemacolor pictures drawing well at prices the same as the Bijou, and the Herald Square packing them with photoplays as the attraction. The importance of the situation is that all these places draw patronage of the higher class and at prices that even the most sanguine managers did not think it was possible to get.

Add to this the success that is attending the production of feature plays. Advance of prices has been necessary on account of the increased cost of production and cost of rentals, which has in some cases caused a falling off in attendance of the poorer class of patrons, but many managers say this has been more than offset by receipts from patrons who are willing to pay for a good thing.

In viewing the situation as a whole, some people are inclined to the belief that motion pictures have attained the highest point of popularity and success and present conditions will soon take reverse form, so that the regulars will regain prestige. Such a belief is a mistaken one. The class of people who have only recently taken an interest in the pictures are now only getting a taste of a good thing. When the appetite is created it will be time enough to begin speculating on how long it will last. It is safe to wager that long before such apprehension will arise there will be more regular theaters booking the pictures than those offering the old line attractions. The people in foreign countries, particularly in France, Germany, Italy and Spain, as well as in Australia and many parts of Great Britain, make advance reservations and form theater parties for the picture theaters with the same regularity and enthusiasm as they did for the former theatrical and operatic attractions, and the people of this country will do the same.

But it is only reasonable to concede that, perhaps sooner than some people expect, there will be a diminishment in the popularity of motion pictures. In doing this, however, a distinction must be made between subjects of travel, explorations, hunts, etc., and the form of pictures known as photoplays. In the former case repetition of productions will eventually lead to a falling off of patronage, as in the case of the best of regular theatrical productions. There is a limit to their drawing power and the reserve stock is not sufficiently plentiful to hold the advantage. The greatest difficulty in this branch of the business is to have ready in time a series of merit and embracing sufficient new scenes to take the place of those losing ground. It is claimed the field is almost inexhaustible, but the ground to be covered, the great difficulties encountered, the period of time consumed and the outlay to be made make it a very serious proposition.

The photoplays have the advantage on all these points and the chances of longevity for more in their favor for the reason that long runs are not essential in any one place. It is quite true that in their preparation there may be great expense in travel and covering the salaries of companies, the procurement of special sets, costumes and features. But several plays may be in the course of preparation at one time and the success and profit of the enterprise is not dependent upon anyone of them. Another advantage is that if it is found that any part of a photoplay does not meet with approval, it can be eliminated and replaced by the skillful studio staff on short notice.

Of course the life of the photoplay depends on the artistic merit, the photographic quality and attention to detail. From this standpoint of view the careful observer is justified in predicting an indefinite tenure of existence. The only real danger that threatens the photoplay is reckless competition. If any reverses come that will be the first and then the public may change. And in speaking of competition only that between producers is referred to. It is the only form of competition that need be feared when considering how long the photoplays will maintain their popularity with the public. If the producers start cutting prices, all conditions being equal at the time as to the merits of the productions, the worm in the apple will begin its work. Two questions will then arise: Must all producers meet the prices? Can the same quality of photoplays be produced at the cut-rate? Some who have already given the subject attention have declared that it will be a case of survival of the fittest; that the well incorporated companies with the required capital and making the best productions will gradually take the field and put the other fellows out of business. Others maintain that the cut-rate fellows will take the cheap class of theaters, leaving the gilt-edge trade to the stand-patters. The subject is an interesting one and volumes could be filled in a discussion of it. But one fact still remains unshaken: The life of the photoplay is not dependent so much upon the public as it is upon the producers.

Referring to the quality of photoplays reminds one of an article that appeared in the last issue of the Sunday World Magazine on the National Board of Censorship. Writing of the loss sustained by manufacturers on the condemnation of subjects by the Board of Censors, the writer says: "A manufacturer has spent $500 on a certain film. Fifty actors, twenty-five horses, a railway train, two automobiles, a steam tug and a half dozen working days have been utilized in its production." This statement goes to show how little some people who essay to write on such subjects know about them. Five hundred dollars! Let us figure for a moment. Fifty actors at but $1 per day each, working six days, $300; 25 horses at $1 per day each for six days, $150; a railway train—O, piffle, what's the use?

Here we are again! The vaudeville theaters are seeking photoplay actors for headliners. John Bunny, the Vitagraph comedian, has been booked as a headliner for Hammerstein's theater the week beginning January 20th. But facetious John has not left the Vitagraph ranks. Mr. Hammerstein announces that the engagement has been made "by special permission of the Vitagraph Company."

A Melies Envelope.

THE Melies company issues a half-tone sheet showing six well printed illustrations of their first round-the-world release, A Ballad of the South Seas. We are sorry to see that they do not add the information that these cuts may be obtained in a coarser screen for local newspaper work at a moderate price. The Melies trip, like that of the Vitagraph and the earlier journeyings of the Kalem company, is a thing that is good for the business as a whole, irrespective of the affiliation of the house with the exchange, but all houses using licensed service should be quick to take advantage of these special releases to boom their affairs. Many managers would be glad to pay for half-tones suitable for newspaper work and all should make use of the poster in the lobby from now until the release is used and even after that.

Where space permits there should be frames provided inside of the house for this sort of stuff. It makes talk on the way out and many will leave the theater determined to keep watch for some special release that particularly strikes their fancy. Meantime that watch will serve to assure their notice of any other special release.

Do not be one of those men who are content to open their house, run the film the exchange sends them, take tickets, and close up the house again. Be a manager; a showman in the true sense of the word.

Down in Jacksonville the Lubin people use the Montgomery theater for a rallying point. On our visit there we came to the theater three or four times a day, but there was not a time that Mr. Montgomery did not coax us into the house. He was proud of it. He wanted others to admire it, and so, no matter how often we turned up in the lobby, we had to go inside and see the house whether the audience was in or not. There was the organ to see, the leader to meet, the decorations to admire or the size of the house, but somehow we were asked to enter because Mr. Montgomery had a showman's true pride in his house.

And that is why he is successful.

Take the hint and boom your house and your business in all legitimate ways. Do not merely be the man who is running a picture show. Be the manager of a photoplay theater.

A Happy Thought.

It's too bad we did not get hold of this before the holidays, but the idea still holds good. During December the New Family Theater, Adrian, Michigan, circularized in favor of a booklet. The card read:

A GIFT
For the little fellow who does your errands, brings your newspapers, sweeps your walk, etc.
A neat little book with twelve trips to the
for fifty cents will afford real enjoyment to the recipient.

It might have been added that it would mean far more than the cost of the gift to any youngster. Fifty cents is a half dollar, but twelve tickets to the pictures is something much more than that. The booklet was a small card simply stating that it represented twelve trips to the New Family. Below were twelve spaces formed of the outlines of 18 point "art tiles." These were to be punched as used. The card was protected by a white kid cover tied with a red ribbon and printed with a holly border in green and red with "A Merry Christmas" on the front.

It was a capital idea well carried out and E. M. Simons writes that it proved very successful. The cost of the card was not great and it solved the problem of gift giving for a number of persons. Paste up the idea and make note on your calendar to look it up about the middle of November or paste this item itself on the calendar.

Ever do that with something you want to remember several months from now? It's a mighty handy reminder.

Another Holiday Suggestion.

D. Filizola, of the Theaterette, Fort Scott, Kansas, took his usual space New Years Day to thank his patrons for their attendance. It is not a gushy or blatant boost for the house, but in the guise of a card of thanks there is much that is effective. Here it is, if you want to make a note of it. It may save you thinking one up next year.

> THEATERETTE
> WISHES YOU A HAPPY NEW YEAR
> It is gratifying to us to find that the effort we have made to give good service to the public, has met with such satisfactory response. We have at all times tried to show no picture but what is clean, uplifting and instructive, making THE THEATERETTE a place of learning as well as amusement for yourself and family to visit.

Sometimes an advertisement like this will mean more than twice the space devoted solely to an announcement of the house offering. The title of the reel only rose 24 points in a six inch three column advertisement, but the card was read appreciatively and the film was the more conspicuous because so casually mentioned.

Another One.

Mr. Rathbone, of the Exeter (N. H.), Opera Housse, overlooked a bet in not signing his New Year greeting. He has a strong personality which he has impressed on his advertising, but in this case his greeting is in the third person and unsigned, as is proper in that case. It should have been first person and with signature.

The greeting takes the form of a folded card, the announcement falling on the last page. The inside pages are given over to announcements of specials to March 25th. Below is this strong argument:

> Remember: the Exeter Opera House is not an endowed institution. Nevertheless it is a public enterprise conducted for the benefit of the community, mantained by your money. Help us to accomplish the full measure, artistically and commercially, all that this implies.

That's the proper spirit in which to run a theater. Be something more than a show. With the opportunities to hand you can make the theater something really valuable to your town or locality—or you can make it a curse to yourself and others. Start in by respecting yourself and you can make others show you similar regard.

Fighting Fair.

Apparently there has been a hint of local censorship in Pierre, S. D. A two-color poster asks:

Are you in favor of having the BLUES

The latter word is in blue with the rest of the poster in red and this single word catches and holds the attention. The poster goes on to allude to the proposed legislation and invites the public to attend the performance on a Sunday evening to see the sort of pictures the ordinance would prohibit. The last line announces that no admission fee will be charged. We hope that Mr. J. E. Hipple will send direct to this department the particulars of the fight for the benefit of others who may be called upon to face similar trouble.

Hustle and Pluck.

The Arcade is making good where scores of others have failed according to various consular officers in that district. It sticks and grows because they make a strong fight against adverse circumstances. The house, as may be seen from the cut of the front, is literally plastered with posters, and two or more handbills may be run out the same day where the program warrants it. In time North China will have its full quota of shows, but meantime the Arcade is doing valuable pioneer work.

No Coupons.

George K. Robinson, of the Orpheum theater, Haverhill, Mass., writes that he is entirely in accord with us in the matter of newspaper advertising and seconds our position in the matter of cigarette coupons. He writes:

> I change my ad daily. I have 42,000 people to draw from with opposition from four other houses, one of which seats 1,600 persons. I can seat but eight hundred. I make my Sunday program one that is in keeping with the day. I enclose my last Sunday's statement, which is about average business.

The statement shows 2,400 persons on the day, not in round numbers, but in detail from seven box seats sold in the afternoon to 922 ten cent seats at the two evening performances. Three houses on four shows is doing well indeed, but the advertising is up to the moment and really big shows are given, running eight reels with practically all of the features.

One of the most telling points made is the fact that the house shows the Carnegie Alaska pictures for ten cents at the same time that the films are on display in Boston for a dollar admission.

Bills, Too.

Handbills are also used and one of these explains the situation quite in the Montgomery way. It runs:

> HA-HA-HA-HA-HA
> When I first came to Haverhill, early in July, many people whom I know would ask, what are you doing here? My answer was, going to manage the Orpheum. What are you going to give them, Stock? No, said I, Pictures. Pictures? Said they. Pictures said I; then they would laugh and say, they won't last long. BUT I gave them what I thought was the Greatest Entertainment in the world that is possible at the price, and hard to equal at any price, OH YOU, HOW they are coming, I mean the Public, and the Pictures Fast and Furious, to the LITTLE ORPHEUM.
> BUT HOW AND WHERE DOES HE GET THEM?
> Listen and I will tell you something. I keep my eyes and ears wide open, right down to the ground all the time, and there is the

ANSWER

The answer is Blanche Walsh, in the Resurrection. The Trap (a two part), and Lucile all in one week at five and ten cents except the Walsh production when the five cent seats were moved up to ten cents for the two days, the subject being in the early days of its release at the time. "All that's good that's going" would seem to be the slogan of Mr. Robinson, for he seems to use practically all the Mutual features.

Printer's ink is costly, but if the size of your house will permit you to get returns, there is nothing like it for winning business.

Wittman's New Feature.

Lou J. Wittman, who runs the Star Theater in Hamilton, Ohio, sends in a late folder with an advertisement for a window sleeping tent in between Monday and Tuesday on the calendar. It is a tent for which he is agent and it strikes us that it is up to him to get some of those Edison fresh air pictures. He could make each work for the other. Owing to the arrangement of the folder the effect is not at all bad and the advertising value decidedly good. He can get about as much on a folder as any man we've met with lately. He gets in a lot of special stuff and one recent line that reads well is "We show what we advertise and advertise what we show." The promise of good faith is no more important than the suggestion of his willingness to tell of what he has. He is a steady and consistent advertiser and he has a good printer.

The Arcade.

Here is another letter from the Arcade theater, Tientsin, China, that gives some interesting lights on the fun of running a picture house far from the beaten track. The Leopard Queen was current before the day of the A. B. C. poster, but we are sure that the Chinese artists were most flattering to the leopards. The cheerful grin on the open countenance of the leopard on the right causes us to yearn for a leopard that will live up to the advertisement for a pet. This is the letter:

We are very much obliged to you for your favourable comments on our work here in your paper of the 16th September. Indeed it is very gratifying to learn that our advertising, except for the Chinese papers occasionally used for the hand bills, is as good as the work done in the States.

We showed your comments to the manager of the Tientsin Press, Ltd. and he is very pleased with it and asked us to convey you his thanks. Advertising here is a very difficult work and the cost is rather prohibitive. The work here costs us about twice as much as it is in the States and there is no help for it. There are a good many Chinese and Japanese printers who will do the same work for a third of the price we pay the foreign horses, but their work will be miserable.

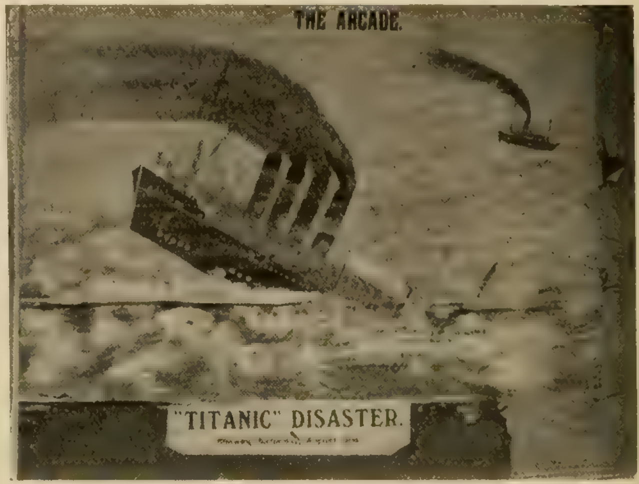
LEOPARD QUEEN SATURDAY 2nd NOVEMBER 1912

As we mentioned in our last, we get our films from the M. P. Sales Co., London, and they send us a good quantity of posters with the films. The big mischief there is the titles on the posters are not the same as those on the films. That is, the posters were not intended for those films. They sent us the Selig animal film "Leopard Queen" and we did fairly good business with it. The posters they sent us for this film gave no idea whatever of the film so we had some fifty posters made by the Chinese locally and put them up in the town. Herewith we beg to enclose a photo of one of these for your opinion. They were all hand painted and cost us a bit of money. We enclose also two photos showing posters covering our theater front.

As a sample of the trouble we take in advertising we enclose a photo of our work for the Titantic disaster film. The film came to us from a firm in Shanghai and we had it for three days only. There were absolutely no posters nor any literature. We were at our beam ends what to do. We got together ten Chinese painters and had half a dozen pictures painted. They were 6' x 8' and we placed them in the big junctions and distributed our handbills widely, stationing some boys with a large quantity of these near the paintings. Resort, first night hundreds went away without being able to get seats, second night full house, third night not a soul practically. They came to see a big steamer actually sinking as shown on the photo and were disappointed. To those who complained we explained the matter as best we could.



THE ARCADE.
"TITANIC" DISASTER.

Talks of the Turtle.

Fred. Wheeler, who explains that he runs the Lyric Theater, Crown Point, Indiana, as a "side issue" to the publication of the Lake County Star, sends in a clever piece of advertising. It is a folder contained in a good quality white envelope without other printing than a three-inch cut of a turtle. The folder itself is an eight pager on two shades of brown card, the first page cut away to show the darker tint of page 3 beneath. A black design on the first page is relieved by a legend

HIBERNATE IN THE WINTER

DON'T BE A TURTLE.

On the third page the name of the theater and the town appear in black within a red box. The turtle cut is repeated on the second page and on the third is this explanation:

> WEBSTER defines Hibernation as follows: "To pass the winter in close quarters—to be in a torpid or lethargic state."
> The TURTLE hibernates. It sees no beauty of the winter months and buries itself until the warm sunshine of the spring appears.
> The approach of winter prompts the management of this Theater to send you this little booklet with a purpose in view. We fear you might be like the torpid turtle, and stay too close to your fire-side these winter nights; hence the mission of this little booklet—just a reminder lest you fall into the winter habits of the TURTLE.
> Let's not "beat around the bush"—the point we are striving to make plain is this—We Need the money—and if you spend the winter nights at home—well what's the answer?
> We are asking for your money, and in return will strive to give you all that is good in pictures. To make it worth your while to visit the LYRIC this winter we will show THREE REELS NIGHTLY of the best that is made.
> SO PLEASE DON'T BE A TURTLE!
> P. S.—We'll Keep You Warm.

On pages four and five appears the program from the date of issue to the middle of January, listing the daily feature. Only two or three lines are given to each release, but sufficient space is used to interest. Mr. Wheeler writes that the phrase was taken up and is heard on the streets, "Don't be a turtle" becoming a local catch phrase.

Mr. Wheeler recites his creed in these few lines: "My opinion of advertising is anything is good that people will talk about. It should have a point and be attractive."

There's the whole thing in a nutshell. It should have a point and be attractive. Attractive does not necessarily mean costly printing, nor elaborate effects. But it does mean that the display should be designed to attract the eye and hold the attention.

IF YOU PLEASE.

Will those who are good enough to send in matter for this department increase our indebtedness by adding in ink the name of their town and state? Each week considerable material must be thrown away because this information does not appear. Sometimes the envelope is parted from the contents, at times the postmark is illegible. Please mark each article that we may know what is what and who's who when the material chances to get separated as now and then must be the case with so heavy a mail as this paper receives. If the advertising is addressed directly to this department it is better still, since it saves extra handling.

Which Shall It Be?

COMES a letter from a mighty nice chap who does not give his playwriting the careful consideration that could be expected of a judicial mind. He says:

> I finished a single reel yesterday, or maybe it will go for a split reel. It struck me that a little stretching would make it a full reel and a little squatting would make it a half.

And so he "stretched" and made it a full reel and when it comes back we hope he starts the "squatting" process and make it into a half. Then the chances are that it will not come back. It's bad enough to have a director stretch seven hundred into a thousand feet without having the writers aid this sinful process. If you have a three hundred foot story do not make it into a five hundred foot story. If it is already five do not stretch it out. A director stretches because it is much easier to make one full subject than two halves. The writer does it because he wants the price of a full reel, but if the writer could only realize that the stretched script stands small chance of sale where the compact, meaty half portion will be snapped up, perhaps he would realize that the half reel price he gets is better than the full reel price he does not get.

We can make any half reel subject into a full reel "just as easy"—perhaps more easy—but we can sell all the decent half reels that we can write because they are in demand. Try it yourself.

Extravagance.

Not long ago we warned a correspondent against getting reckless with the money of the man he wanted to sell scripts to and he came back at us with the statement that we were a crank on economy. We're not, but we are trying to help authors sell scripts and the man who innocently, or otherwise, sends in a script that will cost several hundred dollars above the average and give no greater result in effect is not going to sell scripts.

The case in point was an ice cream saloon. The man's wife catches him treating a couple of girls, so she bangs him over the head with a table and a couple of chairs. It's a funny situation for all concerned, and it would get a laugh, but the same laugh could be obtained if the wife caught him coming out of an ice cream parlor with the girls. The exterior might involve a slight tip to the owner of the place, but the interior would require an elaborate setting that would be used but once for perhaps forty seconds and involve an outlay of a hundred dollars or more. There would be the cost of the set, the outlay in rental for tables and chairs, glasses, spoons and plates and all for something that might have been played out of doors with equal effect and something like two per cent. of the cost.

Film manufacturers are not slow when it comes to spending money for effects. They are more inclined to be extravagant than economical, but even the most reckless spender wants something for his money and does not care to spend several hundred dollars for a shoe store when the exit of the hero from a shop with a box under his arm would do as well. Spend money if you want, but spend it intelligently and give a little thought to the contrast between cost and effect.

What Leader Is.

And after all w 've said someone wants to know what we mean by leader. Leader is what some writers call sub-titles and Charles Gaskill calls interscription. By whatever name, it is the sentence thrown upon the screen to explain something that may not be conveyed to the audience in action. It is written thus:

Leader—Jane thinks Harry is guilty.

Where the leader is used in a scene instead of between scenes, it is called a "cut-in leader" because the film of the scene must be cut to let the leader in. Almost always the cut-in leader takes the form of the speech of one of the characters, in which case it is written in quotation marks.

Mrs. Shipman Is Busy.

Mrs. Nell Shipman announces that she has executed contracts whereby she will visualize the stories of well known authors and contract for the sale of their scripts. Among those whom she announces are George Randolph Chester, Emmerson Hough, Louis Edmund (Joseph?) Vance and Anna Katherine Green. In addition she does contract work on her own account. In representing the fiction author Mrs. Shipman is a little ahead of the times, but not very far.

Your Series.

A western correspondent complains that a certain company has wronged him by accepting a number of his stories of a series and then putting out a story by another author in that series. He raises a nice point of ethics.

It does not appear from his rather voluminous letter that he has arrived at any agreement with the company as to the series. He sent in some stories and they were accepted and produced, each of these tales carrying the same hero under the same name. Another story seemed to work up well in connection with these tales and so was used, or announced for use.

We do not see that the author of the original stories has a well founded ground for complaint. It may, of course, be argued that none but Sir Conan Doyle may write of Sherlock Holmes, that only Montagu Glass may write of Potash and Perlmutter, but the comparison does not hold good. These characters are the creation of the author. He clothes the bones in the flesh and blood of words. He vivifies them. They are creations. On the other hand a photoplay lacks this distinct entity. It is conceivable that a dozen men might write as many stories around the same hero and they would be played by the same hero. If John Jones wrote a Sherlock Holmes story it would not be the Sherlock Holmes of Doyle, but if John Jones and Jim Smith were each to write a Broncho Billy story (and this series is not the one in question), the hero would at all times be G. M. Anderson. He is Broncho Billy irrespective of the author of the script. It is this difference between literature and photoplay that marks the ethics.

If you wish to hold for your own use a character or set of characters in photoplay, have a full and definite understanding with the company accepting the first scripts that you and no one else shall write for that series or we think that you will find yourself without moral or legal support. Photoplay is a distinct form of literary endeavor bound by none of the special rules applying to fictional writing and there are but two ways of protecting a series idea. The first of these is by agreement with the producing company. The second is to copyright (by publication as a book), a sufficient number of scripts to make definite in common law your intention to use the character for a series. Then you have redress in common law since the infringing script would not lie under the copyright law.

Detective Plays.

If you want to get into a fertile field in which there is small competition, try the detective story, but remember that it is not easy to turn out a good story with sustained interest and suspense for the reason that in photoplay the events must happen in chronological order. If the story deals with a murder you cannot well show the murder without showing the murderer.

In a detective story of fiction you would have the murder and then the famous sleuth. He would thrash around for a time and then, calling the other leading characters before him he would explain that he found a trace of cigar ash in the left side of the murdered man's moustache. Knowing that the victim only smoked the sort of cigarettes that gets you into the photoplay theaters, he surmised that the dead man was killed by a man who smoked cigars and who murdered the unfortunate to obtain the coupons that went with the cigarettes. By eliminating two suspects who smoked cigars, but who did not care for pictures he arrived at the conclusion that John Jones did the bloody deed. John promptly confesses and the story ends with the detective in the spot light. All along everyone was sure that Bill Smith was the guilty man because Bill owed the deceased seven dollars for which he has been repeatedly dunned. The fact that Bill did not smoke, but only chewed tobacco is his alibi.

Now all this is but the exposition of a series of mental processes of elimination. There would be no surprise in picture because we would have to show Jones striking the man down and robbing him of his coupons. Then the Hawkshaw would walk in and examine the body. There would be a bust picture, seen through a magnifying glass, showing the cigar ash and a cut-in leader that reads: "This deed was done by a man who smokes cigars." The elimination would follow. Bill Smith would be seen to expectorate profusely, Sam Brown would be noticed passing a photoplay theater without a trace of interest, Joe Green would be invited to a show and refuse and there would be left only the guilty Jones to be detected.

All this would give little or no interest. The suspense must come through the adventures of the detective in making his discoveries and not in the discovery of the crime itself through the deductive method now so popular. These adventures must fall within the limits approved by the censorships through the country, the shooting of pistols and the use of the knife being avoided. It's a nice problem, but if you can solve it with the same ease that your detective masters his mysteries, you will be in line for advancement.

Sound Sense.

Here is some good sound sense, and it is written by a woman, at that. Anent criticism she says:

> I have carried the attitude all along that there was a good and sufficient reason for my scripts coming back. I felt that when I got the right idea and how to make the most of it I would sell. I cannot understand the position so many take, if I may judge by what I read in the photoplaywright department, of hitting the very ones who are trying to help by showing them where they are wrong. I had an old drawing master, as a child, who taught me that he was not finding fault, as he had none to find, but that he was trying to discover and develop the good that might be in me, and I have made it a point to humble myself under those who are trying to teach me.

That's a clean cut point of view. When an editor takes the trouble to write you that your story lacks force or novelty, do not assure yourself that you know more than that editor ever did or will. Do not get the idea that he is trying to show his superiority. He isn't. He doesn't want to find fault in your script. He would much rather find that you had written just what he wanted, but because you are not up to standard and yet show some promise he takes the trouble to point out your faults that you may correct them. Most editors are very decent this way, far more decent than the author has any right to expect. You don't hurt his feelings by "sassing him back," but you do hurt your chances of ultimate success when you turn a deaf ear to sincere criticism and hear only the words of praise. The man who rises superior to criticism has become lost to better things. There never was a man who could not be helped even by the humblest of his fellows. Be thankful for hints and rise.

Climax and Commencement.

Here is a bit from a letter that came in the other day. An author writes:

> Another fault, I think, is that I have given so much time to the climax of my stories that I have lagged on the superstructure.

Perhaps it would be more clear to say that in the effort to get a strong climax the author in question has overlooked the essentials of the earlier scenes.

To the trained writer a start or climax suggests the entire story. Given a starting point and an ending, that which comes in between almost automatically writes itself. The incidents fall into line with little or no effort, the story may be said almost to write itself.

But the beginner lacks this training. He is not used to the tools of the trade. In building up the steeple of the church he forgets to hammer home the nails in the supporting timber. He builds a lavish steeple, but he gives it no foundation and soon it must topple over.

There are two ways of writing a story. One is to get a climax and with that as a starter back up to the beginning. The other is to select a good starting point and work toward the climax that suggests itself.

This is not half as difficult as it sounds, given the proper starting point, for the proper arrangement of characters at the commencement of a story must inevitably lead to a conclusion of value if the progression of incident is proper and well founded.

Let us suppose that we have as the start of our story a man and woman, married but not wholly mated. The woman is not happy. Into her life comes a hero of her childhood to tempt her from the narrow way. Isn't that far more promising than a climax in which a woman is persuaded from elopement through the agency of her little child. The climax is rigid and inflexible, it allows no choice. It is the fore-ordained end of the story, the point to which the energies of the author must be directed. That is the story that he must write unless long training permits him to go back to the commencement and there start on another tack. On the other hand the proper commencement will suggest from two to a dozen climaxes. One of these may be selected as the objective point or the story may be permitted to start with the commencement and work along, until by sheer force of progress a climax is reached that is natural and logical because it follows a logical development.

The climax is not the whole of the story. It is just the ending, and unless the preliminary action leads naturally and consistently to that climax the climax itself is without value. When the climax comes to you first; when this is the first thought of the story, do not at once elaborate that climax and fix it firmly and rigidly in your imagination so that subsequent change is impossible and you must force your incident to conform to those lines no matter what their suitability. Having sensed the climax first, drop that and go back to the action that leads to that climax. If in this process you find that the action leads more naturally to another climax, drop that first conceived and adopt the new, accepting this rule that the properly developed story will supply its own proper climax. If the climax reached is not sufficiently strong, do not start in to build up the climax. Build up the action leading to that climax and you may find another ending stronger and better because more logical.

In the case in point the author had in mind one strong situation. It was a good situation; novel and reasonably effective, but to reach this situation he distorted all the preceding events. Everything was made subordinate to this "big" scene with the result that when the crowning moment of the play came it was not effective because all that had gone before was illy planned. The scene by itself was strong and interesting, but arriving as it did at the cost of probability, it did not interest because of the unreality of what had preceded it.

Don't be bossed by your climax. Don't worry about your climax. Get up a good story. Start it right, develop it consistently and when you are ready for it you will find your climax close to hand.

Jones Has Joined.

Marc Edmund Jones, of Chicago, has joined the ranks of the regulars. He has reached the point where his playwriting interferes with his business and he has given up his business since the writing is more profitable. He sends in a few tips that may interest others, comment suggested largely by matter recently appearing in this department. He has the floor:

> Keeping up the string: I have sixteen out today. I write two a week, and approximately one of these is taken on first submission. The other I circulate indefinitely, provided it is held for consideration by the concerns who reject it. What I mean is this: I am trying to sell Edison. I never get a scenario back in less than 18 days, but only the poor ones come back in that time. If a scenario at all approximates the character of Edison releases, and then comes back in 18 days, there is no use sending it further.
> Names: I endorse all you say on this, as its a hobby of mine. I have spent all of an hour naming a cast of four or five, and seldom spend over six hours producing the complete scenario.
> Short cuts: Except where I write a preliminary copy to send to a correspondent for criticism, I write everything "cold." First I name my principal characters. Then I take a sheet of paper with numbers 1 to 30 down the left hand side. Opposite one I put down the set of the first scene, and in about five words tell enough of the action to give me the idea. Then on to 2, etc. If I make changes I use another piece of paper, and jot it down again. Then I put my paper and carbon in the machine, start at the action, put down scene 1, and write the action as tersely as possible. Then 2, etc. Since I have been doing this I find that I have not yet left out anything, as I am practically developing the idea as I go along and just as it will be developed on the screen. I enclose the slip from which I wrote a detective type of story yesterday. It was in 18 scenes, but by the time I had it outlined down to 16 the idea was so clear in my mind that I didn't bother to jot down the rest. I distinguish the leaders by printing them in my hand, but perhaps that would not be so easy for another as I print as fast as I write and it has the advantage of being readable. Then: when I have typed the action—single spacing (benefit Steve Talbot), using two to two and a half pages—I take another sheet of paper for the synopsis sheet; put it in the machine with carbon; head with title, price, etc.; and then put down the characters. The scene plot I can drawn off that slip much easier than it would be to keep track of them on separate cards as I go along. Then, for the synopsis, I tell the story as it is written; briefly, and holding the suspense, and seldom find that I have used over two or three hundred words. Under the scene plot I give the number of leaders; the number of words in them; the number of items on screen; the words; and finally, the total number of words.
> Cost of production: You might be interested in my December figures. Expense: Postage, $1.95; Shows, $2.70; Periodicals, $1.85; Typewriter, $4.00; Miscellaneous, $1.45; Total, $11.95.
> Miscellaneous is extra carfare and supper, etc., occasioned by the meeting of the little photoplaywright group, and when I go out of my way to see certain pictures. There is no item of paper, etc., as I stocked up about six weeks ago. I never receive a bill for the stationery as the printer made an awful mistake; printing the return envelopes with huge type and in brilliant red, and I finally decided it might be good advertising and am using them. My carbon is cheaper than yours, I guess. I paid $1.65 for the box, but got it at a sale. My typewriter rent includes ribbons. I only have to shout.

The slip Mr. Jones encloses is about the size of a third of a sheet of typewriting paper and the notation of the scenes runs from three to seventeen words each, a scene used before being tabbed on the second, using to show that it is the same as one or three or whatever it is.

Our own short cut suggested a notation of characters and scenes as we went along because we do no preliminary work on paper and it is easier to make notes as we go along than to tab up, but please note that Mr. Jones, like most all other experienced writers, does his action first and then the synopsis. He does it "cold" as he expresses it, working from his first draft, but he gets the action down, telling the story where it should be told. And you'll notice that when he came to the finish it came with such a rush that he did not need to note the last scenes.

When your story finishes itself it's apt to be a pretty good story. The plot that gives trouble is the plot that isn't right in the first place and that fights you from scene to scene like a trout on the end of a line.

Richard Willis.

This is a picture of Richard Willis, photoplaywright, publicity man and sometime editor around the Los Angeles plant of the Universal Company. Mr. Willis writes: "All I can say for myself is that I was a society entertainer in England, Australia and here. I was successful in this. I do the publicity work here and write dramas and comedies."

Mr. Willis might add that he does a great deal of writing and bats very considerably above .300. He also acts in some of the plays now and then and as photoplay editor first for Nestor and then the Universal has made a host of friends through his courteous treatment of his correspondents. He is too modest by far when it comes to speaking up for himself for he is what Broadway calls "a regular feller."

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON

It Is to Laugh.

FROM a certain city in a certain state comes a letter from a man who seems to expect appointment on the Board of Examiners, under a license law now being framed. He writes asking me to send him certain information by mail, part of which seems to be the information concerning the Chicago examination. He is very particular that I do not answer through this department, and naively says:

> I never ask any question through it and have not noticed it any too close. * * * * * I will appreciate anything you may enlighten me on as to the inspection of operators. I am simply to be the picture machine inspector along with the other inspectors for picture shows in this city, but I do not want you to answer through your valuable paper. I am at the best place in town, and getting the money; "nuff said."

Now, wouldn't these statements cause you to smile? Here is a man expecting to be appointed to a city position on the Board of Operator Examiners, who carefully sets forth the fact that he doesn't "pay any too close attention" to the Projection Department. In other words, doesn't seek to learn. He also makes the statement that he is getting the money and that is "nuff said." For his benefit let me say that is, by no manner of means, enough said. If he had said he was getting the money and putting up the best projection in town, he could have added "nuff said"—not otherwise. I am afraid this gentleman is not going to make any howling success in the "inspection" of operators, nor do I believe that the safety, or the excellence of projection will be raised to any appreciable extent by his efforts on the Board of Examiners.

CONSTRUCTION OF OPERATING ROOM:

The two following forms of construction will be considered as fulfilling the requirements for the construction of operating rooms.

2. STEEL FRAME OPERATING ROOM:

See Figures 1, 2 and 3 for cross-section, side elevation and roof plan of operating room designed for one moving picture machine.

a. Frame shall be made as follows:

Four outside horizontal members at top and botton, to be 1x1x⅛-inch steel angle bars.

Four corner uprights to be 1x1x⅛-inch steel angle bars.

Intermediate uprights and roof supports to be of 1x1x⅛-inch steel angle bars or 1x1x1-inch steel tee bars, spaced not more than four feet apart.

b. Sheathing to be sheet iron not less than No. 22 B. & S. gauge in thickness or approved hard asbestos board at least ¼ inch in thickness. All vertical joints between sheets must come over an angle or tee bar, so that both sheets may be securely fastened to same. Horizontal joints in the sheet iron may be fastened with a riveted lap joint, allowing a lap of one inch. Horizontal joints in asbestos board shall be covered by a strip of the same material, 3 inches wide, securely fastened to both boards by ¼-inch bolts and nuts spaced not more than 6 inches apart.

Iron sheathing or asbestos board must be fastened to frame by ¼-inch bolts and nuts or ¼-inch rivets spaced not more than 4 inches apart.

c. Floor of sheet iron operating room must be made of No. 22 B. & S. gauge sheet iron riveted or bolted to steel frame. Floor may be covered with a rubber or cork matting or asbestos board. Floor of asbestos board operating room must be made as above or of asbestos board not less than ¼-inch in thickness fastened to steel frame.

The floor upon which the operating room stands should be made of boards with tongue and groove joints and not less than ⅞ inch in thickness.

d. Door opening shall be 2 x 6 feet 2 inches in size and shall have frame of 1 x 1 x ⅛-inch angle bar. The door shall have a frame of practically the same size as opening, allowing only sufficient space for clearance when door is opened and closed. (A trap door in floor of operating room does not meet requirements.

Covering for door shall be made of same material as rest of operating room. Door shall be arranged to close automatically either by means of a heavy spiral spring or by a metal chain and weight attachment on inside of operating room..

e. A clear space of at least 3 inches must be maintained between sides and top of operating room and any woodwork.

3. WOOD OPERATING ROOM, METAL LINED:

a. Sheathing walls and ceiling to be of well-seasoned tongue and groove wood at least ¾ inch thick, all joints as closely fitted as possible. Inside of room should present flat surfaces, all studding, braces, etc., to be on outside.

b. Lining to be of either No. 28 B. & S. gauge galvanized sheet iron or tin of equal thickness, so applied that during exposure to fire it will present the greatest possible resistance to bulging or opening up at the seams. Care should be taken to have sheets as flat against wood as possible in order to avoid air spaces.

c. Joints to be locked ½ inch and nailed under seams as illustrated in Figure 4. Nails to be not more than 4 inches apart. Care should be taken to provide the full ½-inch lock and to place the nails in the center of the joint so that they will not be easily torn out through the edges of the plates by strains due to bulging when exposed to fire. No solder to be used in joints.

d. Floor to be made and covered in the same manner and with the same material as the rest of the enclosure.

e. Door to be 2 x 6 feet 2 inches, and inside lined in same manner and with same material as the rest of the enclosure. The lining must extend around edges of and be fastened to outside of door. Door shall be arranged to close automatically either by means of a heavy spiral spring or by a metal chain and weight attachment on inside of room. A stop at least ½-inch in width shall be provided on all four sides for door to close against.

It will be observed that the leading clause in the section dealing with operating rooms says that "the two following forms of construction will be considered as fulfilling the requirements for the construction of operating rooms." This might be, and I presume, strictly speaking, would be construed to mean that these are the only two forms of construction that would be approved. If so, the thing is utterly ridiculous on the face of it, since a light steel frame covered with asbestos could not be favorably compared with brick, concrete, hollow tile, or gypsum blocks for fire proofing purposes, while a light steel frame covered merely with No. 22 iron could have all kinds of objections placed against it, a few of which might be enumerated as follows: (a) exceedingly noisy, acting as a sounding board to throw out every bit of noise inside the operating room. (b) insufferably hot in summer. (c) Would warp and buckle in case of fire. Clause C is absurd. If it is meant that a wooden floor is to be built, with recesses to contain the steel members, to which the iron sheeting must be riveted, then might I ask the California authorities what protection that would be. Raw iron, which might get red hot, against wood, and tight against it too. If, on the other hand, the steel members are to be on the upper side of the steel floor, and the steel floor itself laid flat on the wood, that is just as bad one way and much worse another. It will be observed that the floor "may" be covered with rubber, cork matting or asbestos board—not must, but may. At that, neither rubber, or cork matting is fireproof. Clause E says that a clear space of at least three inches must be maintained between the iron and wood work at sides and top. Red hot iron will set wood on fire if placed within three inches of it, and it will not be long doing it, particularly if it happens to be pitch pine.

Wood operating rooms lined with metal are bad. They are out-of-date. But if allowed at all, then the iron should be backed with asbestos, regardless of whether the wood is flat up against the metal or not. I wish to be clearly understood in this. I do not say that red hot iron would set wood work in a blaze if the iron laid flat on the wood, but it would promptly create smoke, and once let the audience catch the sight of smoke, and you might as well let the whole house burn down. They would promptly stampede and—there you are. In this connection, I would respectfully refer the California authorities to our new handbook, pages 68 to 81, inclusive.

What Does He Mean?

Salem, Ore., contributes the following puzzle:

> Our throw is 85 feet (it was 94); use a 5¼ e. f. B. & L. lens; an 8½ and 7½ condenser, with the former next the arc; use 30 amperes through a G. E. Mercury Arc Rectifier, the feed being 110 volt, 60 cycle. Have about a 13 foot picture. Use ⅝-inch Bios, both top and bottom. The arc is perfectly steady and plenty of light. Intermittent sprocket is O. K. and I keep it very clean. No travel ghost and tension seems to be tight enough. Machine is Power's 6A and has only been in use six weeks. The trouble is the picture flickers. Could it possibly be in the lens? The picture was perfect until the screen was moved up nine feet. This seems to be a trifling question to ask, but in all of my four years at operating I have never seen the same trouble. Will write you later concerning our theater.

The brother's data is very complete indeed, until he comes down to the crucial point, then he simply says the picture flickers, without describing the effect. Now, I cannot see why the moving of the screen up or down would have any tendency to produce a flicker. The only thing that occurs to me is that when the screen was moved up it was also changed from a cloth screen, or something similar, to a semi-reflecting type of screen, such as aluminum coated, or other patent curtain. Power's Six A three wing shutter gives practically no flicker whatever when the machine is run at normal speed, therefore we may leave the shutter out of the question, unless you are using a two wing shutter, in which case you should procure a three wing at once. You should use half-inch solid projection carbons below and ⅝ cored above. You will get better results that way.

Water-Cooled Condensers.

Mr. Harry Heiss, Chicago, contributes a somewhat lengthy description of a water cooled condenser, or rather a water cell used in microscopic projection work, but which he himself says is not practical for moving picture work. He accompanies this by a sketch which, while readily understandable, is not in form for publication. It would be quite a job to redraw it, therefore, while we thank Brother Heiss for his trouble in the matter, we will not go into the matter as it has no bearing on practical moving picture projection.

Ventilation.

Mr. P. L. Harrington, East Vaughn, New Mex., orders a handbook and says:

> Would appreciate articles in the department concerning the methods used in cooling theaters in hot climates. Have been watching for a long time for something of this kind; also am interested in a one piece curtain of cloth, like the Mirroroid, except no seams.

The matter of ventilation was treated in the department two weeks ago. We shall be glad to hear from the southern brothers, concerning this important matter. Anyone who has accomplished good results in hot-country theater ventilation, or cooling, is invited to describe his system closely in detail.

Another Idea.

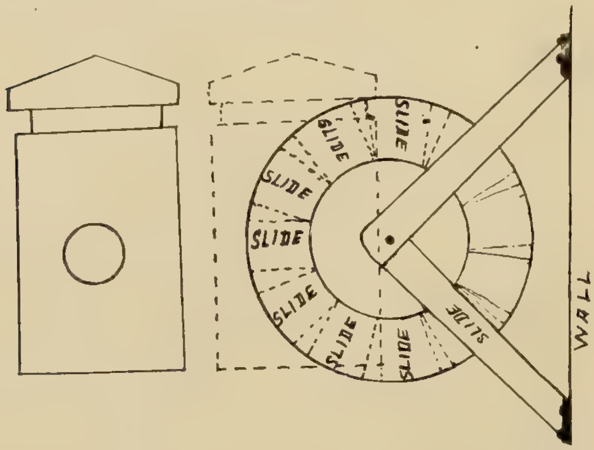
Mr. George A. Coleman, writes from Maxwell, Calif., as follows:

> Am still on the road with my vaudeville and moving picture show. As a feature I am using the Italia film called "The Fall of Troy." Am still using my shunt wound d. c. generator, driven by my auto engine, description of which appeared in the department last year. It is still giving satisfaction and all the expense has been for brush renewals. In running stereopticon slides I use a large circular of galvanized iron wheel, on the same principal as a spot light color wheel. It is mounted as per sketch. The wheel is made to carry ten slides.



> The offside of the cone support is cut away to allow the wheel to come in front of the cendenser when the lamphouse is shoved over. After doing this the side next the operator must be re-enforced; but that is a simple matter. In the exact center of the wheel I soldered a piece of brass tubing for the wheel to revolve upon. All you have to do is shove the slides into their receptacles around the edge of the wheel, and then tie a piece of string around, or else use an elastic. This will sink into the soft asbestos between the two metal sides of the wheel, and will hold the slides tightly in place. I filed a triangular slot in the edge of the wheel exactly between each opening and fixed a piece of stiff spring so that when the slide comes in the right position in the cone, the spring engages same and the wheel is thus held steady. In this way slides are always ready for business. It is not necessary to handle them and get them dirty; also in the case of advertising slides they are always in the regular place on the program.

This scheme seems to be practical, and I can see places where it could be used to very distinct advantage. As near as I can make it out, Brother Coleman cuts out two metal wheels with slide openings complete as shown. He then places soft asbestos about ⅛-inch thick on one of the wheels, cuts an opening in this asbestos to receive the slides, after which the two wheels are clamped together. Glad to hear of your continued success, Neighbor Coleman, and trust you will enjoy prosperity during the coming year. Let us hear from you occasionally when the spirit moves.

Engine Sparker.

Mission, Tex., propounds the following:

> We have a 125 volt generator, run by a 6 h.p. Atlas engine, which not having magneto, uses a great many batteries. What I would like to know is; is there any way one could, after starting the engine on the batteries, rig it up so that one could throw over on the dynamo current for sparking purposes?

This can be done all right, and is quite simple, though the details would depend upon whether you had a jump spark coil, or make and break ignition. Any competent electrician can rig the thing up for you, or you can write to the Atlas Engine Co. for instructions.

Lens Trouble.

Lena, Ill., contributes the following bundle of trouble, which I am not able to understand in full. He writes:

> I have trouble somewhat similar to that of Conway, Ark. Use ⅝ electra cored carbons, set as advocated for a.c. and d.c. in the handbook. The image of a crater shows up on the shutter, round and nice, but doesn't stay that way long—only a few seconds. It either shows up with a black center, or with rings running through it, and the arc becomes noisy at the same time. I think the amperage is a little more than 60; it may be close to 70. Am using a Bell and Howell, 110 volt compensarc, but I believe the voltage occasionaly goes up to 120. Have the Power's 6A equipment, and No. 6 lamp leads are warmed up some. Lamp lead terminals are renewed as soon as oxide shows up on them and the carbon clamps are kept clean. One 6½ and one 7½ condenser with a 5½ objective, which I know is wrong. The field seems to be a little creamy colored around the outside. Have only had about three years experience operating, and of course, do not know very much yet. What is the correct distance between the condenser and aperture? I had to take the lens ring off the front of the mount and place it off the rear end of same, in order to focus the picture correctly. It being a new lens, I cannot understand why this should be. My manager has been in a good many theaters, but says he has seen no better pictures than our own; still I know there is much room for improvement. We have a radium gold fibre screen, and it changed color shortly after being installed. That is why I am using so much current on a 13-foot picture. How ought intermittent movement of Power's Six be adjusted? Is it possible to obtain snow white light and absolute steadiness on the screen and to have the light evenly distributed all over the field?

Instruction No. 39, page 281, of the new handbook will show you how to adjust the Power's No. Six intermittent movement. It is not possible to obtain a rock steady picture with all films, but if your projector is what it should be, and it is properly adjusted, you should not be able to see a particle of movement in a new foreign made Pathe film in a run of anywhere from 50 to 300 feet, but to secure such results, the machine must be perfect and there are mighty few machines, of any make, which can be called perfect, nor will there ever be until the price of machines is raised to between three and four hundred dollars, which will give manufacturers a chance to do really fine work. Projection mechanisms are too cheap in price to expect mechanical perfection. As to the lens matter, you will have to explain more clearly. I really do not know what you mean. If you are running as high as 70 amperes, a.c., you should have ¾ cored carbons instead of ⅝. Very likely it is the fact that your carbons are working above capacity which causes the light trouble. There is no set distance between the condenser and aperture. It depends on the condensers you are using. Set your lamphouse at the point where the best result is obtained on the screen. Change those condensers to two 7½. I see you have been operating for three years and do not claim to know much. This is indeed surprising, in view of the fact that we have a very large number of men who have been operating less than three months, who are so wise that Thomas A. Edison himself could tell very few of them anything not already stowed away in their very wonderful minds. Many of them would cheerfully undertake the contract of giving Jehovah himself a few pointers. Their only trouble is they can't or don't project a decent picture. Of course, they know how, dear me, yes, but———???.

Some Good Hard Truth.

Fort Myers, Florida, contributes the following, concerning which the Editor feels constrained to make certain remarks. Fort Myers writes:

> Have been obtaining the World from a local newsdealer for some time, and take great interest in its contents. (Why not subscribe? Ed.) As I am my own manager and operator, naturally I read your department. I may say that I was forced to become an operator in order to save my business. Now, while such a one may be in existence, I have never yet, even at an advanced salary, been able to secure an operator who would take any interest in the welfare of the business more than to grind out a picture in the same old cut-and-dried fashion, and, in my opinion, as long as they depend on unions and poor projection to get advanced salaries, many managers will be compelled to do as I have done. Now, do not call me a knocker, please, for I am always willing to pay for what I get, but when I do pay for it I do not want it handed out to me with dictated hours and dictated salaries, unless I may in turn dictate the class of work I am to receive. "The laborer is worthy of his hire" but also, the manager has the right to expect something in return for his money, and the more money he pays the more he has a right to expect. The sooner the operator and manager learn that their interests are mutual, the sooner we will be able to have perfect projection, and a perfectly satisfactory scale of operators' salaries. I shall secure one of your new handbooks as soon as they are for sale.

To all and sundry of which the editor of this department most emphatically agrees. I have time and again pointed out the fact that one of the prime duties of operators' unions is to improve the work of their own members. I myself have often sat in a theater in which I knew a union operator was employed at the union scale, and saw all kinds of faults in the projection which could not possibly be due to anything but the most crass, rank stupidity, or carelessness on the part of the operator which, piled on top of the faults due to his ignorance, made a performance which was anything but a credit to the union slide which preceded it. I am a member of the operators' union myself, and organized labor has no better friend in all these United States than myself, but my idea of friendship is not to condone and defend the faults all too plainly perceivable. The true friend will point out the fault and insist that it be remedied. I most emphatically insist, together with Fort Myers, that with the union dictating the hours of labor and the remuneration therefor, the manager is most decidedly entitled to dictate the class of service to be rendered, and that increased salaries should and must call for improved efficiency in the operating roon.

Keystone Effect.

St. Louis, Mo., contributes the following:

> Although I have been operating for some time, I have never been in a place where the picture was projected from an upper balcony, from which a keystone effect is produced. I have been told that in a case of this kind I should use what is called a keystone mask, the same being a piece of tin, cut narrower at the top than at the bottom, and placed in the slide carrier. Is this correct or is it not?

It is not. The only way to remedy keystone effect is to fill in the sides of the aperture plate with solder and file this out on either side so that it slants from bottom to top at such an angle that it brings the sides of the picture perpendicular on the screen. This is best done by filing the solder when the plate is in place and the light on, putting a piece of mica over the end of the hood to subdue the light. A mask in the slide carrier would have no effect at all.

Criminal Ignorance.

Mr. Edward Holland, a traveling exhibitor, writes from Denver, Colo., as follows:

> Being a traveling exhibitor, I have to take the very best possible care of my films. On arrival in Denver I gave them to an operator to clean. He used a preparation containing camphor, with the result that they are now as brittle as mica, and will hardly go through a machine at all; also the picture dances all over the screen, whereas before it was absolutely steady. Will you kindly inform me on three points, viz.: (a) How can I get the films back to normal condition? (b) With what preparation may films be cleaned with absolute safety? (c) What is the best method of keeping films in good condition while on the road? This same operator gave me the following formula with which to soak blotters to be kept in the film box: Wood alcohol, glycerine, ammonia, water and ether. I made up the solution (omitting the ammonia), guessing at the proportions, and kept a blotter soaked with it on either side of my films, with very good results. Have been told, however, it is dangerous, owing to the fact that the alcohol will evaporate very rapidly on removal of films from the box. For a moistening solution, what do you think equal to glycerine and water?

Replying to your last query first—nothing. Those mixtures of half a dozen things are the product of an over-heated brain. They are the children of Mr. and Mrs. Knownothing. It is absolutely criminal for a man to take your films, posing as the possessor of knowledge he does not possess, and mistreat them thus. On the other hand, it was very foolish on your part to accept the word of an operator for what he knew on such a subject and entrust your valuable films to him without absolutely knowing that he possessed the skill he claimed. Your films may be brought back as follows: Either make a large drum, long enough to wind an entire film on, emulsion side out, with a shallow trough under it, or else make a long, deep tank, 3 inches wide, and a frame to hang therein, on which may be wound the film. Next make a mixture of three-fourths water and one-fourth glycerine, and if the tank is used, immerse the film therein for several hours (over night, say), afterwards removing and winding on a drum, emulsion side out, which should be kept revolving until the film is dry. If the drum and trough is used, not so much of the solution is required, but, on the other hand, the drum must be kept constantly revolving slowly for several hours, while film passes through the solution, all of which involves considerable labor. After the film is dry, dampen cotton with benzine and wash the surplus glycerine off the film, both front and back sides. The best method of cleaning film is to use the above solution and, with a cloth wet with it, wash the film thoroughly. The same solution is best for use on blotters. Water and glycerine is the thing for films, and it is also the only thing. This is not only my own opinion, but the opinion of some of the largest film manufacturers.

Screens.

Elbow Lake, Minn., writes as follows:

> The screen we use now is not constructed right. I will have to get a new one, but cannot afford to purchase an expensive patent curtain, my house being used for pictures only once or twice a month. Can you suggest how to go at it to make a good serviceable home-made screen?

For exhaustive treatises on the screen I would refer you to pages 336-343, inclusive, of the new handbook. If you have not yet procured a handbook I would by all means advise you to send $2.50 to The Moving Picture World at once and get one, as I propose, to refer to this book a great deal in answering questions which have already been treated many times in the department. This is not from any desire to force the sale of the book, but to save valuable space that would be consumed in replying to questions over and over again. You can make a good screen by: (a) Make a plaster surface in the usual manner, and coating it with murulite or alabastine, which can be secured from any dealer in paint supplies; or you can stretch cotton sheeting on a frame tightly and coat it with the same material. Murulite and alabastine are patent kalsomines.

The Operator.

Brooklyn, N. Y., contributes the following:

> Concerning your reply to Mr. F. P. Bryon, High Point, N. C., I have been in the operating game long enough to know that neither manager nor owner holds the operator in high esteem, but I have the matter doped out like this: While a good house may have a piano player or singer, still they could do without these artists, but no house could get along without an operator, and if the operator is a bum one, then the show is on the fritz also, no matter how excellent the singers and musicians may be. Now, considering these facts, how is it that piano players and singers often get much more money than the operator, upon whose skill depends the excellence of the performance, in a larger degree than upon the skill of either singer or piano player? This thing has been gradually cornering my goat.

There are comparatively very few people who understand to what an extent a man's own valuation of himself sets the valuation placed upon him by others. If the operator, as a class, respected himself a little more and set a little higher ideal for his own work, perhaps the manager might also in due time accept, in part at least, that valuation as his own. The singer and the piano player will make no bones of telling you that they are artists, and that their work comes within the line of artistic endeavor, therefore it is to be considered high class and paid for accordingly. Now (this may sound ridiculous, but it is nevertheless a fact), that dope has, to some extent, an effect on the mind of the manager and owner, though I am free to say that the average piano player in a moving picture theater is about as much entitled to the appellation "artist" as an Eskimo belle is to the title of professional beauty. If the operator wants to be respected and to have others respect his profession, he must first begin by respecting himself and his calling. Perhaps I have not made my idea very clear, but I guess you can grasp it.

Lots To Learn.

Winnipeg, Can., asks the following questions?

> Have lately purchased a second-hand Edison machine. On setting same up, find that the stereopticon will not register on the screen with the moving picture. I only had about 20-foot throw upon which to try it. Will it be O. K. on a longer throw? Could you give me the average throw of an Edison Exhibition Model; also what are the necessary qualifications to obtain an operator's license?

You can readily change the position of the stereopticon light upon the screen by adjusting the lens up, down or sidewise. There is no "average throw" for an Edison Exhibition Model machine. You can project a picture anywhere from 40 to 200 feet with any machine, by having the right focal length lens. There would not be any use for your trying for an operator's license, since the questions you have asked indicate a total lack of knowledge of projection. I would advise you to send $2.50 for a copy of the handbook and to serve an apprenticeship under a competent operator before applying for license.

Oildag Again.

Mr. Ray Palmer, Washington, Ind., contributes the following:

> As a one-time operator, now owner of a profitable picture house, I wish to extend to you my heartiest thanks for the many helpful hints contained in your department of The World. Here are a few comments on questions appearing at various dates: Oildag, mentioned No. 11 of Vol. 14, is the copyrighted name of a brand of oil containing a quantity of very finely pulverized graphite. This oil is primarily designed for automobile engines. Some time ago a brother mentioned "hardoil," without mentioning the fact that hardoil is but another name for cup grease such as is commonly used in compression cups of autos and other machines using grease as a lubricant. Answering F. F. Greene's inquiry, page 1295, December 28th issue, the transparent enamel he asks about is possibly lamp coloring, applied either with a soft brush or poured on. This coloring is a collodion mixture, with color added. It is for use in coloring incandescent globes, and may be had of any dealer in electrical supplies. There are several different colors. For making tinters for use in certain scenes of films, or for spotlight purposes, I find this better than colored gelatine. It can be readily applied to a clean piece of glass, and stands the heat of the arc better than gelatine; also it is not nearly so expensive. As to oil for use on mechanisms, I think I have tried more kinds than Heinz has varieties. Have finally decided that, for an all-around lubricant suitable for the finest bearings and high speed contacts, the oils used for cream separators fill the bill best. These machines run—or, at least, some parts of them do—at enormously high speed, and an oil which gums, or lacks in lubricating quality, absolutely cannot be used at all. My own experience is that it is entirely satisfactory on motion picture mechanisms. It is reasonable in price, being about 80 cents per gallon. For gears I prefer stick graphite commonly sold for use on bicycle chains. It is composed largely of tallow, with a little graphite added. The tallow has excellent adhesive qualities, hence "stays put." If this lengthy letter gets past the waste basket I may come again, as I am as full of ideas as a dog is (sometimes, at least) of fleas. These ideas have accumulated through years of practical experience.

No danger of letters of this kind reaching the waste basket, Neighbor Palmer. It strikes me that your idea as to a suitable oil is perfectly "water-tight." Most certainly a lubricant which can be successfully used on machines running from 10,000 to 20,000 per minute must possess high class lubricating qualities. Therefore, without further comment or any test whatever, I can heartily indorse that kind of an oil. Stick graphite is an excellent gear lubricant. The only objection to it is its color (black), which makes it dirty to use around a machine. Please accept our thanks, friend Palmer, for the valuable information contained in your letter. Call again.

Interesting Letter.

Mr. H. S. Klink, Canton, Ohio, who is evidently an experimenter along intelligent lines, writes as follows:

> One possible cause of the out-of-focus effect on one side of the screen, when using an Edison projector, may be the bending of the aperture plate. This may be tested by laying a steel straight-edge across from the face of the casting on one side to its face on the other, and, with a small inside caliper, measuring from straight-edge to the two aperture plate tracks. If the plate does not set square you may readily straighten it or install a new one. The > three-wing shutter submitted by Mr. May, Bartlesville, Okla., may give better results than the two-winger when working with an ordinary screen, but with a mirror screen it most emphatically does not. Its diameter, as published, was too great, and after cutting down I found as follows: The two-winger gave a steady flicker of equal duration, but the two narrow wings of the three-winger gave an unevenness to the flicker which was more unpleasant to the eye than the heavier and even one. I added three-eighths of an inch to the width of the two flicker blades, thus narrowing the opening directly opposite the wide blade, and now find the shutter to give much better results than the regular two-winger. I am not casting doubt as to the results obtained by Brother May. He may be working under very different conditions than I am. I have a mirror screen and indirect lighting. My own experience is that no projector is flickerless when running 20 minutes to 1,000 feet of film on a reflecting type of screen, though Power's three-winger is very nearly so. And now a word to makers of machine supplies. If they have such faith in their various appliances, why do they not submit them to the head of your department for inspection and trial? I, for one, won't buy a "pig in a poke." Manufacturers will, it seems to me, do well to accept your invitation to send in their product for inspection. If their goods have genuine merit they certainly would be immensely the gainers. Of course, if the goods lack merit, that would be something else again. Attached hereto find sketch of a steel repair block, of use in removing pins from star, cam, etc., which I made and used five years ago. I still have it in use, though I recently purchased a similar article from a manufacturer. And now for an idea in indirect lighting. Get some large wooden butter bowls, to be had at hardware stores. Get, or make, a canopy, and fasten the bowls to same with three or four short pieces of chain. Suspend the lamps from the ceiling and place in the bowls one to four incandescent globes. Paint inside of the bowls with white enamel, and either bronze or paint their outside, any color to suit taste. Make electrical connection in the canopy and weave the lamp cord down through one of the chains. Don't use a bowl smaller than 18 inches; larger will be better, if you can get them. We have a room 30 x 110 feet, with a 14-foot ceiling. Use six bowls, each containing one 40-watt lamp; bowl is 20 inches from the ceiling. I put them up one day when the manager was away. He was more than pleased on his return. Cost was: Bowls, 45 cents each; chain, 10 cents per foot; receptacles, 20 cents each; canopy and lamp, 40 cents, and flexible cord, 2 cents per foot; total, $1.55 per fixture. I have been cranking in one house for seven straight years. Am a member of I. A. T. S. E., Local Union No. 61, and the only union operator in this city.

Repair block for removing cam and star pins and to remove cam and star from shaft.

Hole large enough to receive cam shaft.

Many thanks, Neighbor Klink, for your excellent letter. That wooden bowl stunt could be worked all right by a clever man, but the canopy end of it is not very clear. Where did you get that part of the outfit, or how did you make them? Such home-made things as this are of inestimable value to the small-town manager who cannot afford to purchase expensive fixtures. I have heard of ordinary tin dishpans being used for the same purpose, draped outside with crepe paper. For the city house, or even the house in a fair-sized town, I would advise the purchase of the regular fixtures, rather than the construction of homemade affairs. But there are thousands of small towns where every nickel must be made to count if the little theater is to exist at all, and that is where such things are of great value. As to manufacturers submitting their goods, that is up to them. I take the position that failure to submit them is negative evidence that the manufacturer has no great faith in his own product. The shutter matter is passed along for consideration. I have no doubt but that increasing the flicker blade width would still further reduce flicker, but, in my opinion, instead of adding three-eighths of an inch to one side of each flicker blade, you would have done better to have added three-sixteenths of an inch to each side of each one, thus keeping the light openings equal. No shutter is entirely flickerless running 50 per minute and using a reflecting or semi-reflecting type of screen. Call again, Brother Klink. Do I understand you aright that the operator at the Dreamland Theater, Massillion, Ohio, is named F. H. Richardson? Well, it's a grand old Yiddisher name. Do you think there is any likelihood of our being taken for twins?

Five Point Star.

Travis Rauch, New Orleans, La., propounds the following:

> Am puzzled. Can you help me out? If the star is five-pointed and the sprocket has 20 teeth (that is what my machine has), will it work all right with a 16-tooth sprocket? Can you tell me where you can get a 20-tooth sprocket?

No, to use a five-point star you must have a sprocket of a certain diameter. The film must move three-quarters of an inch with each movement of the star. There are four teeth to each picture (each ¾ inch circumference of sprocket); hence, if the star has five points, the intermittent sprocket must have one picture (four teeth) more circumference. A five-pointed star is not a good proposition, anyhow, because it has not sufficient wearing surface on the lock. I don't know where a five-point star can be had. Would it not be better to get an up-to-date projector?

Better Results.

Long Island comes in with the following:

> Many thanks for your reply to my last letter, page 1076, December 4th issue. Since then I have cleaned the lamphouse thoroughly, installed new feed wires, and now run at 60 amperes a. c. The light is now white and pure. Have a home-made aluminum screen, which shows no brush marks, and my only trouble now is that I occasionally have a ghost in center of picture. My condensing lenses are ¼ inch apart. Could that have anything to do with it?

The best way to answer that last question, Long Island, would be to place them closer together and note results. That may be done by blocking the lenses back with sheet asbestos. Personally, I am inclined to think the ghost comes from some variation in carbon set, this by reason of the fact that the ghost only shows up "sometimes."

Gas Light?

Pittsfield, Mass., wants information as follows:

> Am going up into Vermont to start a show, taking in ten or twelve small towns where there is no electric current. Now, what I want to know is: Can I get fair results using a gasoline light and mantle for motion picture projection at short distances? Also will I be obliged to use a "fireproof" booth for one-night stands? I fully agree with Brother Spraker, Rich Hill, Mo., that it is much better to let people know one has not learned all there is to know about the business, by asking questions of those who do know. I also have had his experience in asking a brother operator questions, only to have him swell up like a toy balloon and refuse to impart any information whatever. When will the new "Bible" be out?

No, Pittsfield, you cannot get any kind of results at all with that kind of a light. The trouble is not that there is not enough of the light, but that its source (a gas mantle) is too large. The condenser cannot utilize the available illumination from such a large light source. The smaller the light source is, the greater percentage of total illumination emanating therefrom will be made use of by the condensing lenses. The handbook is out now, and is being delivered; therefore send along your $2.50. We certainly did have troubles of our own getting out that book. First it was delay on part of printer; then delay on account of paper stock; then, after it was all finally done and the books ready for delivery, we were held up by delay in receiving the shipping envelopes. I finally got into a frame of mind which was, to say the least, unenviable. I could cheerfully have murdered my great-grandmother's ghost. But the trouble is all over now and orders are being filled as soon as received—praise be!

Indefinite.

New York City writes:

> Am running a Standard machine, using 25 amperes of 110-volt d. c. My light always drops on me. Have looked over all my lugs and tightened them, but still the light drops. Can you advise me as to what to do?

Your statement, "My light drops on me," is very indefinite. Presumably you mean that, while the curtain illumination is good at starting, it becomes gradually less as the reel is run. It is not enough to "look over your lugs and tighten them." You should take them apart and clean all connections thoroughly, either scraping with a knife or rubbing with fine sandpaper or emery cloth (No. O) until the metal is perfectly clean and shines. Examine your wires inside the lamphouse. If they are dark brown under the insulation, or if the part exposed near the end feels soft and lifeless (no spring in it), it is oxidized and has poor current-carrying capacity. Cut off as far back as discolored and throw away. Feel your asbestos-covered wires, and if they get warm in a few minutes, throw them away and get new No. 6 lampleads. In this connection see page 94 of the new handbook. Also see "The Lamp" pages 198 to 201. If you haven't one of the new books, my advice to you is by all means procure one at once. Send $2.50 to The Moving Picture World and it will be mailed you at once. It will be worth many times its price to you.

Using Three-Wire System.

Detroit, Mich., asks the following information:

> Being one of the Department's constant readers, I ask your advice and opinion on the following: Have three-wire system entering operating room, Power's 6-A machine and Ft. Wayne compensarc. Current is 110-220, a. c. Would it be preferable to use 220 or 110? Should a Ft. Wayne compensarc heat up on 220 volts, using second position, or 40 amperes? Use a Kliegl spotlight on 220 a. c. The resistance coils heat excessively, though we do not get a strong light. If same were rewound would I secure stronger light?

It would be the same to you and better for the light company to use 220 volts, connecting to the two outside wires, provided your compensarc is wound for that voltage. Look at its name plate and see. If wound for 110 volts you cannot use it on 220. No; it ought not to heat, unless it is being used on voltage higher than it was wound for, though any transformer will get slightly warm. You should not use more than 12 to 15 amperes on spotlight. That is ample. You don't want the light too strong or you will blind the actors. You can have the spotlight rheostat changed so as to give any amperage desired. Write Kliegl about that. He can advise you best, being an expert in that line.

"'ALKALI' IKE IN JAYVILLE" (Essanay), Jan. 9.—A farcical picture of Jayville lovers. Ike appears in town in wooly chaps, like goat-footed Pan, to spoil a love affair between Howard Missimer and Eleanor Blanchard. Lily Branscombe as Eleanor's sister, is being courted by John Steppling who is the happy possessor of a First Aid to Love Makers, a book, price twenty-five cents. John has learned his lesson and is getting on famously. The book has been thrown away and Howard has found it. Unfortunately for him, Ike appears, needs no schooling and is a close rival. There's a funny game of checkers got up to decide the match by the village doctor who in the meantime runs off with the girl. All these players are past masters in such work as this picture demanded of them; but they have had better vehicles than this afforded them, yet it is by no means a failure; part of it is fine.

"THE DELAYED LETTER" (Vitagraph), Jan. 9.—A dramatic picture well worked up and with much suspense. It begins (after stating the situation) with a struggle on the observation platform of a Pullman car, a very carefully made picture. The trees and landscape are seen whirling by and two people in a buggy witness the fight. The cause of it is a girl and the man who made the attack is thrown over; found at the point of death, he lets the innocent man be suspected of attempted murder, but leaves a letter (to be opened in case he dies), exonerating him. The doctor has this and we lose sight of it. The man gets well and is witnessing against his supposed assailant when the letter turns up. One of the first things we notice in the picture is the number of new faces; the Vitagraph Company has apparently used fifty new people as background characters. This gives a very pleasing freshness to the offering. The leading players are well known: Edith Story plays the girl; Earle Williams and Harry T. Morey, the two men, and Rose Tapley and Edward Kimball are the girl's parents. The worthy script is by Charles M. Howell and the picture is by Ralph Ince. A desirable offering.

"A FALSE ORDER" (Selig), Jan. 9.—A railroad melodrama with a collision of two locomotives as its climax. The producer had an actual wreck (two locomotives inter-locked after coming head on), to work into his picture and, with the help of clouds of steam, he has been able to suggest the catastrophy so well that it will seem like the real thing to the average spectator. The suspense, after the locomotive of which the hero is driver gets past the last station and cannot be signaled though it is pounding along to meet the "special" coming toward it on the same track, is marked. The false order is given to the engineer by his rival in love and is intended to send him to destruction; but fails in its ultimate purpose, for the man isn't killed. Written by K. D. Langley, it was produced by Oscar Eagle. Winnifred Greenwood plays acceptably the role of heroine; William Stowell does as well as the hero, with L. S. McKee as the jealous telegraph operator and T. J. Comerford as the girl's father. It may be that the producer has not got all the impression that he might have from this material; but it is far from being a weak offering. In fact, it is a thriller.

"THE HOLLOW TREE" (Pathe), Jan. 9.—A good melodrama of the formal type with some fine characters. The story is not wholly new, but is fresh enough and the fine playing of the actors keeps its head up very well. Its chief features are the careful staging and the intelligent acting. A good, interesting offering.

"THE MANICURIST AND THE MUT" (Kalem), Jan. 8.—There are four "muts," four men who come to the barber shop and fall in love with the manicurist. Each buys a diamond ring and each tries to meet her at his appointed place, but she has by this time "skipped the town." Ruth Roland is the nail-polisher; John Brennan is the barber; the "muts" are M. Neilan, L. McConickie, R. Chandler and H. Peyton. There is some fun all through it, but it causes chuckles rather than laughter.

"JOHNNIE GOES DUCK HUNTING" (Kalem), Jan. 8.—John Brennan is a clown out shooting and makes a short picture of amusing nonsense.

"KIDNAPPING THE FIDDLER" (Eclipse), Jan. 8.—Very laughable, a farce that might have been made by some one on the staff of "Fliegende Blatter," or any very clever maker of cartoon series. It will be quite acceptable everywhere.

"ALONG THE COAST OF DALMATIA" (Eclipse), Jan. 8.—Clear pictures of the Adriatic coast opposite to Italy and near the scenes where Montenegro and Servia are fighting Turkey. There never has been a war in any out-of-the-way or little traveled country that has been brought so close to us as this Balkan war has been through motion pictures. This, until now rather unimportant land, is being shown to us inside and outside. It is "all to the good."

"THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH" (Lubin), Jan. 7.—Longfellow's poem "The Village Blacksmith" furnished the idea for this picture that tells a clear story well; but whose chief merit is its pretty scenes. Harry Myers captures the center of the stage by his good acting which makes him far more interesting than any other character in the story. He is in all the best scenes, in fact he makes them good. Whether the picture was made in New England or not, it seems to have been and there is much charm in its old-time sets carefully made, and costumes of seventy years ago. Good photographs add much to this. The story's ending is weakened by a vision which gets over hardly at all. Visions are conventional always in such stories as this, for no one sees visions nowadays without great provocation. Greek plays needed to show the presence of the gods at times and, in the Middle Ages, dramatists sometimes needed to show the coming of saints; but today ghosts and visions have to be very carefully handled to convince at all. Bartley McCullum plays the blacksmith; Mrs. Geo. B. Walters, his wife; Marie Weirman, their daughter; Frank Lynch, the younger son. On the other side of the picture, Charles Arthur plays the scoundrel and Martin Faust, his friend, not a minister, who marries him to the girl. The older brother (Harry Myers), is the means of saving her from him. At the end the father with son and daughter kneel in the church and see a vision of the mother, now dead.

"A GUN FIGHTER'S SON" (Selig), Jan. 7.—William Duncan, author and producer of this picture, again shows a remarkable knowledge of the art of making a situation tell. He has had better stories than this; but even here has provided an effective offering. It's a chase picture. The gun fighter's son (Rex de Rosselli), escapes from prison six years after wounding his foster father's foreman (William Duncan), who has recovered and has married the bad-man's foster sister (Myrtle Stedman). The bad-man, now free, kidnaps their child and the chase follows. It is very well and freshly accomplished with an unusual emotional power. Florence Dye and Lester Cunio also have roles. The photography is good, and the picture will be liked.

"INTERRUPTED WEDDING BELLS" (Edison), Jan. 8.—A farce, depending largely on the astonishing resemblance between William Wadsworth and Edward O'Connor, both in a disguising make-up. The first is engaged to Miss Brown (Bliss Milford), and has promised not to smoke, which is the source of his troubles. It is a whimsical picture, quite indescribable, and while not a very great offering is fair. Beatrice Mable (a player new to us), plays Bliss' mother; Mrs. C. J. Williams, her big sister; Robert Brower, her father. Edward Boulden, on the other side, plays William's friend; Alice Washburn the barber's wife and John Sturgeon the barber's assistant. Julian Reed plays the minister.

"PEGGY AND THE OLD SCOUT" (Pathe), Jan. 8.—A trained horse picture that will be quite acceptable, especially to the small boy. Besides freeing Old Scout from the Indians, the horse does many other wonderful feats, among which is the taking care of a bag of gold dust. One of the good things about the picture is the excellent photography which in some scenes is fine. Good photographs are surely worth while.

"THE WIVES OF JAMESTOWN" (Kalem), Jan. 10.—It is difficult adequately to describe this beautiful production without creating the impression that the writer is indulging in exaggerated language. Gene Gauntier has never done stronger work than she does in these two reels. Nor has Jack Clark. There is a wealth of incident to hold the attention throughout—no "padding" to make 2,000 feet. There are fine outdoor settings—as the scene in front of the castle where Bryan with his flute plays for Lady Geraldine; of the meadow, with the brook in the background, and the cows grazing; of the garden where Bryan surprises Lady Geraldine; on the ship bearing Bryan away from Ireland, the shores and hills of Old Erin in the distance; of the canoe in which the new-comer descends the placid river to Jamestown to attend the sale of wives and also the return of John Pierce and his bride over the same route, these latter scenes marking an especially striking piece of photography, although this is fine throughout; the grove where was staged the sale of the women from the other side.

Above and beyond all else in this feature, however, is the dramatic quality. There are many "big scenes"—too many to enumerate. It is a story that reaches the heart—stirs it, thrills it. The Kalem Company is to be thanked for giving it to us. Sidney Olcott made the picture. The hand of a master and an artist shows in the making. It is to be assumed that George Hollister operated the camera. It is in a picture of this rank that the importance of a cameraman bulks big. Don't miss seeing "The Wives of Jamestown."

"THE BEST MAN WINS" (Biograph), Jan. 9.—It turned out that "his" best man won. The way it came about was the cause of considerable fun.

"THE BITE OF A SNAKE" (Biograph), Jan. 9.—On the same reel is told a new story of a temperance town. A real snake is introduced into the picture. Its humor will be most appreciated in towns where liquor is sold surreptitiously.

"THE ELDORADO LODE" (Edison), Jan. 10.—There is suspense aplenty in this fine drama of the west. The acting is of the best, as it is bound to be in a cast composed of James Gordon, Laura Sawyer, Benjamin Wilson and Richard Neill.

"GRANDFATHER" (Kalem), Jan. 10.—Hazel Neason does well in a play that has nothing new in the way of a plot, but which is competently put on.

"THE MAID OF HONOR" (Edison), Jan. 11.—Truly a beautiful picture. The story is finely dramatic and in Bannister Merwin's best style and it was watched by an audience on Broadway with the closest interest. Its charm comes from the beauty of its playing and its perfect staging, and also from the romantic feeling of its action. Chas J. Brabin, its director, deserves as much credit as the author. Mark MacDermott plays a man who has met a woman, Mabel Trunnelle, has saved her from a fire; but has lost track of her. He is engaged to another woman, Bessie Learn, and she has invited her friend, Mabel, to be her maid of honor. The real action begins the day before the wedding, after Mark and Mabel have met again. It is made significant throughout by restrained acting that shows delicate shades of meaning and of feeling. Such acting provides an unobtrusive and subtle explanation to the action; it is like good lighting to a scene. Mrs. Wallace Erskine, Harry Eyting and Julian Reed, with others, have roles. The picture makes an excellent, desirable offering; one that is good to see and one that will stand out as something better than usual.

"RADIOGRAPHY IN PRACTICE" (C. G. P. C.), Jan. 10.—An interesting picture, but a bit too technical for the average audience.

"THE LIFE OF ANTS" (C. G. P. C.), Jan. 10.—This picture, on the same reel, should prove a drawing card. It is a well photographed picture of a corner of life that all are interested in. It should repay special advertising and the things that are most noticeable in it are its showing of community life and the organization in the ant hill or tribal home and also the strange seeming intelligence that is apparent.

"JIMMY" (Essanay), Jan. 10.—A story of an office boy that will please. It is a sleuth story and has a fanciful background in the boy's reading; but for the most part it is conducted naturally in good comedy spirit. It is largely kept from being convincing by one joke that didn't really get over, because it wasn't believed—the boy, after he has most convincingly got the safe so that he can't open it, hides $20,000 worth of bonds in the empty waste basket and goes home for the night. It makes good passing entertainment. Thomas Shirley plays Jimmy. The late Harry Cashman plays his employer. Frank Dayton plays the crook janitor and his outside pal is Bryant Washburn. William Walters, Fred Wulf and Whitney Raymond have good parts. Helen Dunbar, as Jimmy's mother, is the most realistic character of all.

"STAGE STRUCK SALLY" (Lubin), Jan. 10.—Mae Hotely, in this farce, plays a cook who is studying out of a book the mysteries of acting. Her mistress overhearing a rehearsal, takes her for mad and is frightened almost to death. Mae has a dull knife. She takes it to the mistress to have it sharpened and that is both end and beginning, for Mae goes for the doctor without putting down the knife. Ben Walker, Julia Calhoun, Jack Ridgway, Rob Burns, Ray McKee, Walter Stull and Geo. Reehm have roles. It was produced by A. D. Hotaling from E. W. Sargents script.

"AN ACCIDENTAL DENTIST" (Lubin), Jan. 10.—A nonsense farce in which trick photography plays a large part. Eleanor Gains plays Nora, the dentist's cook, who invites her policeman lover in to have a bite, her master being out. The cop is played by J. T. Hevener. After he has eaten and drunk a lot of what was in bottles, two crooks come to break the safe of the dentist and the copper gives them gas. It made some laughter.

"A SAW MILL HAZARD" (Kalem), Jan. 11.—There is a good, interesting situation in this melodrama which works up—if "up" is the right work—to the saw mill climax with the unconscious hero placed on the log carrier by the villain to be rescued by the heroine. We know well by observation that the old trick is still effective in many places; it's an incident that a certain class of people still like. We have seen it applauded even when very crudely done and here it is well done. We saw it with a Broadway audience which laughed at the crude, most melodramatic acting of the villain; but which was silent at the end. He blocks the action right out with no desire for that shading that tries to give the impression of real life. Alice Hollister is the heroine; Earle Fox, the hero; Helen Lindroth, the boy's mother and R. G. Vignola, the villain. These are all good players. Even in such a story they plainly show their skill and because of this, when allowance is made for their, as some think, necessary playing up to melodramatic parts, it makes a fair offering. There is some good photography in it and some interesting scenes.

"PIRATE GOLD" (Biograph), January 13.—A picture that starts out well, but that soon falls into the conventional and becomes almost flat. The displacing of one scene in the print we saw didn't help it make a deep impression on the audience that saw it with us. Making all allowances, it will be a fair offering. We have seen many others like it that were better.

"THE AMBASSADOR'S DISAPPEARANCE" (Vitagraph), January 10.—Another picture in the Lambert Chase series which places the sleuth wisdom of the great detective on a high pedestal. In fact, the way the character is handled in this story is its only drawback—its climax, in which the detective pops up out of the box and covers the conspirators, made the audience laugh with relish. It wasn't a critical audience, either; quite the reverse. Aside from this one character, who spoils every scene he appears in, but doesn't spoil the whole offering, the picture is first class. It deals with the theft of some international state secrets from the office of the French Ambassador in Washington (which is shown entertainingly), and with their recovery by the famous detective (which won't convince the majority who know a good deal about the way sleuths act in books). It is perfectly photographed. Maurice Costello produced the picture, and plays the detective; Charles Eldridge plays the Ambassador; Earle Williams the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and R. Gaillord, the thief. B. R. Brooker wrote the script.

"SAN XAVIER MISSION" (Lubin), January 11.—An instructive and very interesting picture of one of the oldest missions in the United States—older, so we are informed by a correspondent, than the St. Augustine mission. It is well photographed also.

"THE ARTIST'S ROMANCE" (Lubin), January 11.—On the reel with the above is this little romantic comedy of two artists who both paint a picture to exhibit at the same art club. One picture is called "The Brute"; it is a hunting scene by the girl. The other is called "The Appeal," and is not only a hunting scene, but is exactly the same picture—one would have thought the same brush had done both. This is the beginning of a romance. The offering depends on its cleverly worked up idea—the scenario is by Lawrence McCloskey—and also on its artistically chosen scenes. Arthur Johnson plays the artist who wants to shoot a rabbit, and Lottie Brisco, the artist who saves it by appealing to his good nature. Arthur Johnson produced it.

"O'HARA HELPS CUPID" (Vitagraph), January 11.—This is the second O'Hara picture, and it makes a fair offering, but is not quite so good as the former, in which our kind-hearted friend acts as a peacemaker. In this he helps his friend Hughie Mack to win the love and lunch room of Widow Price, who is for some time undecided between him and Charles Edwards. Mrs. Maurice and Norma Talmadge also have parts. O'Hara is played, as usual, by Van Dyke Brooke, who also is the picture's producer. W. L. Tremayne wrote the script.

PATHE'S WEEKLY No. 3, January 13.—There are a number of good items this week, among others an excellent portrait of Woodrow Wilson and one of Governor Sulzer. An item that will interest is a view of the New Year's parade in Philadelphia.

"THE JELLY FISH AND THE PLANKTON" (C. G. P. C.), January 14.—Another of the nature series, showing photographs as clear as can be of some water animals well known by name but hardly close acquaintances of the average spectator. The novelty as well as the instruction of such pictures appeals to us and we suspect it does to every one. A fine offering.

"THE PALACE OF FONTAINEBLEAU" (C. G. P. C.), January 14.—On the same reel is this hand-colored picture of one of France's most famous palaces. The place is of great interest and the photographs are clear and well chosen.

"A TIMELY RESCUE" (Lubin), January 13.—A romance along rather conventional lines, but worked up with a good deal of commendable freshness, which makes it good entertainment. It was produced by Arthur Johnson, who plays in it a country lad who goes to the city and makes a success, leaving in the village a girl (Lottie Briscoe) whom he partially forgets. The girl's father dies, leaving her and her mother poor. They also come to the city, and there the girl has a hard time in making a living. Driven "by necessity," she comes to the brink of the easiest but evil path of making money, but is found by the man, who, by the way, is walking in under-world paths, and is "rescued." It is a picture with some fine scenes and has a good deal of interesting character drawing. Its story is clearly developed and has a measure of suspense. We don't wholly like the taste of it, but perhaps few people take notice of the inside significance of any picture, except where the producer sets it forth by intention; in this case he has tried to hide it. In the cast are Clara Lambert, the mother; Chas. Brandt, a manager; Ford Obeck, a foreman, and Anna Burmester, one of the girls in the dance hall.

Independent

"THE HYPOCRITE" (Victor), Jan. 17.—A well conducted picture with some pretty scenes which have been perfectly photographed. It will make good entertainment. It uses an old idea and makes a minister's son come to work in the business of his father's friend in the city. On his arrival, the cards, punch-bowl and cigars are hidden while he hides his cigarettes and his liking for good times. Each half finds the other out in the end. It has been given freshness by the producer and is breezily and naturally acted by Owen Moore and Fritzi Brunette, ably supported by a good cast.

"BY-GONE DAYS" (Rex), Jan. 12.—A revolutionary story with a dramatic ride by plucky Jenny O'Neil. She is determined to save an American colonel whom the invaders have planned to capture and they chase her, but she eludes them, though wounded. The picture stands on this incident alone, yet it is substantial. In the early scenes, there is a love story begun, but little is made of it. The offering has merit enough to be acceptable.

"FUNNICUS MARRIES A HUNCHBACK" (Eclair, Paris), Jan. 19.—The marriage is to save a legacy and his bride is plump and has a hunchback. Funnicus accepts the woman but then tries to get rid of the deformity by many and strange means. The picture is quite out of good taste; in one scene, the attempt to pull the hump off.

"LIFE IN INDIA" (Eclair, Paris), Jan. 19.—On the same reel with the Funnicus picture is this unusually enteresting and beautifully hand colored film giving some well-chosen glimpses of trades by which East Indians earn a living. It will please everybody.

"LIFE'S LOTTERY" (Milano), Jan. 18.—A two part subject that has for its greatest defect poorly chosen sub-titles. Solely because the characters were not properly introduced, the story is left in places to give an almost ridiculous impression that was not intended by the producer. It is a fairly good story, as produced, rather conventional, but interesting and will be acceptable, yet hardly as a feature, by the average spectator. It concerns an Italian count and a young woman. The man needs money, steals his mother's necklace, gets his mother's companion suspected of the crime and sent to prison. In the end she gets revenge by convincing him that she can show him up and and he drops dead.

"THE TRAMP REPORTER" (Powers), Jan. 18.—A two-part picture dealing with a newspaper man who is a first-class news gatherer and who is shown as having a hard time between jobs. This enhances a self-sacrificing act of his by which he loses his latest job just when he is making good. It is hardly usual though for a reporter to give his "scoop" to an old man who has been "warned" and then to play the drunken man in order to get fired and so to make the older man seem indispensable. The picture would have been much better in one part and is not powerful. It has many good things; good acting and fresh characters help it most and the producer has made one or two scenes that are full of action and that hold strongly. The author, C. B. Hoadly, has provided a fine idea, something that is inspiring and that will be widely liked. Edwin August plays the lead well and well played also is the old reporter.

"JAMES THE HUNGRY ONE" (Great Northern), Jan. 11.—A comedy on the slapstick order that will make fun.

"THE NEW BOOT CLEANER" (Great Northern), Jan. 11.—There are many laughs in this broad comedy, on the same reel as the foregoing. It is hardly refined comedy.

"DON'T TEASE THE DOGS" (Lux), Jan. 10.—Comedy, but rather weak.

"THE MATRIMONIAL FEVER" (Lux), Jan. 10. On the same reel is this rather silly story of how several single people were captured by cupid.

"THE MISTAKEN MASHER" (Keystone), Jan. 27.—A half-reel comedy full of snap and ginger and real humor. The boxing scenes bring roars of laughter, as well as the inglorious finish of the amateur pugilist.

"A LANDLORD'S TROUBLES" (Keystone), Jan. 27.—This, on the same reel with above, is equally funny. The manner in which the officers pursue the bear and the bear in turn runs them all into jail creates much laughter. Altogether a first-class reel.

"PUTTING ONE OVER ON THE DEACON" (Keystone), Jan. 27.—A rather amusing half-reel film, beginning with a well-pictured effort to sell the deacon a horse, and winding up with a wedding party masquerading in the outfit of traveling minstrels. The deacon performs the ceremony which he has opposed.

"THE BATTLE OF WHO RUN" (Keystone), Feb. 6.—This film contains a masterly burlesque on real warfare. There are a number of cowering officers and privates, mixed messages, bursting bombs, and side-splitting situations. Mabel Normand appears in an officer's uniform, and has some trouble picking out the real hero of the occasion. A surprisingly good army burlesque.

"THE LAST RUN OF THE SANTE FE COACH" (Frontier), Jan. 15.—A picturesque story of a wedding journey in an old Sante Fe coach. The photography is sharp and pleasing to the eye, showing good distances and long stretches of the western trail. If the setting was intended to adhere strictly to the old days, we cannot justify the presence of the Pabst beer sign, which loomed up in one picture with startling distinctness. It properly belongs to the later, irrigation era. The attempted hold-up of the stage and its defense until help arrived was nicely shown. A good offering.

"MAMMY'S CHILE" (Powers), Jan. 15.—A picture in which children hold the center of interest, including Matty and Early. There is a little black baby which creates many laughing moments. The exchange of babies makes an entertaining story.

"A DIP INTO SOCIETY" (Crystal), Jan. 19.—A half-reel offering in which Pearl White as the scrub girl tastes briefly of society life and wins the love of Bumski, the musician, only to lose it later. The situation is almost too pathetic at the close to make the burlesque effective.

"THE FAKE GAS MAN" (Crystal), Jan. 19.—This, on same reel with above, illustrates the amusing adventures of a masher who poses as the gas man and gets into some lively difficulties.

"THE QUICKEST WAY" (Nestor), Jan. 15.—Good photography and capable acting are the best features of this film. The plot, in which the hero poses as a hired man to fool his uncle, is rather commonplace, but the comedy develops well and the mixed love affairs of the two couples hold the interest.

"CUPID FINDS A WAY" (Nestor), Jan. 13.—A bright comedy offering, with a new idea. Jack rents rooms in his aunt's house to obtain ready money during her absence. His efforts to get rid of them later are grotesque. The interior scenes are good and the love story pleasing.

"A FRONTIER PROVIDENCE (Bison), Jan. 14.—This two-reel production is crowded with exciting incidents. The efforts of Bill French to force the girl to marry him are frustrated in the end by his death. The scenes showing the manner in which the wagon breaks down while running at full speed are good. The defense of the cabin is rather theatrical and borders on the impossible, but furnishes some thrilling moments. Very successful as an offering of its kind.

"THE SEE-SAW OF LIFE" (Imp), Jan. 13.—A strong slum story, in which the hero and heroine are in turn converted by the Salvation Army. The scenes in Mike's place and the Salvation Army barracks are typical. The story is full of heart interest and the four leading parts are well handled.

"THE SINS OF THE FATHER" (Champion), January 13.—At the close of this picture the jail door yawns for either the father or the son and the single word, "Which?" is thrown on the screen. The son has become an outlaw because of a crime committed by his father twenty years before. The weakness of the picture is that in neither case was there a very strong motive for crime, but the question raised will create interested comment without doubt wherever the picture is shown.

"REGIMENTAL PALS" (Bison), Jan. 18.—Here is a picture that is decidedly different. Imagine two men, crawling over the sun-baked desert, one of them encouraging the other to keep up strength by holding the photograph of his sweetheart before him. The desert scenes are vivid, but the plight of the two men would have been more effective if they had removed part of their clothing. In the end water is reached and all turns out happily. An entertaining offering.

"THE DETECTIVE'S SANTA CLAUS" (Eclair), Jan. 14.—A well acted picture, in which an impossible situation is made to seem natural. The robber in his efforts to escape crawls down the chimney where the children have hung their stockings. That it happens to be the home of the poor detective is where the "long arm of coincidence" rather overreaches itself. But it will serve as good entertainment.

"A WAIF OF THE DESERT" (Nestor), Jan. 17.—This would have been a stronger picture if it had been made clearer that the young man who saved the child from the burning desert was the woman's son. The idea is conveyed that the baby was adopted by a young man and his wife and not until late in the picture is it made plain that the woman is his mother. The pictures are good and the story, except for this defect, interesting.

"THE NINTH COMMANDMENT" (Gem), Jan. 14.—A story based upon the commandment, "Thou shalt not bear false witness." The development of character on the part of Tom is the strong feature of the picture, which holds the interest well.

"A LITTLE MOTHER WANTS A HOME" (Imp), Jan. 16.—A picture of decided interest throughout, enlivened by a baby whose cute actions bring constant smiles. The story is thoroughly human and the film will make friends wherever shown.

"THE BOOB'S INHERITANCE" (Imp), Jan. 18.—A picture, featuring Chas. De Forest as the rotund bellboy who is thought to inherit three million dollars. The skit contains numerous amusing situations and some good hotel scenes are shown.

"PHOSPHATE INDUSTRY" (Imp) Jan. 18.—This, on same reel with above, is instructive as far as it goes, but we would like to have seen something of the finished product.

"NOBODY'S LOVE STORY" (Eclair), Jan. 16.—Tom, in his efforts to shield the brother of the girl he loves, is accused of cheating at cards, and branded on the hand. He wanders two years as a "Nobody," but in the end his innocence is made clear. The close of the picture is melodramatic and not entirely convincing. The interest is maintained, however.

"THE FLOWER GIRL" (Rex), Jan. 16.—A light, entertaining story, with artistic photographic effects. The part of the flower girl is idealized, but the whole story is very attractive.

"HE NEVER KNEW" (Rex), Jan. 19.—Showing, by means of some very fine pictures, how a business man who has neglected his wife comes near losing her to another. The society scenes are good and the story ends happily.

"THE TINIEST OF STARS" (Thanhouser), Jan. 14.—A very entertaining story of amateur night on the stage, with a touching scene at the close, where the family of the poor musician is reunited. The work of James Cruze and the children is good. The first part is a little long, but the pictures are all well taken.

"NAPOLEON'S LUCK STONE" (Thanhouser), Jan. 17.—This story of the timid clerk who thought he had found the luck stone of the great Napoleon, only to discover later that it was an onion, gets hold of the observer strongly in the first part. The part of the clerk would have been a little stronger in the latter half without so much of the burlesque touch, but the interest is held throughout.

"A COMMUTER'S CAT" (Thanhouser), Jan. 19.—A good little comedy idea, in which an absent-minded business man carries a dead cat around all day, after being instructed to drop it from the ferry boat. At last he exchanges it for another man's piece of steak, and the scene in the second man's home when the cat arrives is laughable.

"A FEW MILLION BIRDS" (Thanhouser), Jan. 19.—On the same reel with above. Interesting views of pigeon and ostrich farms, in which the title does not seem to be exaggerated.

"WHEN LINCOLN PAID" (Kay Bee), Jan. 31.—A powerfully pictured two-reel offering, based on an incident in the life of Lincoln. The death of the widow's own son and her plea for the life of another boy in his place, brings tears to the eyes. The characterization of Lincoln, both as a young man, and later, surrounded by his cabinet, is finely done. The pictures of battle are graphically wrought out and the film is in every way a notable production.

"THE STRUGGLE" (Broncho), Jan. 29.—This two-reel offering begins with the villain in terrific hand to hand conflict with a woman, a boy and a man. The latter he murders. Five years later, in the midst of exciting scenes, the boy avenges his father's death, almost at the expense of his own life. The run of the stage coach is shown by theatrical devices which seem a little unnecessary in the open country. The desert scenes are good and the manner in which the boy prisoner helps the sheriff fight off the Indians is well pictured. There are many thrills in this.

"WHERE DESTINY GUIDES" (American), Jan. 20.—The work of the girl, Virgie, who ran away after her enforced marriage and her father's death, is very good. As a story, it is more interesting than probable, but is well presented throughout.

"HIS OLD-FASHIONED MOTHER" (American), Jan. 18.—A strong half-reel offering, showing how a prosperous young man who was ashamed of his own mother is led to see the error of his attitude. The wife's discovery of her in the city and subsequent kindness is touching. A good short photoplay, though the theme is not entirely new.

"THE ENGLISH WALNUT INDUSTRY" (American), January 18.—Some pleasing illustrations of the manner in which the California crop of English walnuts is gathered each year.

"THE AWAKENING" (American), Jan. 16.—The first scene in this is its least convincing feature, owing to the make-up of the dying woman. Later the story, while simple and elemental, is distinctly pleasing. The California mountain scenes are decidedly attractive in this.

"FACE TO FACE WITH A LEOPARD" (Lux), January 18.—A thrilling picture, taken, for the most part, against the side of a steep cliff. Down this a darkie boy scrambles to get a cub leopard. The mother beast follows him as he climbs back, but is not able to catch him. At the foot of the cliff the hero and heroine come face to face with the infuriated leopard, that, after a tussel, is beaten off. The photography is clear enough to show all that goes on, but not clear enough to show faces, which in this picture are not important. A very fair offering.

"SHERIDAN'S RIDE" (Bison), January 28.—A fine three-part picture, giving the famous ride that saved the day for the Union forces at Cedar Creek, in the Shenandoah Valley. The first two reels picture two love stories, very interesting and well acted; the last reel gives, in a very dramatic way, the early morning rout of Sheridan's army and the ride from Winchester to save the day. These battle pictures and the galloping of the horses are truly thrillers, and most people think this the best part of the offering; we prefer the love story. The photography is of the best, and we highly commend the offering as a whole. Virginia Forde and her mother, Eugenia Forde, carry the leading female parts as naturally as can be, while William Clifford, as Sheridan, and Roy Myers, as the younger girl's lover, are as fortunate in the leading male roles.

"LOVE AND CIRCUMSTANCES" (Ammex), January 23.—This is the first release of the Ammex company, and is a melodrama not very fresh or convincing. The photography also is not as clear as one could desire. Yet the players show ability, and although this premiere cannot be called a big offering, we have no doubt that its followers will amply justify themselves

Inquiries

NOTE—No questions can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of addresses to which photoplays may be sent will be supplied on receipt of a STAMPED AND ADDRESSED ENVELOPE.

MRS. T.—A rejection slip may mean almost anything. Send one or two more since the company answered promptly. Both New York and Los Angeles reads. The addresses of the new companies will not be listed until they settle down. Meantime, watch the advertisements. We think we are doing well with three columns of photoplay stuff. There is but one Flossie.

S.—Mrs. Julia Swayne Gordon was the Lady Godiva of the Vitagraph.

F. R.—Licensed theaters running independent films are liable to lose their license. You might "sneak in" an occasional subject, but if you are caught at it there is likely to be trouble. There is a man in Waterville, Maine, who gets away with it, but that is further from home than you are.

M. L. S.—This paper, with all others of repute, decry the correspondence school because none that we know of is run by practical men. We cannot particularize.

L. D. W.—The request for a synopsis seems to be due to the desire to work out the idea in some special form rather than that generally followed. Your paper is good, but a trifle too transparent. See list sent for the western companies. Study the stories of the films for the class of production.

J. H. L.—Miss Florence Geneva was with "Oh! Oh! Delphine" last we heard. Eddie Dillon was the brother in "A Limited Divorce."

COPE—We do not recall that Mr. Anderson ever was with Selig, but we are open to correction. Marshall Nielan was the young prospector in "A Mountain Tragedy."

J. S.—Mr. Anderson is not dead, has not been dead, and is no nearer paradise at present than New York City. That's close enough.

F. J. S.—Robert Herron was the young burglar in "The Burglar's Dilemma."

M. M. W.—Do not know the play names, but the fiancée was Claire McDowell and the poor man's daughter Dorothy West in "Swords and Hearts." Miss Blanche Sweet was Mr. August's opposite in "The Lesser Evil." Joseph Graybill was John De Silva in "The Ring of a Spanish Grandee." Owen Moore was not in "The Battle." Harry Coleman is in vaudeville. We do not place the other player at the moment.

E. H. B.—See reply to J. H. L.

M. Y. S.—We cannot locate the spots where pictures were made as a general thing.

A. J. B.—The Biograph Identifier passes the first and third questions. The mountain maid, the husband and wife, in "Gold and Glitter," were Miss Lillian Gish, Elmer Booth and Miss Grace Lewis.

ORIENT—Miss Francelia Billington was Mr. Blackwell's wife in "The Usurer." Jack Dillon was the grocer in "The Telephone Girl and the Lady." Have to pass that Melies question.

AMY REN—Sorry, but we do not identify by page numbers. Miss Edna Payne was Kitty in "Kitty and the Bandits."

"WAS HE A COWARD" is correctly dated by a correspondent as March 16, 1911.

MISS PICKFORD was written up in McClure's, November, 1912, which will interest J. N.

F. E. C.—You loose. The Identifier was correct.

FANNORA—Wilfred Lucas was the sailor in "A Sailor's Heart." His employer, also a sailor, was Texas Gorman. The third sweetheart is not familiar to the Identifier. Miss Sweet's sweetheart in "The Painted Lady" (the burglar), was Joseph Graybill. Her stage sister was Miss Marion Kirby. Mr. Lucas is now with Imp and Miss Kirby with Punch. We do not at the moment place Miss Lottie Pickford, though we understand that she is still in pictures. Jack Smith, by the way, is their brother. In "An Assisted Elopement" the Tom Richmond was Elmer Clifton.

A. K.—We do not answer vaudeville questions. Lots of actors would like to know beforehand the lengths of the jumps on the Keith circuit. Ask a couple of regular questions on the photoplay end.

H. H. H.—"Marque Deposee" is the French equivalent of Trade Mark. It is the Pathe Freres trade mark on a French film, possibly an importation, since the majority of the films now carry C. G. P. C. instead of Pathe when made abroad.

F. D.—The Snapper Kid in "The Musketeers of Pig Alley" was Elmer Booth.

J. F. S.—The scene plot is the list of scenes showing how many times each set or location is used. The action is the detailed story by scenes told in action. It used to be called the "scenario," but this was a misnomer. We do not reply by mail.

I. L. M.—Miss Bessie Eyton was the Atala of the Selig production. Tom Moore was the lead in "The Belle of New Orleans." We think Miss Lottie Pickford played opposite to him.

H. M. S.—The player was not in that Selig.

F. R. S.—We cannot name the first?run houses in Manhattan. Your list is fairly comprehensive, but even the houses named are likely to depart from their schedule. There are two houses on Union Square that have reasonably new Independent runs.

B. C. D.—Be more specific than "the dark girl." The Vitagraph home office and studio is in Brooklyn.

THANHOUSER COMPANIES BUSY.

The Thanhouser folks have scheduled their releases for the month of February and a feature release list is the result. The pictures issued the very first week show that the Thanhouser producers have been busy through widely separated centers.

Sunday, February 1st, is the release date of "Some Fools There Were," made at the Los Angeles studio. It features Flo La Badie, Jean Darnell, William Garwood, William Russell and Riley Chamberlin. It tells the adventures of a coquette who leaves an assortment of broken hearts in her trail. Miss La Badie plays the part. On Tuesday, the fourth, "A Mystery of Wall Street" is released—made by the home company at New Rochelle. Miss Anderson and Eugene Moore are the leads. As the title signifies, it is a story of the ticker and is said to show some exciting stock exchange scenes. Harry Benham is featured in "Half Way to Reno," released by the Middle-West organization and released on Friday, the 7th. Later in the month a two-reel feature is promised by the home (New Rochelle) company, featuring Marguerite Snow and James Cruze.

GROWTH OF MOTION PICTURES.

1913 To Witness the Second Stage of Development in the Theater of Science.

By Robert Grau.

The year 1913 as it casts its outlines on the horizon, presents every indication that as the third year of the second decade of the twentieth century spends itself, progress and innovation will become rampant in the field of public entertaining.

Vast changes in the mode of catering to the amusement of our 90 millions of people are certain to develop as a result of the amazing conditions that now confront the men who seek to solve the very intricate problem of holding fast the patronage of a public never so inclined as now to bestow its favor where it can obtain the greatest measure of entertainment. The new year should be particularly notable in the efforts made by the various factors in the film industry to maintain the tenability of the position of the moving picture as a prime factor in the lives of the people, and the writer, while not wishing to assume the role of a prophet, is inclined to believe that the photoplay is destined to give way to something more vital—something that the theater of science alone can embrace. Just what this is to be may not be clearly stated, but that the year 1913 will record an amazing evolution in what is portrayed on the screen no one can doubt.

Two phases of the year's development already have reached the positive stage. Firstly, the photo-opera; the writer has always insisted that the Victor Herberts, the De Kovens and the Franz Lehars were due to capitulate to the camera man, and now that Mr. Edison has demonstrated that synchronization of the two greatest simulative devices the world has ever known is possible, the year 1913 should witness the advent of the musician—the greatest force as an entity we have—as an asset of the staff of the modern film studio.

At last the several important musical periodicals of the nation are devoting columns, even pages, to the momentous significance of the photo-opera, but only one of the editorial contingent has as yet realized that the photo-symphony is as great a possibility—nay probability—of the new year and who shall say, that with the masses at last to see and hear the great music dramas of the masters that the camera man is not marching on.

I use the term "camera man" advisedly, for after all no matter what progress may do in other directions, the great vogue of the theater of science of to-morrow will be primarily due to the survival of the moving picture which has already made fifty millions of people (to whom the inside of a playhouse was an unknown sight) confirmed photoplay patrons, and despite all that may be said by pessimistically inclined persons, the fact remains that the ultimate salvation of the speaking stage will be revealed only when a portion of these 50 millions having formed the photoplay habit are enticed into the play-house to see the players in the flesh; but this will not happen while the said 50 millions are held fast by such progressive procedure as the year 1913 seems likely to reveal in picturedom.

After all, it is only a battle between what was and what is. The laws of science and evolution as we see them in this vital age of enlightenment indicate beyond any shadow of doubt that man is to be utilized only in the original development of simulation of his greatest endeavor, and each year is bringing us nearer to the spectacle of man's retirement from every line of endeavor that science and invention can duplicate and multiply.

Therefore the photo opera, the photo symphony and the talking picture are merely indicative of the infancy of the second stage of development in what I hope will soon be called the theater of science, where the workingman will lay down his dime (as the Wizard of Menlo Park predicted) and in return hear and see grand opera, spectacle, drama, and even the circus, all revealed to him with artistic verity and unerring mastery of sound, action, color and constituting as a whole a veritable conquest by science of the arts of music and the drama.

POWER'S NO. 6-A SOLD TO BILTMORE ESTATE.

Power's Cameragraph No. 6-A has been sold by the Carolina Film & Supply Company, of Asheville, N. C., to Mr. Geo. W. Vanderbilt for use on his Biltmore estate. This will be operated in the parish building at Biltmore and will be free to the children of the employees of the estate and others. This is in line with Mr. Vanderbilt's policy to provide at all times the very best in everything for his employees and tenants.

"Gold Is Not All" (Imp)

By George Blaisdell.

IMP has a new leading woman, and a good one. She is Jane Gale, and she comes from Philadelphia. She has for some time been working in Lubin films. She has not been doing leads, but not because she was not capable. It has been apparent to a casual observer that good talent was being held in the background. Miss Gale shows in "Gold Is Not All" that she has real capacity as an actress. As a matter of fact, there is an unusual amount of good work in this two-reel comedy-drama. It is put on by Wilfred Lucas. The result shows what can be done when a good man has good materials — animate and inanimate.

King Baggot appears in a role somewhat new to him; his delineation of the long-haired Continental composer will be a delight as well as a revelation to his admirers. He will make many laughs and he will cause many serious faces in any gathering. There are a goodly number of big situations—in fact, there is a fine play on the emotions all the way through the picture. Bess Meredyth as the Slavey is excellent. She does not overdo her part, but gives a convincing, intelligent interpretation. William Kavanagh has an unpopular part in the miser uncle, but he hews to the line and gives a portrayal in all respects equal to his usual high standard. Frank Russell as the director will remind many of the popular conception of a well-known contemporary impresario, and adds materially to the comedy element. William Cowper as the artist, and Harry Fisher as the writer, cast as the associates and room-mates of Karl, the pianist (Mr. Baggot), are much in evidence and aid in putting over the picture. William Dunn has the role of Mr. Rich, the well-named person who tries to win the affection of the girl who has revealed the possession of the wonderful voice.

Scene from "Gold Is Not All" (Imp).

Scene from "Gold Is Not All" (Imp).

A great opera singer, unheeding the advice of her physician, goes on the stage, determined to sing at one more performance in order to complete a trust fund which she has been accumulating that her little daughter might be provided for in case of her death. She overtaxes her strength and dies in the midst of her work. Her brother, who has been left guardian of the child, is crazed by the prospect of handling so much money. His particular phase of lunacy takes the form of concealing money in the tumbled-down building where he takes the child to live. The girl is brought up virtually a prisoner, and the only friend she ever sees is a little slavey who unlocks her door at times and visits her.

A dozen years after the death of the mother, three friends, a piano player and composer, an artist and a writer, rent the tenement over the rooms where the child is held a prisoner by her miser uncle. Through the clever work of the slavey, the pianist meets the girl, now budding into womanhood. After counting his treasure one evening the miser falls asleep. The wind blows a curtain against a candle and sets the tenement on fire. The miser, in endeavoring to reach the closet where his money is hoarded, meets his death in the flames. Karl, the pianist, rescues the girl. The three friends jointly adopt her. Later Karl discovers that the girl has a wonderful voice. In order that it may reach full development, he enlists the aid of a rich man. This patron, in turn, introduces the girl to a great impresario, who personally oversees her education and prepares her for her formal debut.

Just prior to her first appearance on the stage, she gives a little party to her three guardians. An alcohol lamp explodes, and Karl, rescuing the young woman from the flames, is so badly burned about the hands that he is unable to play again. The girl sings on the same stage on which her mother died. She makes a great success. At a little family gathering, following the evening's performance, the rich patron enters the tenement. He is under the influence of liquor and forces his attentions upon the girl. She breaks away from him and runs down stairs to her own room, pursued by the rich man. Karl follows and grapples with the girl's assailant. In the struggle the two fall against the closet where the old miser had kept his hoard. The spring is touched and the money is revealed. As the notes fall upon the floor, Karl picks up a bunch of them and thrusts them into the hat of the drunken suitor, informing him that this will recompense him for the advances he has made for the girl's education. Karl wins the girl. The little party is turned into a scene of even greater festivity and rejoicing.

KINEMACOLOR OPENS BRANCH AT CINCINNATI.

The Kinemacolor Company of America has opened a branch office at 132 East 4th Avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio. J. L. Kempner is temporarily in charge and will remain in Cincinnati until the new office is thoroughly settled into its routine.

All the territory adjacent to Cincinnati will be served by the new office and this territory will include all of the State of Pennsylvania, with the exception of Pittsburg, where the Grand Opera House, which has the exclusive Kinemacolor service for that city, will continue to receive its service from the New York office of the Kinemacolor Company of America.

It is announced that within the next three months, branch offices will be installed in many of the larger cities of the United States, those offices being so located geographically as most conveniently to serve the rapidly growing number of theaters which have contracted for the exclusive service of natural color motion photographs furnished by this company.

As a result of the advertising recently appearing in the trade papers, inquiries regarding the service are literally pouring into the office of the Kinemacolor Company of America. The policy of giving each subscriber to the service not only strictly first-run reels, but, in addition, protection against competition, is a policy which will be strictly adhered to.

MIRROR SCREEN POPULAR.

F. P. Bloomfield, traveling representative of the Mirror Screen Co., of Shelbyville, Ind., is having great success in Chicago and in the Middle West. Following is a copy of an order signed by Jones, Linick and Schaefer, who own the Orpheum on State street:

"Gentlemen: Ship us at once one of your 'Snow White Velvet' Mirror Screens, size 13ft. 6in. by 18ft., fully warranted as per catalogue, and to be specially manufactured for our theater in Chicago on State St., known as the Orpheum Theater, for which we agree to pay $1000, f. o. b. factory. Terms are as follows: $100.00 accompanies this order, balance to be paid on installation of said screen."

This letter is dated Jan. 4th, 1913.

"THE MELBURN CONFESSION" (Essanay).

A strong dramatic subject of the gripping kind is found in "The Melburn Confession." This subject is a pure, practical portrayal, which pleases photoplay patrons. A sure fire hit, and an exceptionally good box office attraction.

Godfrey Melburn quarrels over his wife's extravagances, and reprimands her of it. That night, a burglar enters their their home and kills Mrs. Melburn. Melburn is arrested for the murder of his wife. Melburn's father, an aristocratic gentleman, tells his daughter, Mabel, that if his son is found guilty, he will disinherit Godfrey's baby son in favor of his cousin. The cousin, a shrewd lad in his twenties, calls on Godfrey in his cell at the county jail. Godfrey gives him a statement declaring that he, Godfrey, is innocent of the charge against him. Desiring the inheritance, the cousin forges the confession and gives it to Mabel. The reporters call father home. Mabel substitutes the confession for a plain piece of paper. Reading an imaginary confession or statement to the reporters and becoming aware that they are suspicious of what she is reading, she throws it into the grate. She leaves the room and the reporters depart. One, a young girl, thinking she has been misled by the loyal sister, returns, and is met by the cousin, who gives her the forged confession. At this point the sister returns and pleads with the reporter for the return of the false document. The reporter, with a heart of a loving mother, seeing Godfrey's infant son, destroys the paper. Mabel is then notified that her brother has been found guilty of murder and will be electrocuted at midnight. The electric chair is put in preparation. Five minutes of twelve, Steve Hicks, the burglar murderer, confesses his guilt to a judge of the night court. The judge immediately telephones the death chamber, and Godfrey Melburn is set free. He returns to his home, where he is met by his loyal sister and infant son. Godfrey falls weakly into his sister's outstretched arms and thanks God for his narrow escape.

Scene from "The Melburn Confession" (Essanay).

E. H. Calvert as Godfrey Melburn is splendid. Miss Frances Mason portrays her part exceedingly well as Melburn's sister Mabel.

This picture is booked for release Wednesday, January 29.

KLEINE'S CINES AND ECLIPSE.

A program of interesting and pleasing variety consisting of two strong, well-acted dramas and a first-class comedy is promised by George Kleine for the week ending January 15th, 1913.

"She Shall Not Know" is to be the Tuesday Cines. It describes the self-sacrifice and loving devotion of a girl who is forced to meet almost single-handed the misfortunes which visit a household after the death of the fond father. The family lawyer informs her that the estate is practically bankrupt, which fact she is forced to keep from her prostrated mother, who would not be able to bear the shock of the bad news. It is interesting to witness the many subterfuges and excuses which she uses in her efforts to guard the fact from her parent who entirely unsuspecting the real circumstances calmly arranges for her daughter's dowry in connection with a proposed marriage. Of course, the daughter is finally compelled to make a grave decision. She must either reveal to her mother the truth, or else sacrifice her own happiness. After a short struggle in her heart she determines upon the latter way and writes a note to her sweetheart breaking the engagement, that her mother might be shielded from the mortification of their poverty.

Scene from "Plot and Counterplot" (Cines-Kleine).

"Just Missed Him," the Wednesday Eclipse, is a first-class comedy, describing the antics of Sam Slick, who affords much amusement in his many hair-raising escapes from the police. Half a dozen times the minions of the law appear to have him firmly in their power, but somehow the slippery fellow manages to wriggle from their grasp in the most astonishing manner. It is a film that will bring many a shriek of laughter from young and old.

On with this subject is an interesting travelogue entitled "The Manchester Ship Canal," which takes us upon a trip along this busy canal from Easton to Manchester, during which we are shown many flourishing towns along the way and several marvelous feats of engineering.

For the Saturday release "Plot and Counterplot" is a detective story of unusual worth. Detective Norton is engaged to investigate the mysteries which surround the clever machinations of two suspected guests at a house party. The latter boldly attempt to throw him off the scene by inventing several false clues, but the sleuth finally suspects the real facts in the case and manages to overhear their plans. The climax is especially startling and well worked out. While the detective and the robber-guest are walking together in the park, they are suddenly surrounded by six masked men who appear to be accomplices of the "guest" who exults in believing that he now has the detective in his power, but at a signal from the latter the men suddenly turn upon the impostor who to his dismay learns that he is under arrest and that his accomplices are in jail. Detective stories of this kind are always much in demand and this one will prove a feature for any program.

"THE SHERIFF'S STORY" (Essanay).

In "The Sheriff's Story" can be seen how a desperate outlaw outwits a sheriff. This story is excellent in its thorough portrayal.

Sheriff Coverdale, of Custer County, Wyo., visits his relatives in New York City. During his stay he joins one of the local clubs there. One night at the club, several of the members ask the sheriff to tell them a good story of some of his experiences in the West. Sheriff Coverdale tells them that he had a prisoner once, and like all other prisoners claimed he was innocent. The prisoner, Tom Racey, had a scheming wife with a remarkable personality and clever ability. Her shrewd manner assisted her materially in gaining entrance to the jail, where her husband has been lodged. While the sheriff's back was turned she handed Tom a note. After his wife had left the cell, Tom reads the note which tells him that he can escape by using the enclosed files. Tom files his way to freedom. The sheriff is notified and goes in pursuit. Discovered among the bushes, Sheriff Coverdale fires at the fleeing outlaw. Racey finally reaches his home. His wife tells him to get into bed immediately and pretend to be dead. Sheriff Coverdale with his deputies, find Racey and believing him to be dead, leave the house. Mr. and Mrs. Coverdale calmly pack up their belongings and leave town. Returning to the home of the bandit the sheriff finds a dummy form in the bed and, the tenants missing. Sheriff Coverdale's fellow club members laugh their appreciation of the splendid story and they all join in a drink. Mr. Arthur Mackley as sheriff plays the role in an exceptional manner.

Scene from "The Sheriff's Story" (Essanay).

This production is booked for release Thursday, Jan. 30.

At the Screen Club on Tuesday evening Dr. Ivory brought in some of his musical friends, who entertained the members present until a late hour. H. H. Hornung played finely on the saxophone, as also did Dr. Ivory. The members of the Emanon Club provided the remainder of the entertainment, also instrumental. They were Edward Reumann, George Dausch, John Kronenbach, Joe Seckinger, Joe Mayer and Frederick Bosworth. At the conclusion of a varied program Vice President John Bunny, on behalf of the club, expressed thanks to the visitors who had made the evening so pleasant.

"THE HUMAN VULTURE" (Gaumont).

THIS is a story in some respects similar to "The Bridge of Sorrow," a recent Gaumont release—similar in so far that it tells of the sorrow brought on a community through the conscienceless acts of a business man more anxious to dispose of a falling property than to take measures to protect the lives of those confided to his keeping. In these two reels there is much to justify the statement that the picture is a fine production. There are strong situations and excellent photography; good acting and fine scenery. One of the scenes that stand out is where a flood of water follows the pick of the miner and flows in on the men at work, gradually submerging them. Another situation that carries suspense is where the injured mine operator is brought to the house of the head foreman and carried into the room where lies the body of the man who had met his death by reason of the negligence of his employer. While the mob of miners and their wives are clamoring in the next room for the key to the door that they may lynch the operator, the injured man rises from his couch and throws back the cover from the face of the dead man and sees the lifeless figure of his foreman. He falls to the floor. The mob breaks in to find the body of the man whose blood they sought.

There is a multiplicity of telegrams and letters thrown on the screen—so many as narrowly to approach a fault. Likewise are the titles too long. Terse language is to be preferred to poetic sentiments on the screen.

Hiram Stone is a coal mine owner. He is negotiating the sale of the Bressac mines, although he is aware of the fact that the property is in danger from infiltration. He rushes through the sale. He sends for Delman, his engineer in charge of the mine, to come to Paris. The engineer leaves Johnson, the head foreman, in charge. On arriving in Paris, Delman protests against the owner's indifference to the safety of the employees. He calls the attention of Stone to a telegram of warning he had sent as to the condition of the property. The engineer is instructed to keep quiet. He refuses money to procure his silence. The engineer sends a telegram to Johnson telling him to stop the night shift from going to work. The transfer of the property is completed. The message is not delivered in time, and the men go to work.

Scene from "The Human Vulture" (Gaumont).

The telegram is handed to Mrs. Johnson, and in terror she starts for the mine. She learn that a disaster has occurred. While this is taking place, Stone is giving a dinner in honor of the new owners of the property. A newspaper is brought into the room where the brilliant function is in full swing. It tells of the disaster in the Bressac mine. The purchasers insist that Stone shall immediately accompany them to the scene. Reluctantly he consents. Down in the mine a worker has opened up a flood of water as he struck his pick into the coal. He and his foreman are overwhelmed. The bodies are recovered, and on a stretcher Johnson's body is conveyed to his home. Stone is thrown from an automobile and badly hurt. He is carried into the home of his old mine foreman and taken into the room where Johnson's body is. The widow is asked by Stone's companions to care for him while they procure a doctor. She is in a quandary. She realizes that the man left in her care is the indirect murderer of her husband. The angry men and women enter her home and demand the key of the room where Stone awaits the arrival of the physician. Then ensues the scene previously described. It is real drama.

Thanhouser Plant Burns

Spectacular Fire Quickly Destroys Factory and Studio at New Rochelle, N. Y. No Casualties.

The plant of the Thanhouser Film Company, including the studio and factory at Grove and Warren Streets and Crescent Avenue, New Rochelle, was destroyed by fire at 1.30 o'clock Monday afternoon, January 13th. The flames started in the perforating room and spread to every part of the big two-story building within a few minutes. Fifty employees, mostly women, remained in the offices on the second floor with Mr. C. J. Hite, the owner, in an effort to save films and apparatus and got out just in time. Mr. Hite, Bert Adler, the publicity agent, and John Desmond, a boy, were cut off from the stairways and had to jump from a second story window. Mr. Hite was the last to leave the building, but even in his excitement, did not overlook his cane, a recent gift from Mrs. Hite.

The fire was a spectacular one, as the chemical contents of the building burned like powder, and there were several loud explosions. Fire Chief James Ross was on the scene two minutes after the alarm was sounded. The chief placed the damage at not more than $75,000, but Mr. Hite's estimate of his loss slightly exceeded that sum. There was no insurance on the building or any of its contents.

None of the actors or actresses employed by the film company were in the building at the time of the fire. Six or eight of them, including Miss Marguerite Snow, the leading woman, and James Cruze, the leading man, were at dinner at their hotels when the alarm was sounded. Mr. Hite said he would at once begin the erection of a new plant at New Rochelle. He promised employment in one or another of his companies for all of the actors and actresses until the new plant was completed.

The Thanhouser producing company in the Middle West, under Mr. Heffron, was to be back at New Rochelle this week, but they have been wired to go right on to Los Angeles to the Thanhouser Company's studio at that point, where a company under Mr. Henderson has been working for a month past. This will make two companies at work there turning out the regular "three-a-week." As all the negatives were saved, they will not even miss one single release as already advertised.

Mr. Lawrence Marston, the producer of the "Star of Bethlehem" and other Thanhouser features, is busy furnishing a studio at New Rochelle and is even now at work on a picture right on the ruins of the fire, entitled "A Thanhouser Heroine." To have their factory and offices completely destroyed and still be able to make their regular schedule of releases without a single interruption is surely a remarkable part of their unfortunate fire. With the two companies at Los Angeles and Mr. Marston already at work in New Rochelle, they could soon make four releases weekly instead of their three-a-week.

The Thanhouser Company is equipping a temporary studio and factory in New Rochelle and will decide within the next few days in regard to a permanent new factory, studios and offices, which will undoubtedly be located in New Rochelle. For the present, they should be addressed at the Cooley Building, New Rochelle, where offices were equipped within a few hours after the fire.

ATTENTION, EXHIBITORS!

In the Selig Polyscope Company's advertisement printed on page 307 of our last week's issue no mention was made of the subjects to be released by that company on January 20 and 21. While these subjects are listed in the Licensed Release Dates, we deem it advisable also to make mention of them in this paragraph. They are "The Lipton Cup," to be released on January 20, a drama in which Sir Thomas Lipton is introduced, and on January 21 a scintillating comedy entitled "A Matrimonial Deluge."

CATASAUQUA AND NOT CHAUTAUQUA.

As there is some similarity between these two words, the printer in setting the little paragraph we printed sometime ago on Messrs. Manley & Roxberry's Palace theater, Front and Walnut streets, Catasauqua, Pa., gave the town to read as Chautauqua. This was not correct and Messrs. Manley & Roxberry called our attention to it, asking that a correction notice be published and incidentally stating that they are giving a pass which will admit all school children whose studies average 95 per cent. for the month into their theater for five different shows. Messrs. Hanley & Roxberry say that the scheme is working fine, that the children are paying much more attention to their lessons and that they have given away each month on an average of fifty passes since they started the scheme.

A FACT! A REALITY!

The device which Edison has invented does not permit the deviation of the picture from the sound by the slightest fraction of a second. With every gesture of the actor in the movies came the proper word at the exact time.

A TALE OF OLD TAHITI

January 31, 1913 Melies, Two Reels

Teria, the daughter of one of the most influential chiefs of Tahiti, falls desperately in love with a young French Midshipman.

She pleads with her father to secure him for a husband. The French officers laugh at the idea.

The Chief orders him taken prisoner. He loves Teria, but loyalty to his country demands his return. He is held captive despite his efforts until an expedition from his vessel comes ashore and tears him away in the very height of his love, with only her last gift—a flower—by which to remember the sweetest experience of his existence.

THE GUIDING LIGHT

January 27, 1913 Lubin, Two Reels

Peter Fife, keeper of the light at Casco Bay, lives alone with his 17 year old daughter born blind.

Harry, the girl's lover, saves all of his scant salary and gives it to Fife for an operation to restore Marie's sight. Dick Drayton is caught in the act of stealing the money and soundly thrashed. Bent on revenge he extinguishes the light. Marie through her quick wit and fortitude restores the light thereby saving Harry and his companions who are in danger of being dashed on the rocks in the darkness.

The brave girl's reward comes in the form of a successful operation and her engagement to Harry.

The Vengeance of Durand

Vitagraph. Two Reels.

or The Two Portraits

Specially Written for the Vitagraph Company by Rex Beach.

The vengeance which he nurtured for another enters his own soul. The weapon which he sharpened with jealousy and hatred and placed in the hand of his daughter is turned against himself. He is cut down in the fury of his wrath.

January 20, 1913.

The Ways of Destiny

Pathe. Two Reels.

Colored Photography.

Horace Blackwell, mortally injured by lightning, discloses to his "adopted" daughter Dorothy the secret of her parentage, giving her the locket which was taken from her neck when she was found on his door-step. Being dispossessed after her foster father's death, she has difficulty in finding work. Eventually she is employed in a department store and is charged with theft. She tells her story to the manager, shows the locket and finds a home with her father.

January 17, 1913.

The Mexican Spy

Lubin. Two Reels.

Tom loves Mary, daughter of the regiment's paymaster. He steals $5,000 from the paymaster's safe to pay his gambling debts to a Mexican spy, who threatens exposure. Mary pawns her jewels to make up the money. Tom disappears, leaving a note that he will return and redeem himself.

He enlists under assumed name and is desperately wounded in fight on Mexican border, at the same time being promoted to lieutenant for bravery. Mary, now a Red Cross nurse, restores him to health and he claims her for his wife.

January 13, 1913.

The Little Minister

Vitagraph. Three Reels.

A young Scotch minister falls in love with a gypsy girl. The ban of the "Kirk" and the condemnation of the austere town folk intervene as a barrier to their marriage. Unexpected circumstances of a startling nature arise and their prejudice and intolerance are removed. Love conquers. The "Little Minister" and "Babbie" are married.

January 10, 1913.

The Wives of Jamestown

Kalem. Two Reels.

Bryan O'Sullivan, an Irish lad of humble birth, in love with Lady Geraldine, becomes engaged in an altercation with her suitor of noble birth. He sails for America and becomes John Pierce, colonist of Jamestown, Va.

Years later Lady Geraldine, captured by Cromwellians, is sent with others to be sold as wives to the colonists. John Pierce, recognizing her, conceals his identity. Finding him an honest man she offers to becomes his wife. He takes her home and just as she is about to end her life, he shaves off his beard revealing his identity and love claims its own.

It Is Never Too Late to Mend

Edison. Two Reels.

The Fielding Brothers, farmers, are served with foreclosure notice. George, the elder, is engaged to Susan Morton, also loved by John Meadows, the wealthiest man in town. Meadows plans George's undoing. George goes to Australia to seek his fortune; Meadow's plans are frustrated by an old Jew, once befriended by George, and George returns with six thousand pounds to clear the home and claim his bride.

January 3, 1913.

Romeo and Juliet

Pathe. Two Reels.

A Wonderfully Colored Film of the Immortal Shakespeare's Great Romantic Play.

Romeo, of the House of Capulets, and Juliet, of the House of Montagues, love each other despite an old family feud. Juliet's father plans her marriage to Tybalt, a man of his choosing. Determined that she shall not, Romeo takes her to the venerable Friar Lawrence and they are secretly married. In a duel with his rival, Romeo wounds Tybalt and is exiled. Juliet on the day she is to be forcibly married to Tybalt, takes a powerful sleeping potion, and falls into a death-like swoon. She is interred in the vault of her ancestors, and Romeo returning home enters the vault and plunges a dagger into his heart. Juliet awakens to see him expiring and plunges the same dagger into her heart.

Co-operation the Keynote of the Gaumont Company

"GET TOGETHER" THEIR MOTTO

The issuance at an early date by the Gaumont Company of a weekly eight-page newspaper, to replace the Gaumont Graphic in its present semi-monthly form, is another effort by Gaumont to put his shoulder to the exhibitor's wheel.

This newspaper will contain photographs from releases of the week and synopsis of each. These photographs, with their accompanying text, can to advantage be hung in the lobbies of theatres, as can also the printed list of the subjects on the Gaumont Weekly. Set in bold, display type, the latter will be productive of that interest which leads people to the cashier's window.

This publication is free to exchange men and exhibitors and will be sent, the Gaumont Company announce, on application to Flushing, New York City.

VITAGRAPH.

TWO SETS OF FURS (Jan. 27).—Young, handsome and wealthy, Gerald Warren goes shopping with his sister. On their way, a particle of dust blows into his eye and he is obliged to stop at an occulist's ta have it removed. To alleviate the pain the doctor gives him a pair of green glasses to wear. At the department store, his sister and he get separated. Through his obscured vision he sees a young lady with a set of furs exactly like his sister's and carrying the same kind of a hand bag. She lays her bag down, he picks it up and tells her to hurry. A floor-walker seeing him pick up the bag and noticing the young lady's surprise, accuses him of stealing. His sister returns and his explanation sets matters straight.

Warren takes the young lady in his auto to her modest home. He learns her name is Miss Gray, and asks the privilege of calling to see her. He calls to see her many times and one evening, he accidentally sees an open letter she has been writing, which discloses that she is in straightened circumstances. He proposes to her and after some hesitation she accepts him. His sister invites her to visit her, preparatory to their marriage. Through the two sets of furs two souls are made happy and Warren's sister is more than pleased.

COKE INDUSTRY (Jan. 27).—The coal and coke regions of Pennsylvania are celebrated all over the world. The coal industry has been very largely exploited and brought to our notice in print and pictures. The coke interests are not so well known, therefore, this picture will prove an entertaining and instructive one.

WHEN MARY GREW UP (Jan. 28).—Impatient and annoyed at Mary's girlish ways, her aunt, with whom he loves, wants her to assume more responsibility and spend her time more profitably. Mary is a regular romp, and cannot control her lightheartedness and buoyant spirit sufficiently to take things seriously. She flirts with the grocer's boy and her aunt locks her in her room. Mary finds a boy's suit she wore in a school play and after dressing herself in the clothes, she climbs out of the window and enjoys a day of perfect freedom. She goes into a neighbor's orchard and steals apples from the tree. John Benson, a young man, who occupies the premises, sees her and gives chase. When he catches her by the collar and shakes her, she pulls away from him and her hat falls off and her long hair falls about her shoulders. He is surprised to learn that she is a girl. He tells her to go home and when she refuses, he picks her up and carries her there, and advises her aunt to keep her close at home.

Mary thinks he is a mean old thing and decides to get square with him. She dresses herself in her grown-up clothes and when he calls at the house to return the hat she had dropped in the orchard, he is stunned to see Mary standing before him transformed into a lovely young lady. He is impressed with her dignified manner and falls hopelessly in love with her. He proposes to her, but she refuses him with apparent scorn. He cannot get Mary out of his mind and the truth is, Mary can think of no one else but him.

Later in the day, they meet by accident at the cross-roads, and when he again tells her he loves her, she confesses she loves him. Clasped in each other's arms, they are so absorbed in each other that they are entirely oblivious to all else.

AND HIS WIFE CAME BACK (Jan. 29).—In the flat opposite Bunny's, just across the air-shaft, lives a very attractive widow. Bunny flirts with her and is caught in the act by his wife, who is going to the country. He tacks down the shade and promises that it will remain that way during her absence. She bids him a fond farewell, but she is no sooner on her way when Bunny unfastens the shade and continues his flirtation with the widow. This continues for two or three days, when an old maid, living in another apartment of the house, sees their doings and considers it her duty to notify Mrs. Bunny of the proceedings. She goes to the telegraph office and sends his wife a wire, advising her to come home at once.

Upon receipt of the telegram, Mrs. Bunny loses no time in packing her grip and starting homeward. That same morning, John tries to cook himself a little breakfast, but makes a mess of it and is doomed to go to business without eating. The widow is solicitous about his comfort and calls to him across the shaft. He goes to the window and shoves a board from her window over to his. She spreads a table cloth on it, and he, with the aid of a cane, and she, with the aid of her parasol, manage to serve Bunny with an excellent meal. Just as he is in the midst of its enjoyment, his wife comes back and catches him. She berates the widow and tirades John. She calls in a carpenter and has the window boarded up, forever shutting out all communication between her husband and the widow.

THE SMOKE FROM LONE BILL'S CABIN (Jan. 30).—To settle her homestead claim in a new and unsettled territory, Mary is obliged to take a long ride over the plains to locate her newly-acquired property. When she reaches her destination it is nightfall. She looks about for a shelter. She has almost come to the conclusion that she will have to pass the night alone, using her blanket as a matress and her saddle as a pillow.

In the far distance, she sees smoke suddenly belch from the stovepipe of Lone Bill's cabin. It is a welcome sight and she hastens to ask for a night's lodging. Bill is only too willing to give up his bed and sleep outdoors himself. The next morning when he starts to prepare breakfast, Mary gives him a hand and as they sit down together at the table, Bill says to himself, "this is something like I have dreamed of for years." Mary is obliged to build a cabin upon her property, which joins Bill's, and he volunteers to put up the house for her. He starts in and Mary proves quite apt with the hammer and saw. Bill and Mary grow very fond of each other and he declares his love for her. Mary thinks the matter over and finally decides to go back home, leaving the following note, expressive of her feelings: "Dear Bill—It is true that I love you, but I fear my love is not strong enough to endure the life out here. I leave on the 2:20 train. Forgive me and forget your little pal, Mary." Bill calls over to see her shortly after she has gone and finds the note on the door. He hastily jumps on his horse to catch the train. Mary, on her way to the depot meets a parson and tells him that she has decided to go back to her claim and marry Bill. Bill, who has taken a short-cut to the station, gets there just as the 2:20 train is pulling out. Sad and lonely, he turns back and as he is approaching his cabin, he sees smoke arising from the chimney. He hastens forward and enters. He sees a pair of gloves on the table and when he picks them up, recognizes them as Mary's. He kisses them. Mary slips from behind the curtain of the door and covers his eyes with her hands, saying, "Guess, who it is." Bill turns about and beholds Mary. He cannot understand until the preacher steps out from the other room. Bill knows what it means. Too happy for words he seizes Mary's hand and in less time than it takes to tell it, they are married. Bill is no longer "Lone."

HOW "FATTY" MADE GOOD (Jan. 31).—Hughie is one of those fat, good-natured country boys, who is a rival for the hand of a girl. His rival is a thin, lanky youth by the name of Zeb. Hughie falls from the good graces of the girl when he falls out of the apple tree trying to get an apple for the girl. Zeb happens along and, fortunately for him, happens to have an apple, which he hands to the girl. They leave Hughie sitting on the ground.

A show hits town, starring one of those ham actors. Zeb gets a couple of tickets and takes the girl, Lucy, to see the show. Lucy flirts with the leading actor, who responds. Lucy gets Zeb to take her to the back door after the show. The actor comes out, he recognizes the girl and invites her to have an ice-cream soda. She accepts. They both exit, leaving Zeb in the same frame of mind as they left Hughie. Lucy falls for the cheap flattery of the actor, who is swelled up over his success and inveigles Lucy to elope with him.

While all this is going on, Hughie, who has it in for Zeb for stealing his girl, meets an old friend, a prize-fighter, who is training for a bout. He receives boxing instructions from him and becomes quite handy in the art of self-defence. He goes looking for Zeb but happens to come across the actor planning to elope with Lucy. He makes up his mind to throttle the scheme. He overhears the actor engage a cabby to meet him after the show and drive Lucy and he to the station. Hughie is there on time, and when the actor and the girl enter the carriage, he quickly jumps on the seat, whips up the horses and drives off. Instead of driving them to the station, he drives them into the country to a lonely spot, and opens the carriage door. The actor indignantly demands an explanation and he gets it in the shape of a good licking from Hughie, which Lucy witnesses. Lucy, by this time realizes her escape from the villain. She gratefully thanks Hughie for rescuing her from an awful fate and becomes his only own.

IT MADE HIM MAD (Feb. 1).—The Equity Real Estate Company, about to close a large deal in an up-state town, sends Joseph I. Smith, their trusted clerk, to attend to the details of the transaction. Joe, who is naturally a timid and modest man, starts on his journey, unconscious that John I. Sullivan, a heavyweight champion, has arranged to come to the same town to spend a couple of weeks' vacation. The manager of the only hotel has been notified of the pugilist's coming and feeling honored at his expected arrival, whispers the news about town, with the result that all the prominent citizens with a band of music, are at the train to welcome him. It happens that the pugilist misses his train the day on which Joseph Smith arrives in Comeonton. The initials on the bag, J. I. S., being the same as John I. Sullivan's, the enthusiastic citizens mistake Joe for the fighter and he is involuntarily escorted to the hotel with great eclat. He is no sooner ushered into the hostelry when Chick, an ex-pugilist, meets him and challenges him to a bout, which must be decided at once. Joe tries to protest and explain that he is no scrapper, but whether he will or not, the manager and the other dignitaries pitch a ring in the hotel waiting-room, force a pair of boxing gloves on Joe's hands and he finds himself the victim of Chick's onslaughts. He tries to escape them, but it is useless. Chick lands one on Joe's nose and that is the last straw. Joe gets mad and goes hammer and tongs at his fat antagonist, whom he knocks out with a desperate uppercut. He doesn't stop at this, he sails into the manager and all the other would-be sports and soon has them all floored. Calmly lighting a cigar, he ascends the staircase to his rooms and every time his fallen foes get up, he turns around, as if to descend and they fall back in their places, trembling with fear. As he stands upon the landing a conqueror, John I. Sullivan arrives and Joe, not yet thoroughly calm, makes a dive for him and Mr. Sullivan beats it unceremoniously.

THE VENGEANCE OF DURAND—PART ONE (Jan. 24—2 reels).—Intense jealousy takes possession of Matthew Durand when his wife's faster brother, Carl, comes from Paris and she greets him affectionately. Carl has been studying art in Europe and she has not seen him in many years. She had almost despaired of ever seeing him again and he brings back the ties of their early childhood. Durand is a man strong in his likes and dislikes; unreasonably so, and his wife's adopted relationship to Carl does not in any way ameliorate

The Proof — We Cannot Exceed Demand

Every factory begins its year by estimating its output and hopes to exceed the estimate. Few do.

Every manufacturer endeavors to get ahead a few machines. We cannot. The orders come in so fast we can just "break even"—Orders vs. shipments.

Our orders have exceeded our estimate 20%.

Our force has worked overtime for three months to enable us to "hold our own."

Yes—As Usual—We Originated the Machine Switch-Board

Yes—It Is Being Copied—With Modifications —But on a Much Cheaper Scale

Our Quality Is Never Copied — Why?

Because if YOU are satisfied with something cheaper at the same price "who should worry?'

his anger or consideration. His jealousy develops into an overpowering hatred for Carl which displays itself in no uncertain manner when Carl paints Mrs. Durand's portrait, which she admires and prizes very highly; for Carl has not only displayed his wonderful genius in the work, but has been inspired by the beauty of his foster-sister, who is a most charming woman. Durand interprets his wife's smile as reproduced in the portrait as an evidence of her admiration for the handsome artist and younger man. In fury, he destroys the portrait and determines to question Carl's right to show any attention to his wife. He meets the artist, insults him and challenges him to a duel. On the eve of the encounter, Mrs. Durand pleads with her husband, for the sake of their child not to give way to his passion, endanger his life and bring disgrace upon his family.

He is obdurate. The duel is arranged. Both men, with their seconds, appear upon the field of honor, take their positions and just as they are about to discharge their pistols at each other, Mrs. Durand rushes between them to stop them. It is too late. Carl, not seeing the woman in time, pulls the trigger, the bullet intended for his opponent passes through her body and she falls dead. Carl returns to Paris and Durand is left alone with his little daughter.

His hatred for Carl turns to revenge and he educates his child, Marion, to avenge the death of her mother, filling her young mind with a hatred for Carl, keeping her in ignorance of the real relationship of her mother and the young artist, and the circumstances attending her death.

Ten years later, Durand, with his daughter, now a young lady, visits Paris and they meet Carl, who has now become a famous painter. Durand whispers to his daughter and pointing to Carl, tells her, "There goes the man who killed your mother."

PART TWO—This is the beginning of the end, in which Matthew Durand hopes to satisfy the depth of his revenge and hopes to completely humiliate and strike down his victim. He goes with his daughter to Carl's studio and makes arrangements with the artist to paint Miss Durand's portrait. She refuses to reveal her identity and this lends an additional interest to the painting of the mysterious stranger. Her father reminds her that this is her opportunity to keep the promise which she has made to him in memory of her mother. Left alone, she puts into practice that subtle art that alone belongs to a fascinating woman. She plays upon Carl's susceptibilities to her attractiveness and while he is engaged in painting her picture, she leisurely sits at the piano and plays "The Rosary." He stops his painting, walks over to her side and taking up the theme of the music, their conversation awakens in both a mutual appreciation for each other, which, after subsequent sittings, grows into a strong friendship, until she finds herself in love with the man whom she had promised to betray.

Carl calls to see her father to tell him of his love for his daughter. Durand now makes himself known to Carl, laughs him to scorn and tells his daughter to strike the blow which will make his triumph complete. She refuses to reject Carl and her father, in his fury, tries to strike him, overturns a lamp, which sets fire to the house, and before they can escape, it is in flames. Carl lifts Marion in his arms, forces his way through the burning building and carries her to safety. Matthew Durand tries to follow them, is caught in the falling timbers and crushed beneath them, a victim of his own retribution.

After Carl's recovery from the injuries he received in Marion's rescue, he and she, in the happiness of their union, recount the memories of the past and Carl tells her that which was hidden from her by her father, the truth of her mother's death, and their adopted relationship.

CINES.

TAMING THE SPOOKS (Jan. 18)—Stout and Thynne advertise themselves as professors of spiritualism, and with the assistance of Teddy, their confederate, arrange a seance. When the guests are seated around the table, it begins to perform very extraordinary antics and finally moves slowly out of the door, for Teddy has tied a string to it and is proceeding down the hall. The scheme works to perfection until he meets a friend upon the stairway, who gives him a shove that sends him rolling out into the street, followed by the table and the astonished company. Away they run until they encounter the police, who, when informed of the fraud, carry the three impostors off to jail.

AN ABSENT-MINDED LOVER (Jan. 18).—Dickie is a most impressionable young fellow and cannot resist the sight of a pretty face. He is in the midst of making love to a pretty serving-maid when he is interrupted by the arrival of a letter from his father objecting to his marriage with a charming young widow because she has no money. Dickie writes a note to the widow declaring his love, but absent-mindedly sends her his father's letter and leaves the one that he intended to mail upon the table, where the maid discovers it and believes it is for her. Dickie certainly gets "his" when he tries to pacify the two enraged ladies.

SHE SHALL NOT KNOW (Jan. 21).—Soon after the death of her father, Amy is informed by the family lawyer that no money will remain when the estate is settled. This news fills the home with gloom and apprehension, intensified by the fact that the prostrated mother cannot possibly endure the shock that certainly would follow cognizance of the true state of affairs.

That misfortunes usually come when least prepared for, proves true in this instance. Even before the mother is completely recovered, Fred Hampton asks for her consent to his marriage with Amy. In the presence of her lover Amy is informed by her mother that the amount of the dowry has been arranged. Momentarily she muses. Then her countenance becomes flushed with embarrassment, and, bursting into tears, she rushes from the room, to the great surprise of her mother and her sweetheart.

In her breast rages a battle between love and duty. She loves Fred with all sincerity, but her mother must not know that there is no money with which to make up the dowry. Only one thing remains to be done; she resolves to sacrifice her own happiness for the sake of her mother. She painfully writes Fred a letter explaining that she can never love him, and that their marriage is impossible.

Her mother shall never know!

PLOT AND COUNTERPLOT (Jan. 25).—After Detective Norton has heard Mr. Drake, one of the guests of Lord Roland, relate an exciting story of how he was wounded, and Miss De Bar (another guest), abducted by a band of robbers, he immediately takes up the case. Following up the supposed trail of the bandits, and finding no signs of a struggle, the detective is seized by a sudden suspicion, and hastening back to the residence of Lord Roland, finds the family bound hand and foot, and the house ransacked. Later, hiding among the shrubbery, he overhears Mr. Drake order an accomplice to be waiting by the old Black Oak at ten o'clock with six men.

There is no time to lose. The police are summoned, and instructed to guard the secret spot. Norton then waits outside the mansion for Mr. Drake. They meet face to face. The latter, to conceal his surprise, calmly invites the detective to walk with him in the direction of the old Black Oak. When they reach their destination, six masked men suddenly leap out from their hiding place and seize Norton, while Drake laughs exultingly, believing that he has trapped the detective. His joy is short-lived, however, for at a signal from Norton, the men turn upon the robber-guest, who, dumbfounded, learns that they are detectives, and that he and his gang are now prisoners.

A LESSON FROM THE PAST (Jan. 28).—Aunt Betty is a charming old lady, who, having tasted the bitterness of disappointed love, does not wish to see others suffer in the same manner.

She is full of sympathy for Margaret, her niece, who comes to her tearfully relating that the father of her fiancé refuses to sanction their engagement. By a strange coincidence, the father, a rich widower, proves to be the man that Aunt Betty was engaged to forty years ago, and for whose sake she has remained single all her life.

With a determination to save Margaret from life-long misery, Aunt Betty visits the stern father, who after repeated refusals, finally consents at least to pay them a visit.

Upon his arrival, he finds Margaret arrayed in Aunt Betty's old-fashioned dresses of long ago. Seeing at a glance the striking resemblance, memories of the old love return to him, and his proud heart soon yields. When later the two couples are gathered together at dinner, it is a question who is the happiest of the four.

THE DOCTOR'S LOVE AFFAIR (Feb. 1).—Dr. Pierre, who lives in a palatial home, surrounded by fragrant flowers and stately trees, has a great admiration for white geraniums. One day a new object of admiration comes into his life—a charming young woman, Louise, who is first seen by him walking in the neighbor's garden. Love begins to burn in his heart. As a token of affection he sends her a large white geranium, which is received very coldly, much to his sorrow. Still hopeful, he persists in sending her flowers, each time failing to receive encouragement.

Louise is suddenly taken ill. Dr. Pierre is summoned at once and faithfully cares for her until recovery, after which his heart is greatly troubled over the continued attentions of another suitor. Finally, completely discouraged by an unsuccessful proposal, the doctor sails to a distant country.

One day, soon after his arrival, he is very much surprised to find one of his favorite flowers upon a table in his new home, and is completely overcome with joy when the lady he loves enters the room exclaiming, "See where love has led me!"

ECLIPSE.

JUST MISSED HIM! (Jan. 22).—Sam Slick is an extremely slippery fellow, and leads his pursuers a long and arduous chase. They first stealthily attempt to surprise him in his room, but just when they are most certain of capturing him, he manages to wriggle out from their grasp. The minions of the law are persistent, and at last their efforts meet with success. Wishing to take no chances, they carefully place him in a cell and fasten the bars, but later the sly fellow even makes his escape from there in a most extraordinary manner.

THE MANCHESTER SHIP CANAL (Jan. 22).—We are taken upon an interesting trip along this busy ship canal from Eastham to Manchester, during which we are shown many flourishing towns along the way and several marvelous feats of engineering.

THE BULGARIAN ARMY IN THE BALKANS (Jan. 29).—Showing the Bulgarian Army near the town of Jardzello, at the time of the beginning of hostilities with Turkey. The film depicts in order: "the forward movement of the infantry and cavalry," "dismounting for a short rest and mess," "another advance march," "mounted and dismounted target practice and gun drill," "a cavalry charge," "the 5th battery of artillery limbering up," "the regiment fording a river," "reviewing of the troops by Tsar Ferdinand," and "the cavalry advancing to the frontier."

HUBBY DOES THE COOKING (Jan. 29).—Hubby becomes disgusted with the bill-of-fare at home, and decides to fire the cook and prepare the meals himself. He sails in with great gusto, but after spoiling every dish he attempts, smashing a large quantity of crockery, and upsetting the contents of the frying pan upon himself, he is forced to call upon his wife for assistance. He has decided never to venture into the kitchen again.

EDISON.

THE DANCER (Jan. 27).—Among a group of little girls dancing to a street piano, one attracts the attention of a sweet, old master of the art of dancing, and he gives her tickets to the theater and her first opportunity of seeing professional work in this line. When, after a lapse of some few years, he returns to the town, he finds that she has gone to work in the braid mill, but that her heart is stillfilled with the love of the poetry of motion and her work is a terrible drudgery in consequence.

The old man's heart is touched and on talking with the girl he finds that her mother has convinced her that dancing is a sin, consequently he presents his side of the argument, telling her that the gift is not one to be despised, but to be cultivated, and going to her home he makes her dance before her aunt and finally her mother. The latter, who had known dancing only of the cruder sort, sees in her daughter's movement a beauty and simplicity which opens her eyes to the possibilities of this art, and when the old man presents his plea for its cultivation, she gives her consent. Of course, the little girl with her heart in her work, becomes a true artist, and it is not difficult to see that the son of the old dancing master, himself a disciple of the art, will be likely to share her joy in her chosen work.

A DAY THAT IS DEAD (Jan. 28).—Heart strings that once were rent asunder, neath love's most gentle touch, ofttimes in old age quiver, when memory strikes a sacred chord like balsam to a soul with sorrow wrung. So be it, in this pictorial translation of Alfred Tennyson's poem, "Break, Break, Break." An echo of the past is resounded and a story of love and memory falls from the lips of an aged man, like a storm that vents its wrath and passing on the celebrated actor, and full company from the Theatre Francais, Paris. In respect of plot, no other Greek play compares with it. Where dramatic interest is as strong as it is in this play, character interest is apt to be weak, yet in Oedipus Rex every character is interesting, from the birth of Oedipus to the tragical prophecy of an old soothsayer that the child would live to murder his father and marry his mother.

into infinite space, leaves behind the random ruins of its wicked grave.

A lad once was he, in love with a maiden who dwelt by the sea. 'Twas all beautiful in their youthful, loving hearts. Nor did he think then that cruel fate would interfere and pluck the happiness from out his life as the chill breath of a summer night sometimes a rose will kill. They were separated, however, by parental objection for many a weary day. Through grief and absence the girl is stricken ill and the father that stood in his daughter's light, relents from his firmness and seeks the father who marred his son's future life.

"My daughter is dying," the old man cried. "Your son, your son, for God let him come to her side." And he came, as did the fathers, to the cottage by the sea. A scene then followed that strikes deep in the heart. The walls within maintained a silence serene and calm. The wind outside moaned a requiem, whilst the fathers stood with heads bowed down, the lovers locked in a last embrace.

Her eyes grew brighter, she clutched him tighter, then like the morning stars in the mystic realm, they gradually grew dim and the flutter of the eyelid as the soul departed, left the dust he loved with him.

Thus goes the story the old man tells. The waves still break upon the rockbound coast, and the passing ships their havens seek, but without "the touch of the vanished hand and the sound of the voice that is still."

A SERENADE BY PROXY (Jan. 29).—Colonel Jackson, a well-to-do farmer, forbids young Thomas, a neighbor's son, to have any further communication with his daughter, Muriel. Considering her own romance shattered, Muriel lends herself to helping Zeb Hawkins, the chore boy, in winning the affections of Molly, the housemaid, whose head has been completely turned by constantly reading sensational novels. She refuses to consider Zeb as a suitor because he is not romantic enough.

Muriel advises Zeb to emulate Molly's idea of a lover by serenading her. Zeb is anything but musical, so he gets a phonograph, points the horn towards Molly's window that night and grinds out "Love Me and the World is Mine," to such purpose that her heart is melted. Unfortunately, Molly does not possess a singing voice, but she induces Muriel to do the singing for her while she, Molly, stands at the open window and makes appropriate gestures. Soon after Molly accepts Zeb as her future husband, but not until he agrees to elope with her.

The night of the elopement Zeb comes cautiously down the ladder with Molly's telescope bag and young Thomas, who happens along, mistakes him for a burglar. Anxious to cover himself with glory in the eyes of Muriel's father, he attacks the supposed burglar in the dark and a rough and tumble fight ensues, in which Molly joins. Muriel, hearing the rumpus, hastens down the ladder just as Zeb and Molly streak it across the lawn.

Thomas and Muriel recognize each other at the foot of the ladder, and by this time Colonel Jackson arrives on the scene. He accuses the young people of eloping and in vain do they try to convince the irate father to the contrary. Under the stress of circumstances the spirit of Thomas awakens and he boldly tells the colonel that he may as well have the game as the name, and runs off with Muriel, pursued by her father. Joining Zeb and Molly, they drive to the nearest clergyman, who has an unexpected double wedding on his hands. The final scene brings unexpected laughter.

A PERILOUS CARGO (Jan. 31).—Jack Arnold, captain of the "Flying Dutchman," a schoner, is betrothed to Lorrie, the daughter of the lighthouse keeper. Several unprofitable voyages in succession have left Jack high and dry on the financial rocks and he and Lorrie decide that they must wait at least two years before they can marry. Fate, however, decreed otherwise, and sent two Central American revolutionists in search of a ship that would land a cargo of powder at an obscure port near the Isthmus.

Jack, with the usual impetuosity of a sailorman in love, accepted the commission, with the proviso that he be paid five thousand dollars the moment the cargo was landed aboard the "Flying Dutchman." Lorrie warned him against the undertaking, and vowed she would rather wait ten years than to have him embark in such an undertaking, but Jack had given his word and left her to load for the voyage.

With the five thousand dollars in his pocket and a fair wind Jack sailed out of the harbor on the long journey to the tropics. Just outside the harbor a tired sailor fell asleep with a lighted pipe in hih hand and the forecastle was soon in a blaze. With such a cargo aboard, pandemonium soon reigned. Jack started the men to casting the powder kegs overboard, but as they saw the fire eating its way nearer to the perilous cargo, one of them felled Jack to the deck and they took to the only boat, leaving him unconscious and with no apparent chance of rescue, but Lorrie, in the lighthouse, taking a last look at her lover's departing ship, saw the smoke and realized the danger. Jack had headed the boat ashore near the lighthouse and Lorrie arrived on the beach just as the deserters did.

Quickly jumping into a rowboat, she reached the now beached boat, searched the blazing ship and revived Jack just in time to save them both from the terrific explosion which blew the boat to pieces.

LUBIN.

THE GUIDING LIGHT (2 reels—special) (Jan. 27).—At the head of Casco Bay, Peter Fife, keeper of the lighthouse nearby, lives alone with his beautiful seventeen-year-old daughter. The girl has been blind from birth, and the contact with jovial fisher-maiden companions so saddens her that the old father has determined to try to have her sight restored. This he is unable to do for financial reasons, but Harry, a fisherman, the girl's lover, saves all of his scant salary for months until he accumulates enough to pay for an operation. Dick Drayton, a half-witted vagabond, sees Harry give the money to Marie's father, and he determines to steal it.

That evening the lighthouse keeper catches Drayton in the act of taking the money, and he ejects him from the house, after administering a severe thrashing. The unsuccessful thief, convulsed with rage, determines, as a revenge, tu put out the lamp in the lighthouse. On the night that he has selected for his act, Harry and a crew of sailors are returning in their fishing smack across the bay. Drayton is successful in his attempt to put out the light, and for the first time in the history of the lighthouse, the beacon fails to shine. From the window of his cottage Fife sees that the light is out. He hurries from the house in time to encounter Drayton, who is stealthily escaping past the cottage door. A fistic encounter with Drayton follows, and the old keeper is knocked unconscious by a blow with a large club. Marie hears the sounds of the fight and, groping her way into the darkness of the night, she stumbles across the form of her father's body. The old man tells Marie what has happened and then lapses back into unconsciousness. The bravery of the girl instantly asserts itself. She determines, in spite of her blindness, to re-light the beacon. The path to the lighthouse lies along the edge of a towering precipice. Carefully feeling her way, she starts her ascent to the light. Out in the bay Harry and his companions, helpless without the light, are being washed towards the rocks. Step by step Marie is covering the distance to the lighthouse, with certain death below yawning for her. Almost exhausted, she reaches the wall of the lighthouse. She climbs the narrow spiral stairway inside. Up to the top of the tower she ascends and soon her fingers are groping with the familiar apparatus of the light. She is successful in lighting the lamp, and the broad stream of light flashes across the bay just in time to save the boat in which Harry and his companions are returning. Marie falls to the floor, exhausted, and a few minutes later is found by Harry, who has landed successfully. Meanwhile neighbors have discovered the body of the lighthouse keeper, and he is revived. The brave girl's reward comes in the form of a successful operation for blindness and her engagement to Harry.

THE GIRL OF SUNSET PASS (Jan. 27).—To the little town of Sunset Pass came the Widow Brown and little daughter, Ruth. The little mother had consumption, and although she grew weaker each day, she bravely concealed it from her daughter, until death placed its hand upon her. She was only a dance pianist, but was beloved by all and even Big Bill, the cruel proprietor of the dance hall, paused for a moment to look upon her face as they carried her out. Jack Keen, the best and squarest gambler in Sunset Pass, closed his game when he heard the strains of "Nearer my God to Thee." The player was little Ruth, the widow's daughter, who wanted to begin where her mother left off. Jack stepped forward to learn who the player was, just as the proprietor was about to eject the little child for playing a hymn in his dance hall, but Jack informed him that Ruth would from that moment be known as his adopted daughter, and demands the respect of all who heard him make the announcement.

Ruth was only eight years old, when she was started off to school. Ned Burton, the minister's son, was eleven. Both met as they were bundled into the stage, bound for the nearby city of Sacramento. They grew up together and became sweethearts. At last there came a day when Ned asked her for her hand in marriage, and she agreed. After getting "Uncle Jack's" consent they hurried to tell Ned's father, who was the only minister in Sunset Pass. After learning that Ned had the consent of Ruth's foster father, he agreed to marry them, but Ruth had not forgotten the love and kindness bestowed upon her by her "Uncle Jack." At the eleventh hour, she broke away during the ceremony and hurried back to the one whom she really loved and trusted more than anyone else in the world.

ON THE THRESHOLD (Jan. 28).—Dick Cartridge, though possessed of a dogmatic nature, loves his wife and their child. An occasion arises one evening at dinner where the husband shows his bad side. A bitter quarrel ensues between them because of her desire to go to the theater with a gentleman friend of the family, but the butler announces her escort, who is in the drawing room. Mr. Cartridge commands her to remain at home. Giving the matter little thought she asserts herself and refusing to obey him, adjourns to the drawing room, joins her escort and leaves. As she is about to enter the auto she regrets what has happened and dismissing her friend, decides to visit her mother.

Mr. Cartridge feeling that he was right and that his wife's love for him has changed, dresses to leave, but instead wanders into his study where the warm hearth fire attracts him to his easy chair. He sits and thinks over the affair. A short time afterward his little daughter enters in her nightie. Failing to arouse him she climbs in his lap and falls asleep. As he is thinking he falls into a reverie, and looking into the fire, sees the following vision scenes: their first meeting; his walk through the conservatory with his sweetheart; the proposal; the church and their wedding; the nurse announcing the new born baby; his trip from his study to his wife's bed-room viewing the baby, and last, his wife drinking and surrounded by her many admirers in a large reception room.

Mrs. Cartridge, having left her mother's home, rushes on and going up to her child's room fails to find her in her place. Entering the study she discovers her husband and demands to know where her daughter is. As she draws nearer to him she sees her child. She kneels at his feet and confesses she had spent the evening with her mother. All is forgiven and love again dominates the home.

WHAT'S IN A NAME (Jan. 30).—Winter Green leaves the house one morning without kissing his young wife good-bye. He goes to his office and reads his morning mail. One of the letters is from another real estate man, who makes an appointment with Green for 1 P. M. Green takes his hat and coat and goes out, but in the hall he gets paint on the coat and must go back to his office to change. He sends his coat home with a note to have it cleaned and to send another coat by the boy. His wife empties the pockets of the coat sent home and finds the note from the real estate man, whose name is G. A. Wifey. She becomes jealous and starts for Green's office. Green has left to keep the appointment and while she is sitting at his desk a boy brings a telegram which she signs for and reads, "Get rid of the old woman today, sell to Undertaker. Let me know immediately, Wifey." Mrs. Green goes out of the office and meets her husband with another man. She shows him the letter and telegram and he introduces his wife to the other man, Geo. A. Wifey. Thinking it a good joke, they all go to lunch, where they meet another man, who is J. Undertaker, another real estate man.

THE HOUSE IN THE WOODS (Jan. 31).—Major Morris, a country gentleman, has an adopted daughter, Marian Lane, to whom he proposes to leave his fortune. His nephew, George Morris, is in love with Marian, but more particularly with her prospective wealth. Wishing to obtain a portrait of her, Morris engages a young artist, Alfred Earle. The picture is painted in the style of a famous masterpiece.

A speedy attachment springs up between Marian and Earle. George, jealous, comes upon Marian's picture one day at its completion, and, taking a knife, rents it. Earle declares his love, the major consents and Earle and Marian are married. The major gives them a pretty bungalow on his estate, called "The House In The Woods." They take possession, and for a time all goes well. Then George begins the machinations whereby he effects an estrangement between his uncle and Marian. A famous portrait in the major's library mysteriously disappears. George, who has himself stolen it, convinces his uncle that it was taken by Earle and sold for a large sum. Morris in indignant, accuses Earle. Earle, equally indignant, denies, and he and Marian, deeply wounded, leave "The House in the Woods."

Five years later, Earle, unsuccessful, is living with his wife and child in a garret, but struggling heroically. George sends a false telegram to his uncle, saying Marian is dead. The major turns to George for solace, and makes him his heir. George now enters upon a life of depravity, which hurries him to an untimely end. Meanwhile, Marian, seeing that Earle is breaking under the strain, decides to take their little boy and secretly return to "The House in the Woods," hoping for a reconciliation with Morris. One day while Earle is working, unobserved she slips off with the child. She goes to "The House in the Woods." Rumors spread that the place is "haunted." Morris seeking an explanation, offers Sam, his negro butler, ten dollars to spend the night there. The negro agrees, and, comfortably settled, is enjoying a supper, when the door opens and a white robed figure stands on the threshold. Sam makes a dash for the window and disappears. Determined to solve the mystery, the next night Morris himself goes to the little house. As he reads he falls asleep. The door opens. A beautiful child enters, approaches and lays its hand on the major's knee. Startled, the major wakes. Again the door opens. Marian enters; she goes timidly toward him. Before he realizes that she is not a spirit, a carriage arrives. Earle springs out, enters, and rushes to his wife and child. He has sold his great picture and is rich and famous. He hands the major a letter; it is a dying confession of George's guilt and of Earle's innocence. Morris reads the letter and grasps the hand of Earle; he draws Marian to him, tenderly kisses her, and reaching down, lifts the child in his arms.

SHE MUST ELOPE (Jan. 30).—Mary, a novel-reading old maid, is courted by Harry, who needs the money. Father is willing enough to have her off his hands, but Mary insists that they elope, so father helps Harry get a ladder. That night they start out, but the auto breaks down and Mary, fearful that they are pursued, will not wait for Harry to fix it, but starts off on foot. She grows tired and they take a dray, changing to a boat when they pass the water; but the boat overturns and Harry catches a donkey for her. She doesn't like riding without a saddle, so she tries the road again and arrives at the minister's in a wheelbarrow. There they hire a rig to take them back to the auto and the journey is completed in the car. Mary kneels for forgiveness and father, not only forgives, but hands Harry a bunch of money, which Mary takes away from him, letting him have half a dollar.

PRIVATE SMITH (Feb. 1).—Along the Mexican border Troop C of the 15th Cavalry is camped. John Burton lives nearby upon his ranch with his wife, Lucy, and daughter, Blanche, who has fallen in love with Sergeant Ross, to whom, with her parents' consent, she is engaged. Private Smith is disgusted with life in the army. With all his soul he longs for the day when, his enlistment expired, he will again be a free man. He has written a friend at Washington to ascertain the terms upon which he can be released, and is advised that he can purchase his discharge for $100. Smith can see no chance of getting this amount and considers his case as hopeless.

One day Sergeant Ross is given $100 by the commanding officer to go into town to purchase supplies. Ross is told that the wagon and escort will report at his tent within half an hour. On his way back to his tent, the sergeant meets Private Smith, who sees the money. He follows Ross to his tent, and peering under the side wall, sees him hide the money under the head of his cot. Sneaking around to the back of the tent, Smith steals the money. The detail, with the wagon, reports. Sergeant Ross goes into his tent to get the money and is dumbfounded to find it gone. He tells the commanding officer, who promptly places him under arrest. Several days later a skirmish occurs between the troop and some Mexicans. Private Smith is severely wounded. Left for dead, he drags his weary, wounded body through the briars in search of aid. John Burton and his daughter find him lying helpless by the roadside, take him to their home and through the tireless nursing of Blanche, Smith's life is saved. Smith discovers that he is in love with the girl who has saved his life and proposes to her, only to learn that she loves the man he has wronged and who now is facing a court-martial. His gratitude and love for Blanche prompts him to do the manly thing and he hastens to the building in which Ross is being tried, declares his guilt, takes his place as the proper prisoner, while the sergeant, free once more, hastens to the side of the ranchman's daughter.

ESSANAY.

THE VOICE OF GIUSEPPE (Jan. 28).—Giuseppe, an Italian singer, reads an ad printed in a local paper, wanting a man with an exceptional voice. Giuseppe applies for the position at Rosen's cafe. Rosen is impressed with Giuseppe's voice, and sends a letter to Mr. Bummerstein, a theatrical magnate, to come and hear him. Burremstein arrives, and after trying out Giuseppe's voice, gives him a contract for five hundred dollars a week to appear in his opera. Giuseppe is introduced to Rosen's daughter, who is smitten with him. Being out of funds to buy his wardrobe, Giuseppe borrows some money from Rosen and signs a note for the loan at twenty per cent. The following week the Rosens take a box at the opera. Giuseppe's family also have a box. To the surprise and humiliation of everpbody, Giuseppe is a complete failure. Mr. Rosen had told Giuseppe that after the first performance he would give his daughter Rosie and Giuseppe a banquet. No wthat Giuseppe has been a failure, the Rosens decide to have the banquet alone. Giuseppe with his family, invade the banquet hall and a row is started. A policeman passing Rosen's cafe discovers a fire. Rosen is notified. Giuseppe dashes from the banquet hall into the burning cafe and rescues Rosen's insurance papers and the note. Rosen, delighted with having saved the valuable papers, tells Giuseppe that he can have his daughter as long as the papers have been rescued, and emphatically says, "I should worry?"

THE MELBURN CONFESSION (Jan. 29).—Godfrey Melburn quarrels over his wife's extravagance and reprimands her for it. That night a burglar enters their home and kills Mrs. Melburn. Melburn is arrested for the murder of his wife. Melburn's father, an aristocratic gentleman, tells his daughter, Mabel, that if his son is guilty he will disinherit Godfrey's baby son in favor of his cousin. The cousin, a shrewd lad in his twenties, calls on Godfrey in his cell at the county jail. Godfrey gives him a statement declaring that he, Godfrey, is innocent of the charge against him. Desiring the inheritance, the cousin forges the confession and gives it to Mabel. The reporters call at her home. Mabel substitutes the confession for a plain piece of paper. Reading an imaginary confession or statement to the reporters, and, becoming aware that they are suspicious of what she is reading, she throws it into the grate. She leaves the room and the reporters depart. One, a young girl, thinking she has been misled by the loyal sister, returns, and is met by the cousin, who gives her the forged confession. At this point the sister returns and pleads with the reporter for the return of the false document. The reporter, with a heart of a loving mother, seeing Godfrey Melburn's infant son, destroys the paper. Mabel is then notified that her brother has been found guilty of murder and will be electrocuted at midnight. The electric chair is put in preparation. Five minutes to twelve, Steve Hicks, the burglar-murderer confesses his guilt to a judge of the night court. The judge immediately telephones the death chamber, and Godfrey Melburn is set free. He returns to his home, where he is met by his loyal sister and infant son. Godfrey falls weakly into his sister's outstretched arms and thanks God for his narrow escape.

THE SHERIFF'S STORY (Jan. 30).—Sheriff Coverdale of Custer County, Wyoming, visits his relatives in New York City. During his stay he joins one of the local clubs there. One night at the club, several of the members ask the sheriff to tell them a good story of some of his experiences in the West. Sheriff Coverdale tells them he had a prisoner once, who like al other prisoners, claimed he was innocent. The prisoner, Tom Racey, had a scheming wife with a remarkable personality and clever ability. Her shrewd manner assisted her materially in gaining entrance to the jail, where her husband had been lodged. While the sheriff's back was turned she handed Tom a note. After his wife had left the cell, Tom reads the note, which tells him that he can escape by using the enclosed files. Tom files his way to freedom. The sheriff is notified and goes in pursuit. Discovered among the bushes, Sheriff Coverdale fires at the fleeing outlaw, Racey finally reaches his home. His wife tells him to get into bed immediately and pretend to be dead. Sheriff Coverdale, with his deputies, find Racey and, believing him to be dead, leave the house. Mr. and Mrs. Coverdale calmly pack up their belongings and leave town. Returning to the home of the bandit the sheriff finds a dummy form in the bed and the tenants missing. Sheriff Coverdale's fellow club members laugh their appreciation of the splendid story and they all join in a drink.

HYPNOTISM IN HICKSVILLE (Jan. 31).—"Uncle" Hezekiah Crabtree, known as the stingiest man in town, is seen in the country grocery store buying supplies. A group of farmers gathered around the ever popular and notorious grocery store stove, snicker and cast insinuating remarks. "Aunt" Sophia Stringer, a prominent church worker of the village, takes up a collection from the men. She asks "Uncle" Hezekiah to contribute to the fund and is most emphatically denounced. Jed, Hezekiah's nephew, is in love with Susan. That afternoon Jed meets Professor Swengolly, the hypnotist, who is to give a performance at the town hall that evening. Jed earns two tickets to the show by putting up bill posters. That evening, Jed takes his sweetheart, Susan, to the show. The Prof. hypnotizes two or three in the audience, including Jed, and makes them go through screamingly funny antics. After the performance Jed takes the professor to one side and asks him if he will hypnotize his uncle to loosen up on some of the surplus cash. The professor and Jed steal quietly into "Uncle" Hezekiah's bedroom, and finding him asleep, wake him up and hypnotize him. The professor then tells Jed that in the morning his uncle will be a different man. The following morning Uncle Hezekiah arises. He finds Jed and his sweetheart, Susan, in the kitchen. He gives them some money and consents to their marriage. Uncle Hezekiah then goes to the grocery store and treats several of the farmers to cigars. To the surprise of everybody, he gives "Aunt" Sophia Stringer a large sum of money for her fund. "Uncle" Hezekiah then meets Miss Sarah Winkle, his wash lady, and proposes to her. She accepts him and they proceed to the church. Jed sees his uncle with Miss Winkle and rushes madly to the railroad station where Professor Swengolly is about to leave. Jed informs the professor of his uncle's condition. The professor takes him out of his trance. Hezekiah, regaining his normal state of mind, and realizing that he is about to marry his wash lady, tells the professor that he has saved him from marrying "that," and rewards the professor by giving him ten cents. Everybody is flabbergasted and the weeping wash lady is left to her sorrow.

THE MAKING OF BRONCHO BILLY (Feb. 1).—Broncho Billy is seen leaving his humble home in the East to make his fortune in the far West. He kisses his mother fondly goodbye. Broncho Billy, a tenderfoot at this time, arrives in the West, goes to the hotel and engages a room. After placing his belongings in his room he saunters about the hotel lobby. Al Wilkes, a rough western cowpuncher, imagining he can make this unknown man of the East dance, plays a lively tune around his feet with a forty-four calibre revolver. Broncho Billy gives Wilkes a look, and calmly leaves the room. Broncho then strolls into the gambling house and refuses to take a hand in the game. He then walks into the bar-room and orders a glass of soda. Wilkes enters the saloon, and seeing Broncho Billy drinking the nearest thing to water, makes fun of him. This grates on the young Easterner's nerves. Wilkes calls him a "Mollycoddle," or something to that effect. Broncho suggests a fight to take place right then and there. Broncho is informed by the cowpunchers who have congregated, that they are not accustomed to using fists out West, that if he wants to fight he will have to practice shooting with a gun. Broncho immediately purchases a beautiful horse pistol. Filling his pockets with ammunition, and taking his new treasure, Broncho puts up a bottle on a rock in the road and fires several shots at it. None of them hit the mark. A larger bottle is then shot at without effect. Several months later, Broncho Billy is seen in a clearing in the woods with six beer bottles lined up before him. He shoots at them and hits his mark every time. A more difficult stunt is performed by his placing six playing cards on a table, some distance from him. Broncho Billy shoots at these cards and punctures each one of them. Now, Broncho Bily says, "where is this fellow Wilkes?" Wilkes has had a grudge against Broncho Billy since the first meeting, and has waited for an opportunity to shoot him. Broncho Billy sees the cowpuncher approach. Wilkes pulls his gun, but is not quick enough, and Broncho Billy shoots him in the arm. Fearing that the boys will lynch him, he flees on horseback to the sheriff's office, where he explains what has occurred. The sheriff gives Broncho Billy a revolver and locks him in a cell. The boys, hearing what has happened to Wilkes, go to the sheriff's office, break the floor in, and are about to capture Broncho, when Wilkes arrives and explains to his fellow cowpunchers that he was wrong. Broncho Billy and Wilkes shake hands and everything ends in a peaceful manner.

MELIES.

A TALE OF OLD TAHITI (2 reels—Jan. 31).—Teria, the daughter of Hoato-aru, one of the most influential chiefs of Tahiti, falls desperately in love with Jacques, a young midshipman of a French vessel which has dropped anchor off the island. She pleads with her father to secure Jacques as her husband. The French officers laugh in derision at the idea.

So far does Teria's love go that the chief orders Jacques taken prisoner. He is brought before Teria, and through force and seduction accepts her proposal. Jacques comes to love Teria, but loyalty to his country demands that he return. At every attempt at escape he is outwitted by Hoato-aru's warriors, until at length the captain of the vessel sends out an expedition for him. At the very height of his love he is torn away from Teria, with only her last gift—a flower—with which to remember the sweetest experience of his existence.

THE GYPSY'S WARNING (Feb. 6).—By flattery and caresses, Smith induces Lola, a gypsy maid, to leave her people and fly with him. He takes her to a small cottage, where they commence life together in bliss.

But in three months Smith tires of Lola and, meeting Mildred, an attractive American girl, becomes attentive to her and neglects the little gypsy. Lola discovers Smith's new fancy and implores him to return to her, but he throws her off, determining to rid himself of the girl. He offers her money and tells her to return to her people. Brokenhearted, she goes back to her mother, but only to die.

Months after Smith and Mildred become engaged and with a party of young people, visit a traveling gypsy camp. Smith does not recognize them as the very parents of Lola. But the gypsy mother has a better memory and while she reads the palm of Mildred, warns her against marrying Smith, with such proof of her words that Mildred is convinced of their truth.

Coming out of the tent, Mildred assumes a different attitude toward Smith, and when pressed for a reason leads him to the grave of his victim. He is completely nonplussed. Mildred returns his ring and sends him away; then gives thanks to the gypsy mother and a Greater One for having saved her from the clutches of a wretch.

BIOGRAPH.

A MISAPPROPRIATED TURKEY (Jan. 27).—His mind perverted by the many lies forced upon him, Lang becomes an outcast from the Labor Union. In order to reinstate himself he conceives a plot to do away with the owner of the iron works—an infernal machine stuffed in a turkey's breast. The story tells how the turkey found its way to a table where there was more love than plenty.

THE MASHER COP (Jan. 30).—Things down at the courthouse are pretty dull. There hadn't been an arrest made nor a case tried for so long that they were all getting rusty. Constable Brown sat reading the paper of another town when an article struck his notice that told of how a woman policeman had been appointed on the force to arrest mashers and the scheme was a success. Here was an idea. Why not play the same game. But there was no woman cop and Brown dressed up and played that role himself. With what success the picture will show.

WHAT IS THE USE OF REPINING? (Jan. 30).—A widow, the mother of a young daughter, has never ceased to mourn the loss of her dear departed husband, although he had been dead for a long time. She even insisted that her daughter should join in the same feeling. The girl and her sweetheart feel that their chances of happiness are slim when the young man evolves a plan whereby he effects a change in the widow.

KALEM.

THE TURNING POINT (Jan. 27).—Stella Lee, the lonely daughter of a prosperous farmer, advertises for a husband. Raymond Blackwell, a handsome but irresponsible young man, reads the personal and, inspired by mercenary motives, promptly replies. Stella, although receiving many other answers, decides upon Raymond. The father now takes charge of the affair and after making a personal investigation, invites Raymond to visit the family in the country.

Blinded by his secret ambition, Raymond fails to notice the true worth of the girl. The father provides a comfortable home near the old farmhouse and Raymond and Stella are married.

A year later discontent rushes in and the husband leaves for the city and resumes his wild career with companions of doubtful character. The father visits Raymond in his daughter's behalf and is angrily ordered to leave the room. The old gentleman delivers a scathing denunciation and departs.

Time goes on. One evening, as Raymond is placing the day's collections in his employer's safe, his two companions enter and, seeing the act, propose a robbery. When they are on the point of gaining Raymond's co-operation, a telegram arrives announcing the dangerous illness of the wife. He is between two fires. The wife wins. Raymond repudiates his disreputable companions and hastens to Stella's bedside. The shock is too much for her and she falls into unconsciousness. Overwhelmed with a guilty conscience, grief and remorse, Raymond is about to end all when Stella recovers from her swoon. A complete reconciliation is effected. Health is regained and the two young people return to their cottage to begin a new and happier life.

THE PRIDE OF ANGRY BEAR (Jan. 29).—After the treaty of peace, the old Indian chief, Angry Bear, consents to visit the post and establish friendly relations with the soldiers and settlers. He is given an escort of troops and received in style. During his stay at the post the Colonel's daughter is married to a young soldier and Angry Bear is greatly impressed by the ceremony. The time for his departure arrives and he returns to his camp, where he extols the hospitality of his white brothers.

Some time later a prospector, sick and exhausted, makes his way to the Indian camp and is tenderly cared for by the Chief's daughter. As the days pass he gains strength and determines to renew his search for gold. But he has fallen in love with the Indian girl, and she with him. Feeling that Angry Bear will not give his consent, the young people surreptitiously take their leave. An Indian brave, detecting the flight of the couple, informs Angry Bear, who immediately sends a party in pursuit.

After many ineffectual attempts to throw their pursuers off the trail, the white man and the Indian girl are captured and brought before the indignant Chief. They cower before him and plead for mercy. Angry Bear orders them placed in the wigwam and guarded. Later they are again brought before the Chief and to their amazement they discover that the old red man has as a companion, the minister who performed the marriage ceremony at the post. "Thus it was at the mating of the White Chief's daughter," says Angry Bear solemnly. After the wedding feast the young couple depart for the white man's land.

THE HORSE THAT WOULDN'T STAY HITCHED (Jan. 31).—Bill, a cowboy, has a horse which gives him a great deal of trouble. It absolutely refuses to remain hitched and no matter where it is tied, the animal manages to break away, taking fences, posts and even a front porch with it.

One day as Bill is calling upon his fiancee he hears the girl's father state that he wishes to purchase a nice saddle horse for his daughter. Bill, seeing an opportunity to dispose of the troublemaker, succeeds in making the sale.

The horse behaves very well until the girl inadvertently fastens the bridle to the wheel chair in which her invalid father rests, that she may enter the house and get her riding gloves. When she returns both horse and father are missing. Far down the road she sees the father holding his game foot and waving menacingly to the horse as it drags the chair over the rocky road.

This unfortunate affair is seen by Bill's rival, who immediately makes capital of it. He effects the rescue of the father and determined to humiliate Bill further, forces the former owner of the animal to refund the purchase price.

ST. AUGUSTINE, FLORIDA (Jan. 31).—Many interesting views of the oldest settlement on the American continent are presented in this entertaining subject. We see the old Fort Marion drawbridge and watch tower; St. George Street; the old Franciscan monestary, built prior to 1586; the Spanish cathedral; the burial place of 1460 victims of the Seminole War; old Spanish gates, built in 1743; the narrowest street in the world; the house of history; old Spanish missions; the slave market, and many other picturesque scenes.

THE SENATOR'S DISHONOR (Feb. 1).—Edward Lord, a young attorney, has loved Ethel Warren as long as he can remember and his one ambition is to work up a practice which will warrant him in asking her to become his bride. Ethel returns the lawyer's affection until she goes to Washington to visit her aunt, where she meets Senator Vane. Impressed by the attentions showered upon her, she decides that she cannot go back to the simple home and gives up the man who is struggling at the bottom of the ladder that she may wed the Senator.

Lord leaves for the West without learning the name of the man who has taken his life's happiness from him. He becomes popular in his new location and is shortly elected to Congress.

Although he is ignorant of Ethel's whereabouts, she has followed him in thought and when she learns of his arrival in Washington, she takes a trip abroad that she may not meet him. During her absence Lord learns that a large bribe has been accepted by Senator Vane. Entirely ignorant of the man's relationship to Ethel, the Congressman secures papers which will convict Vane when the investigation takes place.

Ethel returns and finds her husband greatly disturbed, but cannot learn the cause. On the evening before Lord is to hand over his proofs to the committee, Ethel reads an account of the affair in the paper. She is horrified and when she questions her husband he does not deny his guilt.

Determined to save her child's name, Ethel steals out of the house and entering Lord's library, succeeds in locating the incriminating papers. As she is about to depart, Lord, mistaking her for a burglar, fires a revolver and slightly wounds Ethel. Ethel asks Lord to call her husband by telephone and the Congressman learns from the servants that the Senator has died of heart failure. Time heals Ethel's wounds of mind and body and we see a rift in the clouds as we discover the lover of her girlhood at her side.

PATHE.

HUBBY'S POLLY (Jan. 29).—Paul Barton and his bride are an ideal couple and he takes great care not to displease her. While out walking one day Barton admires a parrot, but his wife refuses to allow him to purchase it. Later in the day while his wife is out, Barton sends the cook for the parrot. When she brings it home he loses his nerve, and, hiding the bird behind a screen, he goes out until the storm will have blown over, leaving a note, in which he explains that the cook knows all about the object hidden behind the screen and asking forgiveness. While he is out, the cook is asked by a neighbor to mind her baby. She agrees, but the task interferes with her work, so she places the baby in a basket behind another screen in the room with the parrot. Mrs. Barton returns home, finds the note, and, of course, looks behind the wrong screen. However, after a near tragedy, Hubby explains the situation and Mrs. Barton's doubting heart is satisfied.

SAVED BY HIS HORSE (Jan. 30).—Bill Peters, after a long ride on his favorite mare, Peggy, stops at dusk and is soon sound asleep. At the first gleam of daylight, Peggy is awake and wanders off, while Bill sleeps the sleep of the just. An Indian scout gets Peggy to his camp and hobbles her forefeet with a rope. With her teeth Peggy soon unties the rope and away she goes, with the Indians in pursuit. Peggy makes her way back to where Bill is sleeping and wakes him. Bill mounts her and flees. He meets a party of white settlers with their families moving across the plains. They decide to fight the Redmen off. Bill writes a note, which Peggy takes in her teeth and is off like the wind. In a short time the Indians are preparing for the final rush upon the whites, but in the meantime Peggy has delivered her message to the sheriff and with his cowboy posse he arrives in time to rescue the settlers.

THE GREAT PRAYER OF THE ARABS (Feb. 1.).—Among the Mohammedans, after the beyran or feast which follows the fast of the Ramadhan, extraordinary public manifestations and long prayers are made. In this film the Arabs assemble in vast numbers for the great prayer, and the spectacle is impressive and unforgettable. The ceremony is held in the open and the thousands upon thousands of costumed Arabs, each with their little prayer mat, make an interesting study.

ALONG THE COLUMBIA RIVER (Feb. 1).—Scenes along the Gateway to the Northwest, including the most famous salmon fisheries in the world, and some prize specimens. Coming inland, immense agricultural projects are exposed to view, remarkable enough to hold the most elusive spectator.

C. G. P. C.

MAX JOINS THE GIANTS (Jan. 28).—Our versatile friend, Max Linder, is an objectionable suitor because of his small stature. To remedy this defect of nature he tries walking on stilts and his maneuvers are extremely funny. Before he has perfected himself in this difficult art he reads of a new machine which will make people stouter or taller as they prefer. Poor Max presses the wrong key, with a result that is entirely new in motion pictures.

THE CHAMELEON (Jan. 31).—A film explaining the characteristics and nature of this well known member of the Lizard family, which makes a prey of all insects, capturing them by means of a viscous tongue the length of its body. This is truly the reptile with the all-seeing eyes, for it can turn them in any direction. It is easily tamed and is a great pet in some countries.

THE MAKING OF HATS (Jan. 31).—Here we see the labor necessary and the art required in making some of the better quality straw hats. Everybody wears a hat, and for that reason everybody should be interested in the processes used in their manufacture.

SELIG.

THE LIPTON CUP (Jan. 20).—Little Lillian Wade is presented with a toy yacht which inspires her youthful admirer to remark to Sir Thomas Lipton: "Some day I am going to be the greatest yachtsman in the world like you are." This childish prattle in after years comes true, for when the boy becomes a man he retrieves the failing fortune of his father by building the winning yacht that lifts the cup and the mortgage which threatens his father's house.

A MATRIMONIAL DELUGE (Jan. 21).—Dan Clark, a middle-aged ranchman, has an unfortunate habit of occasionally taking a drop too much, and calls on his old sweetheart when overprimed with fusel oil. She is strictly prohibition, and after sousing him with a bucket of water, she tells him to go on his way. Dan advertises for a wife and gets the usual phony letters and photos in response. The cowboys on the ranch discover the correspondence and decide to make it extra hot for him. They answer the letters and make appointments. His sweetheart is "put wise," and prepares to rescue him after he has been sufficiently disciplined. The returns come in so rapidly that Dan takes to the high country, pursued by the militant females. They are rough riders and he cannot shake them off until the cowpunchers acknowledge their share in the work, and atone for disappointments by each picking out a wife for himself.

A BLACK HAND ELOPEMENT (Jan. 22).—An Italian convicted by circumstances as the kidnapper of pretty Dolly Gardner, is pursued and arrested by a typical country constable, Perkins, who entertains the delusion that he has saved Miss Dolly, and is entitled to her in matrimony. The young lady, while appreciative of the constable's service and suit, is in love with Bob, and is to meet him at the justice's and have the contract sealed. Mrs. Gardner, who reads the papers closely, has been much impressed with the doings of the Black Hand Society. She has been impressed with the large, lazy hand of a stretching Negro, crediting it as the ominous sign of the vengeful Black Hand. She is hysterically certain of the peddler's guilt when she sees her daughter's scarf (that he picked up in the street), projecting from his pocket, and he is marched off to the justice's court. As they go in, the newlyweds come out. Dolly and her mother become reconciled and the poor peddler is released to follow the fruity trail of the city alleys.

A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM (Jan. 23).—David Brant, a serious-minded man, observes with growing concern the drift of his wife into the frivolous ways of the worldly. From the bridge party it progresses to the theater and banquet hall with the designing clubman. The husband's suspicions are aroused by overhearing a telephone conversation with the rascal in the sanctuary of his club; but he still hopes to win his wife back. When she comes from a party that he has refused one night after he has rocked his child to sleep, he awakens at an early morning hour as she enters the room. He smells liquor on her breath and is about to violently eject her from her home, while she cringes in terror, convinced that he is going to kill her. At the psychological moment the child awakens and comes to the parents, who highly resolve to live the better life.

THE SUFFRAGETTE (Jan. 24).—Samantha Roundtree, a seasoned old suffragette, comes to a western town to lecture on "Votes for Women." While she is engaged in this form of enlightenment in the public square, Waggy Bill and his cowboy friends ride up and decide to have some fun with the feminine. They ride to a curio shop and costume store and rent a lot of wigs and Indian costumes. After rigging and painting up they pounce upon Miss Roundtree and carry her off to the mountain. They tie her to a tree and pile brush about her as if to make a funeral baked feast. Waggy Bill, the leader of this deviltry, slips down to the stream, washes up, comes back on the scene "propria persona," and empties blank cartridges on the crowd with such effect that he decimates the Indians and rescues Samantha. She is something more than grateful to her hero and clings to Waggy Bill like a leech. She gets him to town, and having gotten a man, forgets all about votes for women. The cowboy-Indians return and rescue Waggy Bill from the fervent embraces of the frightened Samantha.

THE AINUS OF JAPAN (Jan. 24).—The Ainus of Japan represent the aborigines of Japan, the oldest existing people of the world, barring the cliff dwellers on the Island of Razau of our own continent. They still preserve many of their old traits.

THE MINER'S JUSTICE (Jan. 27).—Dad Means, an old prospector, is rescued from death in the desert by Bud Owens, and is taken to his shack. Eventually the cunning of the prospector strikes a vein, and he and his young partner have a fair offer for the mine. The youth, who has become fascinated with a woman of the mines, is for selling out at once, and, enraged over the conservative attitude of the old man, attempts to end opposition by dropping a stick of dynamite down the shaft upon his head. The old man catches the projectile in his hand and then rounds upon the impetuous younger partner with a gun. The result is the young man gives up the girl and the partners are friends as of yore.

A CANINE MATCHMAKER (Jan. 28).—Looks are deeper than hair and hide as this pictorial recital of the devotion of a peripatetic pup will indicate. This tramp dog is rescued from a gang of hobos, and later in the story protects his new master from the murderous machinations of the tramps, and incidentally helps him to win the girl he has loved all along but never mustered sufficient courage to tell her about it.

THE EMPTY STUDIO (Jan. 29).—David Burson, Sr., a wealthy business man, makes strenuous attempts to induce his son, Dave, to follow in his own footsteps. Dave, however, cares nothing for business and stubbornly follows his natural bent—painting. In exasperation, his father finally disinherits him, and the young man is left to his own resources.

A prize of $500 is offered by the Atala Art Club for the best picture submitted by a certain date, on the subject of tragedy. Young Burson decides to enter the contest. He rents a cheap studio with his last money and starts to work on his masterpiece. He finds himself at a loss for a subject and is almost despairing, when one day he chances to witness a pathetic automobile accident in which a beautiful young Italian girl's baby brother is killed. The expression on the girl's face at this time suggests to young Burson the subject for his painting of "Tragedy." He seeks out and engages the girl for his model. She, unknown to him, is also an artist. Three days before the contest is to close, and just as Dave's picture is nearing completion, he meets with an accident and is unable to reach his studio. On the day before the end of the contest, Marie, the model, alarmed at Dave's disappearance, and almost frantic for fear that he won't be represented in it, takes things into her own hands and completes the painting. Some days later, Dave, upon returning to the studio, finds that his painting has won the first prize. Explanations follow and Dave repays Marie by placing an engagement ring on her finger.

THE LESSON (Jan. 30).—Rosie Lee, the shabby, wan-faced daughter of "Daddy" Lee, a humble laboring man, becomes engaged to Jerry Brooks. Shortly afterwards, "Daddy" meets with a serious accident, and Rosie is forced to seek work as a ribbon clerk in a large department store in an effort to keep the wolf from the door and provide food and medicine for her aged father. In her new position Rosie makes the acquaintance of Dave Ellis, a kind-hearted floorwalker. A crisis comes when Rosie is forced to secure money with which to buy medicine for "Daddy." Ellis lends her the necessary amount and tells Rosie that he and his wife will call upon her father and cheer him up. Rosie writes her address on a card and gives it to Ellis, thanking him for his kindness. Jerry, her fiancé, chances to see Rosie accept the money from Ellis and give him her address. He immediately jumps at the wrong conclusion. This results in Rosie breaking her engagement with Jerry. Later, through accident, Jerry learns how wrong he was and after some explanations take place the young couple are again reunited, each having learned their lesson.

THE ALTAR OF THE AZTECS (Jan. 31).—"The Altar of the Aztecs" is a picturesque and romantic story dealing with the strange adventures encountered by Edwin Dalton, a young American mining engineer in the ancient silver mines of the Aztecs in Sonoma, Old Mexico. It starts with a brilliant social function, given by Juan Caballes, an Americanized descendant of the old Spanish Aztecs, and now a wealthy mine owner on the New York Stock Exchange. This interesting story is carried through, scene after scene, of original and gripping incidents and picturesque settings, until at last the hero finds himself imprisoned in the tumble-down silver mine in far-off Cordilleras, Mexico.

WITH HER RIVAL'S HELP (Feb. 2).—Nellie, the country girl, is very much in love with Chester. He seems to like her until Nellie Thomas is employed by the other Nellie's people as housemaid. He transfers his affections, and when Nellie's father catches him kissing Miss Thomas, he orders him from the place. Chester then writes a letter to Miss Thomas asking her to meet him at the minister's and they will be married. He gives the letter to Stupid Sam to deliver and Stupid gives it to the wrong Nellie. She reads it and in her haste to make the minister's house on time, drops it. The real Nellie, for whom the letter was intended, finds it, and decides to go and meet Chester herself. She goes on horseback and the other Nellie goes in the family runabout. Nellie's horse goes lame and meeting the other Nellie on the road is invited by her to attend her wedding, and invites Nellie to ride in the runabout. This she does and they both meet Chester. He quickly shows where his love lies and the hired girl is married to him, while her namesake and rival goes home in chagrin.

BOX AND COX (Feb. 2).—Box is a printer. He works all night. Cox is a hatter. He works all day. Box rents a room from Mrs. Bouncer, a lodging-house keeper, telling her he will only use it in the daytime. Cox visits Mrs. Bouncer and asks for a room, telling her he will only use it at night. She rents the same room to both of them. Then starts a strange series of situations. Mrs. B. must get Cox out of bed before Box comes home and Box out of bed before Cox comes home. She uses all sorts of subterfuges to keep Box downstairs in the dining-room while Tillie, the housemaid, chases Cox out of the house and then straightens up the room. This works for a while until one day Cox oversleeps and Mrs. B. thinking he has gone, allows Box to go upstairs. He tumbles into bed and is surprised to find it occupied. A fight follows and Box kicks Cox downstairs. He complains to Mrs. B. and going upstairs with Cox confesses that she had rented the room to the both of them. Box, who up to this moment had not noticed Cox, recognizes him as an old acquaintance and renewing all old ties they agree to share the room together.

NESTOR.

A DINNER BELL ROMANCE (Jan. 27).—Hiram Stedmand runs the village hotel. Hiram does not believe in having women around, and Lin Yet, a patient Chinaman, gives the dinners that camp-like Oriental flavor which palls upon the susceptibile pallet in the course of time.

Hiram is outraged and almost driven to strong drink when the widow Monahan has the audacity to try to make a living by running a boarding-house next door. They do not speak as they pass by.

Honors are about equally divided when Mrs. Monahan's pretty niece, Louise, arrives. Hiram stands without and sounds the tocsin of the hand-bell. Louise appears with another bell and makes a duet of what was originally intended to be a solo. The boys arrive, stop in their tracks, see the pretty Louise and follow the siren, and Hiram returns and kicks the astonished Oriental, who innocently inquires, "Whatte matter?"

Lin Yet is fired, and Hiram hires a French cook, but Francis does not make the required change in his fortunes. Hiram ponders. A miracle happens—Hiram gets an idea. He advertises for a pretty waitress. One comes. She is French and chic, and a number of the boys desert the pretty Louise and follow the click of Marie's tinkling high heels.

The following day the rivalry is keen. The cowboys assist their favorites in their bell-ringing by ballyhooing for the adjoining establishments. A few of the remarks are rude, and the cawboys mix it, and Irish hot is served outside instead of inside the dining-rooms. The sheriff has his hands full, but the savory smell emanating from two doors helps to postpone hostilities. Hiram makes unpleasant faces at the widow, who retaliates with references to her neighbor's antecedents and ancestors. Hiram does not care. The four bits are coming in again, and all is well, when he commits the error of admonishing Marie for flirting with the French cook. Marie calls him something, which sounds like "cushion," and Francois snaps his excited fingers, and says, "Peeg," and they go in high dudgeon. They apply to the widow for work, and their services are accepted. Hiram is plunged in gloom.

Hiram again resorts to the novelty of thinking, and another bright idea is the result. The next time he meets the buxom widow, he steps aside and raises his hat, and the widow is so flabbergasted that she forgets to bow. This leads to an invitation to dinner, and that leads to other things, which culminate with the pretty Louise blessing her elders and the now genial Hiram displacing the widow's boarding-house sign and nailing it on the hotel beside his own.

THE FOOTPATH TO HAPPINESS (Jan. 27).—A dainty pair of tootsies are in the park. A pair of well-shod feet follow after. The two pairs of feet meet, a handkerchief drops, a man's hand reaches down. This scene looks suspiciously like an ice-cream parlor. The pedal extremities meet, they part and depart. The feminine booties ascend, the masculine ones have a regretful appearance—one foot sounds taps.

An altar—dainty white satin shoes, and patent leathers. Another pair of feet this time, square, with a clerical gown skirting them.

And last of all, but the beginning of all, eight legs—four of them belongs to a new table, two of them in sweet little slippers, and two in go-to-the-office shoes, very nicely polished. We wish them luck.

WHITE MAN'S FIREWATER (Jan. 29).—Dick prefers hunting to helping around the ranch as his father wishes. His chum, Tom, calls upon Dick's sister, Amy; and Dick, who has been drinking rather freely, takes his chum hunting with him. Dick sees a party of Indians drinking, and in spite of all that his friend could say, Dick insisted upon trying to shoot the bottle from one of the Indians. Instead he killed Big Bear, and his son, Black Eagle, started out for revenge. Dick, sobered at what he saw he had done, threw down his rifle and ran, while Tom picked it up and hastened to the ranch to warn the ranchmen of what Dick had done. Black Eagle followed Tom, and fired at him just in time to hit the ranchman, who promptly accused Tom of shooting, not seeing the Indians and having quarreled with his son's chum regarding Amy. Tom, unable to prove an alibi, held the man, who had run to the wounded man's aid, at bay until he could find Dick. Amy had in the meanwhile gone for the doctor and had been taken captive by two of Black Eagle's followers. After a daring fight, Tom succeeded in rescuing her, but Black Eagle had in the meanwhile gone back to the ranch and set fire to the house. The wounded ranchman and his wife were alone in the place and Tom, Dick and the men after them, barely returned in time to rescue the couple and the house collapsed. Black Eagle had in the meanwhile been captured and at last confessed to the shooting of the ranchman to avenge the death of his father, whose unfortunate fate was a means of mending Dick's ways and showing the ranchman that Tom was a desirable son-in-law after all.

THE HIGHGRADERS (Jan. 31).—Much wonder is created throughout the country by the large quantity of high grade ore brought to San Francisco periodically by "Happy" Tom Savage, who refuses to divulge the location of his mysterious mine. Wilson, an unscrupulous promoter, makes a deal with "Happy" Tom whereby they will, with the use of the latter's notoriety, fleece innocent investors by selling them stock to the mysterious mine.

Mrs. Warren, a widow of small means, residing in a small town, is pursuaded to invest practically her all. After repeated requests for the promised dividends, her last letter is returned marked "not found." Her daughter, Beth, then starts for Nevada in an effort to retrieve their loss.

Arriving at Bullfrog, she finds the office of the bogus company has long been unoccupied. Without funds, she is in desperate straits, when she is befriended by Blind Jack, a dance hall fiddler. Blind Jack enlightens her as to the real source of "Happy" Tom's wealth, which is really derived from the sale of highgrade ore stolen by a gang of highgraders, of which he is the leader, from the mines in which they work.

Blind Jack intercedes for her with the proprietor of the dance hall, and Beth is employed to sing old-fashioned songs in that rough place, which is the rendezvous of the highgraders.

Returning from one of his "cashing-in" trips with lots of money and accompanied by Wilson, "Happy" Tom and his associates become the victim of a novel gunplay, in which they are bested by the blind fiddler and Ruth. The return of her mother's money is effected and the swindlers are given to justice.

POWERS.

A BITTER DOSE (Jan. 22).—Early and Matty, seeing the doctor leave on a hurry call, decide to play doctor during his absence. Acting on the idea, they collect some of the doctor's empty poison bottles, which they fill with water and proceed to business.

The local minister happening in, volunteers as a patient, and is promptly treated. Likewise, banker Blakemore. This is great fun until after Early and Matty are called away by their mothers, the men find what they suppose they have been taking. Imagination holds full sway. Both think their lives in the balance. Their endeavors to gain relief carry them through a variety of funny adventures that eventually land them back in the doctor's office, sadder, though wiser men.

HOW HE WON HER (Jan. 29).—Jake and Sue are very much in love, but old Silas, Sue's father, is a grouchy old curmudgeon, and objects to Jake as he would object to anything or anybody of a pleasant nature.

"One Round" Casey arrives in town. Casey is always spoiling for a scrap. The very person for a nice, disagreeable son-in-law, says Silas. Sue is pretty and Casey is willing. Jake objects, and gets his eye "variegated." Jake puts up a good, stiff fight, but is eventually unable to respond to the call of time. Backed up by Silas, Casey promises Jake a licking every time he calls, so Jake does not call, but he broods and awaits his chance to get even. The chance comes by one of nature's freaks.

Jake makes a last appeal and Silas, thinking it a good joke, tells Jake that for every foot he can make Casey run, he may spend an evening in the parlor with Sue.

On a lovely night, when the moon is softly shining, Casey persuades Sue to take a drive. Jake retires early, and the worrying brings on an old habit— he walks in his sleep, gracefully attired in a plain but respectable nightie.

Casey and Sue pass the cemetery when a white figure appears in the moonlight. The horse stops dead, Casey gives a look and one jump, and leaves Sue transfixed with terror as the ghost comes nearer and nearer, until it bumps into the horse and wakes up—it is Jake! Sue throws down a carriage rug to him, and together they drive to a friendly minister, who lends Jake some clothes and marries them. Jake figures it out that he saw Casey two miles away, and for every foot he ran he was entitled to an evening in the parlor with Sue, and as the allotted evenings were many, why not spend them in their own parlor?

The following morning Casey appears, having covered nine miles. He describes the terrible fight he had with the ghost, but Sue put the old man wise, and Casey is banished and Jake forgiven.

THE RUGGED COAST (Jan. 31).—Dora and Dave are sweethearts. Dora is loved by Tom, who proposes marriage to Dora only to be met by a refusal. He sees a love scene between Dora and Dave and is embittered against his old friend.

A messenger gives Captain Hawkins a sum of money to pay off his crew and he places it in a pocket of his coat. He goes to pay the men and finds he has not the coat, and sends Dave to his house to get it. He has previously forbidden Dora to receive the attention of Dave and he singles him out of the party in order to humiliate him in the eyes of his other fishermen. Dave goes to the house, secures the coat, and on the way to the dock he shifts the coat about, and the bag containing the money falls out of the pocket. It is found by a simple-minded Gabe, a fool of the village, who hurries away. Dave gives the coat to the captain, who searches in the pockets for the wallet. He cannot find it and he accuses Dave of having stolen the money. Dave protests his innocence. Tom, who is standing near, suggests he submit to the search. Dave refuses to be searched, but knowing the violent temper of the captain, and that appearances are against him, he submits. The captain and Tom search him but do not find the money. They decide that he has hidden it and let him go and follow him to find the hiding place. The captain, on his way, is met by Dora, who sees that his actions are strange and she connects Dave with his angry mood. She meets two sailors after leaving the captain and is told that Dave has left the village in his dory and has been accused of stealing her father's money. Almost crazed with grief and anxiety she runs down to the beach just after the boat of Dave has been capsized and she finds the waves buffeting it into the shore. The captain, in the meantime, going to relieve the anxiety of the men discovers the simple Gabe playing with the wallet. Rushing to him he takes it from him in a rage and realizes that he has accused an innocent man of theft. In the distance sees Dora helping Dave along the rocks, and roughly hauling Gabe with him, he goes to Dave and humbly asks forgiveness, showing the recovered wallet. Big-hearted Dave is only too anxious to forgive, and seeing his chance, loses no time in asking for the hand of Dora. With the captain's consent comes a happy home coming and ending to the unfortunate interim, and Dave and his sweetheart can now look the whole world in the face.

THE ANGELUS (Jan. 30).—Richard Bartell, a young bachelor, decides to make his permanent residence in his new country mansion. He had been there but a short time when he meets Anita, a pretty worker in the vineyards. She immediately falls in love with the handsome stranger, much to the annoyance of Jose, one of Anita's lovers. Richard returns her love and asks her to be his wife.

Anita's sister and her husband object to Richard, both doubting his sincerity. They warn Anita against the wiles that rich young men use to gain the confidence of poor girls. Anita's love is too strong to be shaken, and when Richard asks her to marry him, she gladly consents.

Richard sends Anita a note, asking her to come to his home and there they will go to church and be married. This note falls into the sister's hands after Anita has left the house. Believing Richard is using some trickery with Anita, the sister goes to his home, endeavoring to save her sister. She is seen entering the house by Jose, who later meets the husband and informs him of his wife's being in the rich man's home.

Anita is hurt while crossing a rocky hill and lies unconscious at the bottom. The sister, after forcing her way into Richard's home, finds that Anita has not arrived. She decides to wait for her, much to the discomfiture of Richard, who has shown some worry at Anita's delay.

The husband, not realizing the wife's real purpose in coming to the house, when he finds her alone with Richard, immediately draws the conclusion that she is unfaithful to him. In spite of the wife's pleading, the husband refuses to have anything more to do with her. Richard offers an explanation, to no avail. Anita, whose injured ankle has prevented her from walking, is picked up by a couple of vineyard workers and carried home.

The wife leaves Richard's home in despair, knowing that it would be useless to try to reason with her husband. She becomes frantic and loses all control of herself, seeks to find consolation in death, and as she is about to hurl herself from the cliff, the tolling of the Angelus bell recalls her to her senses.

The husband, who has learned from Anita the true state of affairs, goes in search of his wife and finds her in deep prayer on the edge of the cliff. The husband begs forgiveness for his hasty judgment. The wife, glad that all has turned out well, willingly returns home with him. Later Richard is sent for and both sister and brother, knowing the sincerity in his love for Anita, give their consent to the marriage.

FRONTIER.

THE WILD FLOWER OF PINO MOUNTAIN (Jan. 29).—James Anthony had amassed a fortune when reverses came. Then he lost his wife. In a moment of frenzy he takes a revolver from the drawer, is about to end his life, when his baby girl touches him. The shock brings him to his senses. He decides to take his baby and leave the community never to return.

One year passes by, and we see him living with his baby girl in a cave in the Pino Mountain. Yaers pass. John Baker and Leon Noble, two backwoodsmen, go out for their day's work, when they are interrupted by a young woman running toward them. She explains that her father is dying, and asks them to come with her, which they immediately do. The scene shifts to the cave in the mountains where, twelve years ago, James Anthony had made a rough home to escape civilization. Before dying, Anthony begs the woodchoppers to care for his little daughter and see that she is taken back to civilization and properly cared for.

The young girl is taken to their cabin and is given every care and attention. Days pass by, and both men find that they have learned to love the little orphan, whom they have nicknamed "Wild Flower." One day John Baker, finding her sitting alone in front of their little cabin, tells her of his great love for her, and asks her if she will marry him. She tells him she cannot marry him because she does not love him, nor does she love anyone, that she cares just as much for Leon as she does for him. John leaves her, thinking that later on she will repent; but when only a few days later he finds Leon asking her the same question, he decides that but one of them can only be successful. The next morning John asks Leon if he loves "Wild Flower." Leon answers in the affirmative and they decide that they will fight for her love. The scene shifts to "Wild Flower." She has a presentiment that something is wrong, gets up hurriedly and goes in the direction taken by the men. "Wild Flower" comes into view, sees the men fighting, rushes up and in between them. A rosary worn by John has been torn from his neck in the scuffle, and lies upon the rocks at their feet. "Wild Flower" picks it up and holds it before her, and demands that they cease their quarreling, that she cannot love either of them, and that she is going back to civilization. She turns and vanishes. They both watch her out of sight, humbled and repentant with all the anger gone from their hearts. The scene now shifts to a convent. "Wild Flower" comes up to the gate, and a sister bids her enter.

A DOUBLE DECEPTION (Jan. 27).—Roy Delmore, a young actor, loves Violet, but her father refuses to sanction the marriage, for he wishes her to wed an old bachelor friend. The young suitor confides to his dearest friend, who is also an actor, and tells him of his hard luck. The suitor decides to impersonate the elderly admirer, whom they entice into an automobile by a clever ruse. They secure his clothes and the young man impersonates him and is admitted to the house.

In the meantime the girl decides to disgust and discourage the elderly suitor. Taking the butler into her confidence, she has him sprinkle the room with brandy and puff it full of cigarette smoke and pours a quart of whiskey in the decanter. When the young actor enters the house she, taking him for the elderly admirer, acts the tomboy and then beats him about the room with boxing gloves. He discloses his identity and she explains to him the reason for her extraordinary actions.

Roy then sees her father and quickly gets his consent to the marriage, for he has reassumed his disguise, and the stern father believes him to be the elderly admirer. The father leaves them alone and Roy telephones to his friend, who throws the elderly admirer out of a saloon door, where he collides with the girl's father, who believing him drunk, tells him never to visit his daughter again. Then he returns home and sees a portion of the side whiskers sticking to the daughter's face, learns of the deception, and although angry at first, he soon treats it as a joke and gives his consent to the marriage.

GOLD IS NOT ALL (2 reels—Jan. 30).—The great opera singer, against the advice of her physician, insists on singing at one more performance, to earn enough to complete the trust fund she is desirous of setting aside for her child. The effort is too much, and she dies upon the stage. Her brother, who has been left guardian of the child, is crazed by the immense sum of money in his hands, and hides himself with the child and the money in a tenement, where the child is kept a virtual prisoner. The miser spends his days in gloating over the stolen money.

After twelve years, three Bohemian friends rent the studio immediately above, and the imprisoned heiress, through the ministrations of the tenement slavery, meets Karl, the pianist. The miser about this time falls asleep after counting his treasure, and leaves a lighted candle, which sets fire to the room. Trying to reach the concealed fortune, he is burned to death. Karl seeing the smoke, gallantly rescues the girl who, alone in the world by the death of her uncle, is adopted by the three friends.

Later, Karl discovers that the girl has a wonderful voice, and sets himself to develop it, his influence gaining the hearing of a rich man, who in turn brings the great impresario who personally coaches her until she is ready for her debut. On the evening of her first appearance, she insists on making the supper for the boys, and in an alcohol lamp explosion Karl, rescuing her from danger, burns his hand so badly that he can never play the piano again. After her triumph at a studio gathering, the rich man, intoxicated, forces his attention on the girl, and she, running to her own room for safety, is followed by Karl, who saves her once more, and in the struggle the hidden treasure is brought to light. The rich man is paid back for his expenditures, and Karl and the girl are placed beyond the reach of want.

ECLAIR.

THE ONE WHO HAD TO PAY (Jan. 28).—"Why, old man, won't you sit down and have a game with me?" "No, thank you," answered young Childs. The butler of the gambling house entered. "A letter for you, Mr. Archie."

The letter was from his father, a well-to-do farmer, and a very prominent man in a little town up state. It contained a check for $1,000. "The last," the old man wrote, "he would send."

At four oclock in the morning the money was gone, and Archie, in despair at his loss, agreed to become the head of a fake mining company. Proud to see his son at the head of what he believed to be a big financial enterprise, the old farmer invests all his money in the company. The climax came one night during a supper the promoters were giving in a private dining-room of one of the biggest hotels. In the midst of the revelry one of the attendants rushes in, shouting, "the police have raided the office and are coming here!" The warning is sufficient to those who know, and young Archibald W. Childs learns for the first time that he has been a party to a swindle, and that he must either fly with the rest or submit to arrest.

They escape from the office and into a taxi, where Archie's chorus girl friend persuades him to assume a disguise and leave the country. The plan works and they are soon on their way to Europe. It is the father of young Childs who now has to pay. Ruined, he finds himself repulsed and insulted by his friends who have all lost heavily in the fake company. And alone in his empty and desolate house, he would be about to pay with his life for his son's folly, if the charity of one of his wealthy neighbors had not saved him.

LITTLE MOTHER OF THE BLACK PINE TRAIL (Jan. 30).—The "Little Mother," otherwise called Babbie, is a young widow, who bravely struggles to maintain herself and her six-year-old daughter, Marie. Just outside Babbie's cabin, leaning at a dangerous angle, stands a venerable black pine tree, which since men first came to the North, has ever seemed on the point of falling. When Jim Stone begs Babbie to marry him, she laughingly dismisses him with a promise that she will be his wife when the black pine falls.

One day Jim's younger brother, George, comes to the little mother's cabin to persecute her with his ignoble protestations. He is followed thither by his discarded love, Julia, a woman notorious in the camps. The latter arrives just in time to hear George's passionate declaration to Babbie. His words lash her primitive soul into a frenzy of jealousy. As Babbie raises a gun to ward off the insulter, the enraged Julia steals up behind her and blindfolding her, pulls the trigger. Stone falls dead and Julia flees. Babbie is immediately apprehended and although Jim tries to shield her in every way, she is taken off to prison. She begs Jim to stay in her cabin and be a father to little Marie, for ere the black pine falls, she tells him, she will return.

Christmas comes. The storm king rages. The black pine, loaded with its weight of snow and ice, totters and trembles under each renewed blast of the wind.

Julia, tortured by remorse, comes to the cabin in Jim's absence, to kiss the child. Jim returns unexectedly and the woman is forced to conceal herself in the loft. From her hiding place she witnesses a pathetic scene which makes her resolve to bring the little mother back to Baby Marie before that Christmas Day is over.

How she accomplished this, how the black pine comes crashing down under its burden of years and ice, how Babbie and Jim are united, and how Julia expiates her sin, are all too good in the unfolding in the picture to be spoiled by anticipating them here.

THANHOUSER.

A COMMUTER'S CAT (Jan. 19).—A commuter was hastily gulping down his breakfast one morning, when his children entered from the garden with the news that "Poor pussy is dead," and produced the cat to prove it. The commuter's mind was on more important things, so he did not evince much interest. His wife, however, believed in hasty burial, wrapped the cat in brown paper and directed her obedient husband to give the feline a viking burial by hurling her into the East River while crossing on the ferryboat.

The husband, like many other husbands, promised and forgot. Crossing to his office he was so busy talking politics that his errand never struck him. Al day long the cat was with him, in body, if not in spirit. He tried to remember to lose pussy while crossing the water homeward bound, but again it slipped his mind, and he boarded the train still with his bundle. When leaving at his home station, he tried to forget pussy, but a watchful passenger reminded him, and he took the bundle home again. There the wrappings flew open, and he found, to his surprise, that instead of pussy he had a large, excellent and juicy steak.

That same evening there was sorrow and lamentation in the home of another commuter. He gave his wife a package, saying, "You see I remembered, here is the steak you ordered." She opened it, and found a dead cat. The husband was unable to explain anything, was accused of being intoxicated, and for the rest of their married life the skeleton in their family closet was that of a poor little cat, who traveled far before he was finally buried.

THE GIRL DETECTIVE'S RUSE (Jan. 21).—The term of a noted woman counterfeiter was drawing to an end when the chief of police of a large city received information that the criminal was to re-enter her old business. The woman was a famous engraver of spurious bank bills, and according to the word the police received, another gang had arranged for her to work with them. The chief, however, did not know the identity of these crooks, and deemed it inadvisable to shadow the woman when she left prison, believing that the criminals were bright enough to elude pursuers. He accordingly placed the matter in the hands of a girl detective, telling her this was a chance for her to prove her ability.

The detective was a former actress and skillful in the art of "making up." She saw the convict in prison and satisfied herself that she could pass as the other woman. The prisoner was detained in jail while the detective made up to resemble her, and left the penitentiary. Outside a young man in an auto was waiting. He beckoned to the detective and whisked her away. After many shifts to avoid possible pursuers, they arrived at a downtown tenement where the woman was introduced to the members of the gang as the famous engraver, none suspecting her identity. By a clever ruse she was enabled to communicate with the chief, even permitting members of the gang to read and post her letter. She discovered the hiding place of the counterfeiter's outfit and was just about to give the signal for the raid when exposure came.

The criminal's husband, who was serving a long term, escaped from his cell and learning where his supposed wife was hiding, went there. He denounced the detective as a spy, but she had time to send the signal for help and by her quick wit delayed her own capture until assistance arrived. Aid came to her while on the roof of a tenement, surrounded by her foes. The counterfeiting outfit was seized and the band broken up, for all members of it were sent away for long terms.

HER FIREMAN (Jan. 24).—A kind-hearted actress who befriended a poor little waif of the street, soon grew to love the child. When she went on the road she found him a home with her old nurse. She realized how much the child meant to her when he was crippled in an accident, for as soon as she heard the news she gave up her position and hurried to his side. The child loved her, too, and she finally decided to abandon the stage and secure a business position, so that she would not be separated from him. The actress had a fair knowledge of stenography and typewriting, "brushed up" on it, and was engaged on trial by a house on Broadway, New York.

On the day she took up her new duties, city officials had arranged for a fire drill on an extensive scale, but the new employee did not know of it. When the fire alarm sounded and the engines clattered up, she was badly frightened and hardly able to follow the others who went out unconcernedly. On the street, her terror was noticed by a handsome young fireman, who reassured her by telling her it "was only a drill."

Later the young fireman was transferred to an engine house in the outskirts of the city, and there he and the former actress met. They were mutually attracted, and their affection grew. On one of his days off, the fireman invited the girl to go rowing on the river, and she accepted, leaving her little protege in the care of her nurse. Through this woman's carelessness the house caught fire, and the woman ran out, shrieking with fear, forgetting the child, whose broken leg rendered him helpless. Fortunately the girl and the fireman were not far away, and from their boat on the river, saw the fire. The man rowed hastily to shore and although the house was by this time all ablaze, he bravely battled his way in and rescued the child, thereby securely winning the affections of the girl he had learned to dearly love.

THE STRUGGLE (2 reels) (Jan. 29).—A prospector by the name of Worth, lives with his son, a youth of about 15, and his daughter, a girl of twenty. While father and son are at work a stranger comes to the cabin and is given a meal by Miss Worth, and he repays her generosity by endeavoring to embrace her. She indignantly slaps him and endeavors to escape into another room, but the now thoroughly angered man attempts to bar her way, and it is only after a struggle that she reaches it and bars the door. Little Bob, returning home, hears the noise inside, and finding the door locked, peers through the window. The sight within sends him scurrying to his father, who grabs his gun and runs home. Inside the stranger has succeeded in forcing back the door, and has seized the girl. Gordon breaks the door down with an axe and attacks the intruder, and when Jack rushes in he is brushed aside by the stranger, who is endeavoring to escape. The sight of his dead father on the floor infuriates Jack, and he leaps at the man like a panther, and his attack is so furious that for a few moments the man has his hands full handling the boy, who is finally struck a blow and knocked aside. The stranger mounts his horse and gallops away.

Years later Jack is a government scout, and is sent on a mission by the colonel. Stopping at a settlement he enters an inn, where men are playing cards. The stranger, who is a gambler, is cheating, and Jack takes advantage of the situation to interfere. One of the gambler's victims is a consumptive, pale and hollow-eyed, and while Jack is struggling with him the consumptive fires a shot which lays the gambler low. Every one thinks Jack has fired, and he backs away, leaps on his horse and escapes—a fugitive.

Some days later the colonel's daughter is in a stage coach which is attacked by Indians. From a distant hill Jack sees the driver shot from his seat, and driving the spurs into his horse's flanks, he gallops madly across the hills, and heads it off. Dismounting at a gallop, he catches hold of the coach while the horses are going at break-neck speed, pulls himself to the top and guides the swaying vehicle towards the fort, though severely wounded. The soldiers, hearing the shooting, ride to the rescue, and the colonel is filled with gratitude toward Jack, while his daughter falls in love with him.

The news of Jack's heroic deed spreads through the settlements, and the sheriff, who has been looking for him, calls at the fort. The parting is intensely pathetic, as the sheriff dislikes his unwelcome duty, and the colonel is compelled to give up the prisoner, though his daughter weeps bitter tears as Jack is led away, handcuffed.

As the sheriff and Jack ride along they are attacked by Indians, and in most thrilling scenes the two fight for their lives. The sheriff unlocks the handcuffs and gives Jack a revolver, and they jump about through the hills, keeping the redskins at a distance. The sheriff is finally wounded, and Jack carries his unconscious form to the top of a hill, where, from behind a huge rock, he makes his last stand. Jack's wounded horse limpingly makes his way back to the fort—mute evidence of what has occurred. The colonel calls out the troop and they gallop madly to the spot from where faint echoes of the shots are carried to their ears. With anger in their hearts, the soldiers dash among the redskins, and a furious battle ensues, in which the Indians are badly routed. Jack and the sheriff are tenderly carried back to the fort and revived, and nursed back to health. The colonel's daughter proves a tender nurse for Jack, but the spectre of the charge against Jack hovers over their happiness.

The consumptive, who has been guarding his guilty secret, nears his last hours, and in a repentant mood confesses to the physician. The doctor makes haste to lay this confession in the hands of the colonel, and Jack is restored to his position.

THE LATENT SPARK (Jan. 27).—The last installment of the mortgage was due on James Crosby's place and he had not the funds to meet it. Crosby's daughter, Sallie, sacriced all she had and still a $10 deficit remained. Then Ed Wilbur, ranch hand, came forth with his last penny and added to the little pile, making just enough to clear the mortgage. Sallie felt warmly toward him, but, a day later, looking into the yard, she saw Johnston, a burly mountain renegade, knock Ed down and when he rose Johnston knocked him down again. Johnston, sneering from the yard, called back to her, pointing derisively at the prostrate Ed.

Later the mountain renegade stole the mortgage funds. The family saw him do it and were powerless. Ed coming up, saw, and Johnston, with a laugh, felled him, mounted his horse and was off. Then rose the latent spirit in Ed. Leaping to his own horse, he gave pursuit. He reached the fast traveling thief, closed with him and the joy came at last to Ed. Furiously they struggled and the thief was hauled bodily from his saddle, the money taken from him and the former coward, now hero, rode back in triumph to his sweetheart.

WOMEN LEFT ALONE (Feb. 1).—The Jungle Man left his wife, for the Jungle Man heard the call of the sea. The Man of the Sea left his wife for he heard the call of the jungle. This instinct led them into the other's domain to witness wonders of the earth.

So the Jungle Man met the wife of the Man of the Sea. She understood his desires and was afraid of him for she was of the sea and the world. And so the Man of the Sea found his way to the wife of the Jungle Man, and being of the sea and the world, he understood and made known his desires, but she, instinct guided, fled from him.

And thus both the Man of the Sea and the Jungle Man, tired of their excursion and took separate ways to their separate homes, the wanderlust conquered, each harkening to the call of his mate.

BUILDING THE GREAT LOS ANGELES AQUEDUCT (Jan. 30).—The magnitude of this gigantic engineering project could with difficulty be overestimated. The pictures present with increasing and absorbing interest, the details of the work of construction, the difficulties encountered and the hardships overcome in such a colossal engineering problem, the foresight and wisdom of those responsible for this provision. Comfort and convenience of the present and future generations will undoubtedly reap the greater reward for the vast outlay entailed, both financially and of physical effort.

THE OPEN ROAD (Jan. 23).—Tom, the son of a millionaire, marries Gladys de Vere, a chorus girl. His father, hearing of this, disowns the boy. Learning that her husband will be penniless, Gladys soon leaves him. Tom, cast off by father and wife, has nowhere to go and listens to the lure of the open road. Answering its call, he becomes a tramp. Before long the long constant walking in the air makes a new man out of the dissipated youth. He meets a traveling Uncle Tom show and they give him a job pasting billboards. He falls in love with Linette, a pretty actress, thereby incurring the enmity of Joe Briggs, an actor. Joe and Tom come to blows and in this fight Tom discovers the good that the open road worked in his heretofore feeble muscles, and he knocks the actor out with no difficulty at all, thus winning the right to pay court to Linette. But as Tom looks into the trusting face of the girl, whom he knows returns his love, he remembers that other woman to whom he gave his name and he knows he has no right to make love to this girl.

A detective hired by Tom's father follows the show, and tells the boy that his father wants him back. When Tom asks for Gladys, he hears that she was never really his wife, as she had a husband living when she married him. Tom, in delight at his freedom, rushes to Linette and wins her consent to their marriage. But when his father learns that his son has again married an actress he refuses to receive him. Tom and Linette come to the city hoping to get work and while there read in the papers that the old man is very ill and that only the transfusion of blood from some healthy man can save him. Tom volunteers and readily passes the doctor's examination. His father is saved and when Tom is wheeled in and the old man hears the truth, he becomes reconciled to his son and to Linette.

THE MASQUERADERS (Jan. 25).—Harry Parson, temporarily embarrassed by some bad stock speculations, loves rich Dolly Gray and hates the sheriff and a bunch of subpoenas which are on his trail. Dolly is made miserable by an impetuous French fortune hunter, Count Briebert, whose suit is favored by Dolly's mother. Mrs. Gray to clinch the title, invites him to a dance that night, to which

Harry is invited by Dolly's brother, Dan. Harry is almost captured by the creditors and the sheriff who surround the house where the party is given. To escape arrest, he conceives the idea of masquerading in some of Dolly's clothes. Dan, the brother, thinks it is a great lark, and helps him dress. Dolly, so annoyed by the attentions of the Count Briebert, asks her brother Dan for advice. He has just finished with Harry's toilet, and he suggests that the girl dress up as a boy, attend the dance at the country club that night and play a trick on the count. Dolly agrees without telling Harry of the stunt. Dan takes his friend's dress suit, and slips it to his sister. When they all leave the house for the dance that night, Mrs. Gràу misses Dolly, but Dan tells her he will bring her. Dan takes Harry, dressed in girl's clothes, to the dance, where he is introduced as a visitor, and makes an immense impression with the other fellows.

Dan returns for his sister, and as he is taking her down to the taxicab she is arrested by the sheriff for debt, etc. Her pockets searched show the card case and some letters of Harry's person and the sheriff thinks his proof is perfect. Before he can search further, Dan manages to get him into the auto, ties his hands and they steal the sheriff, hurry to the dance, and get on inside. The sheriff is seen later working his way loose and escaping from the stable where he has been imprisoned. He goes out for assistance. At the dance the pretended boy has great fun with the count, insults him, challenges him and fights a duel, proving that the count is a coward and a sneak.

Meanwhile Harry is raising old nick with his pretended femininity and shocks the girls by dancing the Turkey Trot and smoking cigarettes as he waltzes. The count tries to make love to him, and he is walloped by Harry just as Dolly comes in and recognizes the supposed girl, and then tells about the adventure with the sheriff. While the dance is going on and complications setting in, Harry's lawyer follows to the country club to bring him the settlement due him, to square his debts. He is happy now, but in order to have some fun, proposes that they elope then and there, and surprise the old folks. Dolly agrees and they climb into a racing car, whiz to the minister and are married. Hurrying back to the dance, they are surrounded by the sheriff and his men. Walking out on the dance floor, where the sheriff and a posse are holding every one up at the pistol point, Harry pays his debts, proves his identity and tells the joke. The sheriff calls off his posse and every one is happy except the count, when the marriage is announced.

PUNCH.

THEIR FIRST BABY (Jan. 30).—May and Dick, a young couple, have a baby whom they think a wonder. They decide to relieve the maid for once and take their child out for the first time. Along the avenue they regard everyone to see if the baby is receiving proper admiration. When they meet a friend, Dick's pride in his son knows no dounds. They stop before a shop, for May has some things to buy. Will hubby watch baby for a while? Certainly hubby will be glad to do so. So May goes into the shop. Left alone with dad, the child commences to weep. Dick looks into the window; but May is still at the glove counter and he can catch no glimpse of her. The baby's roars increase. Dick is in despair. He goes to the door of the shop, but returns at an extra loud roar from baby. Afraid lest the baby die on his hands he grabs him out of the carriage and starts on a run to the doctor. An interfering gossip sees this, and thinks that Dick is a kidnapper. She follows and informs a boob cop who arrests Dick.

Meantime May has come out of the store, to find baby and husband missing. She nearly faints. She is attended by some ladies. She calls up the station and is told her baby is safe, but the bold, bad kidnapper is secure in a cell. Followed by the ladies, May hurries to the station where baby is placed in her arms. The ladies demand to see the kidnapper. Poor Dick is dragged out of his cell and at once all the ladies angrily fall upon him tooth and nail. May happens to look up a second from the baby, sees who it is and rushes to his defence. Dick is released and the pair start off with their baby, while the captain rates the boob cop, and the ladies look at one another in disgust because there was no scandal in town after all.

MAJESTIC.

HARRY'S LESSON (Jan. 19).—Harry, a lazy, good-looking chap, is the idol of his mother's heart. She pets and pampers him until his father is disgusted. Harry works in his dad's office, that is to say, he spends a few hours there every day. When the girls are all wild about Harry and when a crowd of them arrive for tea, they insist that mother call up the office and have Harry sent home. Father is furious, but obeying the habit of years, he sends the boy home to be adored and fussed over by the ladies. Then, one day, Isabel comes to pay them a visit. She is full of life and energy and Harry's languid ways amuse her. When he tries to flirt with her she chases him upstairs for her gloves and puts him very properly in his place.

Finding her a great novelty, as she refuses to adore him, he falls in love with her and proposes. Realizing she can make something out of the indolent boy she accepts him, providing that he earn a living for them both and remain no longer dependent upon his father. Harry promises and they are married. Then all is very different. Harry rises at seven and prepares the breakfast coffee for Isabel. After breakfast he goes to the office in the cars, for taxis are now a thing unknown. At the office he words as hard as any other clerk to please his father and to please Isabel. He cooks the meals and does all the work. His mother moans a bit over her boy's fate, but is forced to see the improvement in him. After a talk with father, Isabel hires a maid. Then for the first time she attends a little to her husband's comfort. For she knows he has learned his lesson and that things will all run smoothly.

THE CABBY AND THE DEMON (Jan. 21).—Jack and his sweetheart, Mabel, receive invitations to a masque ball. Mabel decides to dress in Pierrot's costume. Jack, to surprise Mabel, decides upon a nóvel and unusual makeup—getting his idea from a hansom cabby who mhe hails to take him home. The night of the ball, Babel is escorted by a friend masqued as Mephïsto, for Jack has ben detained at the office. Jack arrives made up exactly as the cabby who arrives later with another Mephisto, who having imbibed freely refuses to pay cabby his fare. Cabby follows the Mephisto into the ballroom and various complications occur because of the fact that two cabbys and two Mephistos are present at the festivities.

KAY-BEE.

WHEN LINCOLN PAID (2 reels—Jan. 31).—Abraham Lincoln is shown in his youth addressing an audience of village people on the street corner. A terrific thunder storm comes up, driving his auditors away, and Lincoln mounts his horse and rides away. The storm increases in fury, and Lincoln is compelled to seek shelter at a farm house, owned by a widow, Mrs. Barnes, who has a son about ten years of age, named Harry. Mrs. Barnes prepares a hearty meal for Lincoln, who dries himself at the hearth, and when the storm has ceased wishes to pay Mrs. Barnes for the meal. Knowing his poverty, she refuses to accept anything, and Lincoln gravely gives her an I. O. U., reading: "I. O. U. the price of one good meal. Also my life, as I might have lost it in the storm. Abe Lincoln, Lawyer."

Ten years later the Civil War breaks out, and Harry Barnes enlists. During the course of the war the Union soldiers take up headquarters with a Southern family, and Harry meets Betty and falls in love with her, and secures her promise to marry him after the war is over. As the Union soldiers move on they are caught in an ambush, and Harry's horse is shot from under him. He leaps into the thicket and in a running fight with his pursuers manages to elude them and takes refuge at Betty's home. Betty is fearful that Harry will be captured, and provides him with a suit of civilian's clothes, and that night he endeavors to steal back to his regiment. He is captured, however, and according to military rules is held as a spy, being caught within the enemy's lines without his uniform. Harry sends a letter to his mother telling her of the facts, and she makes an impassioned plea to General Porter, the Southern soldier, for the life of her son, but to no avail. Harry is shot, and a pathetic and dramatic scene takes place as the mother fondles the lifeless body of her boy and calls for vengeance upon the heads of those responsible for his death.

A month later General Porter lays plans to crush the North, and sends his son Bob to General Lee with plans of the Union fortifications. Bob has a narrow escape from capture, and in his flight comes upon the home of Mrs. Barnes. With her heart heavy with grief over the death of her son, her sympathy goes out to this hunted youth, and she hides him in the room formerly occupied by Harry. Bob has thrown his coat down, and the letter to Lee drops out. Mrs. Barnes reads it, and in a flash she plans a terrible revenge on General Porter. While Bob is sleeping in thorough exhaustion after his nights of peril, she hides his clothing and substitutes the uniform of her son, and when the Union soldiers come hunting for Bob she helps in his capture and accuses him of being a spy, turning over to the Union officer the letter to Lee and telling him that Bob came there posing as a Northern officer. Bob is arrested and held for trial as a spy.

The failure of Bob to deliver the letter leads to a terrific battle, in which the Confederates are driven back. Mrs. Barns, in calm contemplation of her work, realizes what an injustice she has done, and filled with remorse has terrible visions which nearly drive her mad. She finally resolves to appeal to Lincoln, and hurries to him. Her plea is overruled by the cabinet, but when Mrs. Barnes lays Lincoln's old I. O. U. in his hand and demands payment of his obligation, he is persuaded to sign the pardon which is rushed by fleet messengers to save the life of the Southern boy.

KEYSTONE.

THE MISTAKEN MASHER (Jan. 27).—Georgie Burns is a conceited, athletic individual, who has turned his home into a gymnasium. His pretty wife is exceedingly vexed but cannot cure him of his love for strenuous sports. A forlorn tramp comes to the door begging for a meal, and George promptly knocks him down.

Mrs. Burns goes to mail a letter and accidentally drops it. A good-looking stranger picks it up for her and drops it into the box. She thanks him and goes home. George has been watching the incident with jealous eyes, and when he sees that the stranger stands looking after his wife in admiration he conceives a brilliant plan. He sends a note to the stranger asking him to call, and receives him with great affectation of courtesy and politeness. He lures his guest into the gymnasium and inveigles him to put on the boxing gloves, and then proceeds to "trim" him nicely. It turns out, however, that the stranger is a pugilist, and before he gets through with George that gentleman is willing to sign a pledge never to look at a glove again.

THE DEACON OUTWITTED (Jan. 27).—The deacon's daughter, Betty, is in love with Harold Price. The deacon wants to buy a horse from Harry's father, but because Mr. Price will not give it to him at his own figure the deacon quarrels with Price, and forbids his daughter to see Harry. A troupe of minstrels, stranded, are walking back to New York, and Harry and Betty meet them. They make up as actors, and, accompanied by their new-found friends, rush to the deacon's home and tell him they are an eloping couple who wish to be married. The deacon ties the knot, and after the ceremony the make-up is removed, and he finds he has officiated at his own daughter's wedding. He finally sees the humor of the situation, and his charitable spirit is shared by Harry's father, who makes him a present of the horse he coveted.

A SNAKE IN HIS BOSOM (Jan. 7).—Colonel Melville, a French army officer while horse-back riding, flirts with a young widow, and with audacity worthy of a better cause, he introduces her to his wife and daughter with whom she becomes intimate.

At the widow's home, one evening, Colonel Melville seeing a man's photograph, asks who the man is. She replies that it is her cousin. The liaison between the Colonel and the widow develops beyond the platonic stage, and one evening in the Colonel's home, in the momentary absence of his wife, he kisses her. His daughter sees the act of infidelity. Realizing the widow's power over her father, which threatens rupture to their home, she knows not how to recall her father to his sense of duty.

An article in a newspaper, which by chance she reads, is an unexpected aid. The article tells of one Frederick Sturber, long suspected of being the head of a corps of spies acting for a nation hostile to France, who disappeared as he was about to be arrested. His subordinates, the article continued, many of whom are women, are being sought by the police. Over this article was a dissipation, he finds himself separated from his wife and position.

His wife, now burdened with a child, is forced to seek employment. Fate guides her to the house of her husband's mother, whom she doesn't know. Here she is employed as a housekeeper and the duplicate of the picture of the man she had seen on the mantelpiece of the woman now seducing her father. She then realizes that the widow's interest in her father is of greater significance than that of things personal—that she is using the Colonel as a catspaw to learn secrets of French fortification known to the Colonel in his official capacity.

Colonel Melville is horrified to reflect how he has been duped. His anger is partly that of the enraged vanity of the middle-aged man who finds that he has been the tool of a woman. He goes to this Delilah who had almost shorn his locks, metaphorically speaking, and who had almost caused him to become traitor to his country, as well as to his family. The widow is not glad to see him. She is seated at a desk writing a letter, which letter she attempts to hide. He suspects that it concerns him and information she might have got out of him. A fight ensues in which she desperately tries to prevent him from getting the inciminating letter.

Part of the letter read: "I am sending you the plan of Fort A. E. Its importance will be obvious to you. As to the required estimate, I

The Colonel, spirit-broken and thoroughly penitent returns home where condonation awaits him.

THE DUNGEON OF DESPAIR (Jan. 21).—Brevort takes his young bride to his castle which has been unoccupied since the time of the Revolution. There is a legend that parts of the building, built in the time of Louis XIII, were built over dungeons and that in the French Revolution, persons mysteriously disappeared. The young wife, in a spirit of fun, goes to hide in a huge chest standing in a hallway near her room. She steps into it. Its bottom being movable she falls into the dungeon far below. There is a wild search for her in the morning and the young husband, with anxiety distraught, goes to Paris to engage the aid of a detective. David Daniels, sleuth, returns with Brevort and makes a search for the missing wife. The old chest interests him. He steps into it, and like Mme. Brevort plunges through the bottom into the dungeon. Here he finds the girl who is nearly starved. Around her are the skeletons of the unfortunates who here perished. The detective is resourceful and taking his revolver, fires upward through the chest. Brevort hears the report and lowers a ladder to the captives, who climb to safety.

SOLAX.

THE WRONG BOX (Jan. 29).—Fred Meade, an artist, by mistake sends his sweetheart a box containing a pair of his trousers to be repaired, while to a tailoress he sends a beautiful bunch of roses. In the box containing the trousers he puts a note requesting his sweetheart to wear them and meet him at their trysting-place that evening. The tailoress receives the box containing the flowers, meant for the sweetheart, with a note asking her to cut them off about four inches and returns them that evening. The sweetheart is so incensed at his supposed insult, that she throws the trousers out of the window, where a passing tramp finds them, and hurries away with them.

The tailoress, a spinster, although nonplussed at the request, cuts off the long stems of the roses four inches, puts them back in the box and returns them. Fred, supposing them to be the trousers, and with only a few minutes to catch a train, never examines the contents, but snatches the box and hurries for his train, leaving a card tacked on the door that he will return in three days. The tramp finding Fred's address in the trousers pocket, goes to return them the following day, and on reading the card on the door, gains an entrance to the house by a cellar window. He then proceeds to enjoy himself by dressing up in Fred's clothes, and ordering by telephone all kinds of good things to eat and drink. After feasting and drinking to excess, he wanders through the streets in an intoxicated condition, but because of his being well dressed, and finding Fred's card in his pocket, a policeman supposing him to be the artist, takes him back to the house and puts him to bed. The morning paper, however, contains an account of the arrest, and meets the eye of the tailoress, who comes to the conclusion that Fred was drunk when he sent her the roses, and immediately takes the paper to the sweetheart's home to show her. She refuses to listen to it at first, but as the fact of her having received the trousers dawns upon her, she begins to believe it, and both start out to investigate. They reach Fred's house, and seeing the remains of the feast, empty bottles and other signs of the debauch, and finally the man in bed, the sweetheart is overcome with grief. Fred returns from his trip, however, and his arrival on the scene soon straightens out the tangle, and everything is explained with a happy ending.

THE SCHEMING WOMAN (Jan. 31).—Turner Brooks, a young millionaire, is engaged to marry Dora Carton, a charming girl, but in modest circumstances. Emma DeWolf, an extravagant, malicious creature, is hard pressed by her creditors and desiring to marry Turner for his money, tries by every means to poison his mind against Dora by making him believe that Dora wants to marry him for his gold. She fails, however, in her efforts, and Turner and Dora are happily married. Months pass now until one day Emma received a letter from Dora telling her how happy she is, and asking her to call. Emma seeing a chance to separate the couple and win Turner, maliciously changes Dora's words, making them read that Dora married Turner for his money only. When Emma calls, she intentionally drops the letter, so that Turner finds it. Naturally, he is horrified and in a rage denounces his wife. She tries to explain, but he, beside himself, pulls a package of bills out of his pocket, flings them in Dora's face, and picking up his hat rushes for the door. Dora, humiliated, horrified, recovers herself, rushes to him, holds him back, and with that ominous calm of tragic feeling, puts on her hat, and leaves the house herself.

Emma lures Turner to her by her bewitching charms, but he growing suspicious, has a notice inserted in a paper, that he has suddenly lost all his money. He shows the notice to Emma and she believing, recoils from him. He understanding now, knowing her motives to be mercenary, rushes to his home. Dora having read the notice in the paper, is delighted, for now she can return to her husband and prove her love. Emma too goes to him, for she has learned the falsity of the report, and hopes to win him by pretense. Both women rush to him, and he has to decide between them, and after a dreadful moment knowing the dross from the gold folds his little wife in his arms.

GREAT NORTHERN.

JOHN STEALS A FURLOUGH (Jan. 25).—John is an enlisted soldier and is such in name only. The dull routine of life in the barracks gets on his nerves and his thoughts revert to the old home life and the sweetheart that he had left behind when he was obliged to enter the service of his country. While he is brooding over his sad fate, he receives a note from his lady love informing him that she has arrived in town and will meet him in a music hall and summer garden close to the barracks. John is elated to such an extent that he fails to communicate with the lieutenant, who is his superior, and he proceeds to leave the barracks through a window after the other soldiers have retired to slumber. The lieutenant, however, is also an admirer of John's sweetheart and follows him to the place of meeting. The dear girl and John are having a most enjoyable time over their steins, when the lieutenant is espied in the offing. John makes a hasty disappearance under the table at which he has been seated and the lieutenant takes the chair that he had been occupying a few moments before. John is obliged to be an unwilling listener to the love making of the lieutenant and finally, in desperation, he decides to go back to the barracks. The lieutenant again trails him and places him under arrest on a charge of desertions. John is placed in a cell and is having visions of life imprisonment, when his sweetheart enters the office of the lieutenant and demands that John be released, otherwise she will inform the colonel of the former's visit to the summer garden. The latter is obliged, for self-protection, to release the valiant John and the latter is granted a furlough for a few hours, instead of being obliged to steal it.

LUX.

FACE TO FACE WITH A LEOPARD (Jan. 17).—Jack and Mary are sweethearts, but a jealous rival betrays them to Mary's father, who angrily dismisses Jack from his employ, and forbids his daughter to have any more to do with him.

Mary makes arrangements to meet Jack secretly, and they fix a meeting-place upon the cliffs.

That afternoon, Tom, the negro servant, tells Mary that he knows where to find a baby leopard. Mary accompanies Tom to the leopard's den, and Tom makes a perilous descent over the cliffs to the lair. The mother leopard is absent, but when she returns and finds her cub gone she immediately starts in search of it.

When Mary learns that the infuriated beast has started in the direction of the trysting-place, she hastens to warn Jack, who is on his way. The leopard gets there first, and attacks Mary, but fortunately Jack arrives in time to save her, and thus wins her father's gratitude and forgiveness.

THE MAGIC CARPET (Jan. 24).—James is shaking the drawing-room carpet upon the heads of the passers-by who take a violent objection to this treatment. Seizing the carpet they pull James, carpet and all, out of the window. Upon touching the ground, the carpet becomes bewitched, and James is borne upon it to the consternation of all beholders who proceed to follow the carpet. A chase is the result.

MISCELLANEOUS

KINEMACOLOR

WILD BIRDS OF ASIA—Turnstone Curlew.—A light brown bird with white markings. Its similarity in color to its surroundings is very striking. Most of the stones in its vicinity are brown, interspersed here and there with white ones, so that the bird matches them exactly.

Young Kestrels.—These are pretty little dabs of fluff, all clinging to a branch of a tree.

Lapwing.—A lively bird with a curious tuft of feathers erect at the back of its head,

Asiatic Short-eared Owl, and its prey. A sleepy-looking creature which takes aparently little interest in the food it has secured.

Young Cuckoo, with its fostermother. The cuckoo's beak is wide open in expectation of food, and as its foster parent does not seem to have any for it, it attacks the long-suffering bird with considerable vigor.

Eagle Owl and its Young.—The brilliant yellow eyes of the owl are shown with surprising realism. The markings of the feathers are also shown perfectly. A group of young eagle owls follows. The expressions of their faces in some cases are positively comical.

Young Long-eared Owl.—Differences between this and the eagle owl just seen are clearly indicated by Kinemacolor. The eyes are of the same bright golden hue, but there is a greater variety in the markings of the head. The bird's aspect is ridiculously solemn.

CROW FEEDING ON WILD DUCK.—The sheen on the crow's black plumage is strikingly shown, and is another instance of the ability of the Kinemacolor to render blacks more faithfully than monotone photography.

Asiatic Eagle Owl devouring a bustard.

Young Magpies in Nest.—This is an exceedingly pretty picture; all the magpies have their beaks wide open, and they are evidently calling lustily for food.

A GIRL WORTH HAVING.—The girl's brother goes to the bad and steals; he escapes the men who saw him steal and runs to his sister, who hides him in an old well. The sheriff and his men come to search the house, but find no one. The sheriff is in love with the girl and begs her forgiveness; this she does on condition that he bring their friends and have a dance that night at her house. She hopes during the dance to let her brother make his escape. She succeeds in hiding him in her bed room. When the cowboys and girls come for the dance the girl will not allow any man to dance who carries a gun. They laughingly give them up to her. There is a rival to the girl, Ruth, who loves the sheriff also, but whom he does not love. Ruth finds out that the brother is in the house and tells the sheriff, but the men have no guns and the boy escapes.

Before leaving the boy pins a note in his sister's sunbonnet, telling her he will hide in a certain cave, and for her to bring him a horse. The next day the sister finds the note, tears it up, but one piece, with the name of the cave, falls and Ruth gets it and takes it to the sheriff. He, with his men, start after the boy.

The sister arrives at the cave before the sheriff, where she changes clothes with her brother. When the sheriff and his men arrive they see a girl riding down one road and a boy the other. They ride after the supposed boy. Unable to make the rider halt, they shoot, only to find they have shot the girl. In the end the girl forgives the sheriff and promises to marry him. The brother writes that he got away safely and promises to reform.

FIXING FATHER.—Father refuses to allow his daughter to marry Tom. Father takes his daughter off in his auto. Tom, trying to follow on foot, is nearly exhausted when he sees a motorcycle by the road. He steals it but is arrested. We see him next with a gang of prisoners in convict garb, working the roads. He manages to escape, hotly pursued by guards and convicts. A scarecrow, standing in a field, affords a refuge, and guards and men rush by. An old farmer discovers the convict and gives the alarm—it is off and away again for Tom. A box af waste paper is his next hiding place. This is placed in a cart with other trash and dumped overboard.

The next scene is funny beyond measure, as the poor fellow vainly tries to get upon the box, which is constantly turned over and over by the waves. In desperation he determines to swim for shore. Father and daughter in their launch, see a man struggling in deep water and go to him. When the poor, drenched Tom is nearly in the boat, father recognizes him, throws him back again, leaving him to swim to shore if he can.

Father dons a bathing suit and goes for a swim. Soaking wet, Tom arrives on the beach, sees the clothes, hangs his soaking wet prison garb on the post and goes off in father's clothes, miles too big for him. Father comes to dress. Sees the wet striped garb and is compelled to use it, though it is miles too small.

Between times we see the guards and their prisoners hunting for the escaped convict. They arrive and find father and he is forced to work on the roads with the other convicts. All ends happily at the police station, where Tom pays all fines with father's money and gets the girl.

To the Owners and Operators of Moving Picture Theatres

You, in order to have regular patrons to your theatre, must give, not only good clean pictures, but they must be perfectly clear, steady, and not flicker.

If the pictures which you throw are unsteady, and are blurred, and hurt your eyes, do you think any one of your patrons would come back to your theatre the second time?

No Sir! It does not cost your patrons any more to go to a theatre where they show good pictures, than it does to come to yours.

The success of your theatre rests solely with your machine. If it is not perfect you are not going to draw the people.

Now then; what machine is as near perfect as it is possible to make one?

Why, a "POWER'S" of course.

Get busy. Write us for descriptive catalogue and prices.

Have the best. It does not cost one cent more.

SELIG

Offers Drama, Melodrama, Comedy and Romance

New Attractions for the New Year

Jan. 27th.

The Miner's Justice

A striking drama of the virile western mining camps. An old prospector strikes it rich, but refuses to sell to gratify the greed of his young partner. The young man tries dynamiting. About 1,000 ft.

Jan. 28th.

A Canine Matchmaker

A picturesque playlet in which a bashful and hesitant man is helped out of his courtship predicament by his clever dog. A story not only astonishing, but amusing as well. About 1,000 ft.

Jan. 29th.

The Empty Studio

The dramatic romance of a painter and his beautiful model. Entered in a big prize contest and unable to complete his picture because of a sudden accident, the artist sees his masterpiece completed and watches it win through the aid of the model. About 1,000 ft.

Jan. 30th.

The Lesson

One of those rare human interest dramas of present day tragedy. A misunderstanding arises between a department store clerk and her fiancé over the attentions of a kind floor-walker. About 1,000 ft.

Jan. 31st.

The Altar of the Aztecs

A romance dealing with the vivid and strange adventures of a young mining engineer in the mountains and mines of old Mexico. He wins out with a lot of experience and a sweetheart. About 1,000 ft.

Be sure and book the picture that all Americans will want to see

"THE COWBOY MILLIONAIRE"

In two reels. Selig's greatest Western masterpiece. Released soon. And don't forget "The Lipton Cup," introducing Sir Thomas Lipton." Released as a regular on Jan. 20th. Be sure and book it.

The Barton Piano Attachment and Electric Musical Chimes

Can be played by any pianist, because the principle is exactly like that of a pipe organ key board, but in a very simple form. The left hand plays the accompaniment on the piano, and the right hand plays the melody on the chimes.

Also made with drummers' key board.

When purchasing a screen buy one with a guarantee; a guarantee backed up by the largest metallized curtain company in America; a guarantee that actually protects you.

Our goods are honestly made, they please the most exacting men in the foremost ranks of photoplay exhibitors. From all parts of America they write us saying they never saw pictures properly portrayed until they saw them on the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN. The one best picture surface.

Give us a chance; if we cannot please you no one else can. Realistic, true to life and nature, soft, bright enough to be clear and sharp, every detail is brought out; the beautiful, harmonious blending of colors appeal to everyone—certainly a contrast between this and a hard, cold reflective screen that is ruinous to young and old alike.

The Curtain that made Daylight Projection possible—MIRROROIDE the Original! The Only Matte Surfaced Metallic Screen on the Market.

PATENTS PENDING

is sold under a positive five-year guarantee. Used by 3,104 exhibitors to date.

MIRROROIDE, besides saving you one-third on your juice bill, will permit you to keep your theatre brightly illuminated during projection, giving you perfect moral conditions and bringing you select patronage.

Pictures 200 per cent. brighter, clear as crystal, and wonderful perspective. Without that hazy-glary-out-of-focus effect so common in other metallic screens. Three months' old film looks like fourth-run on

A MIRROROIDE SCREEN.

MIRROROIDE can be firmly cemented to any plaster wall screen, or properly screened without a wrinkle in less than thirty minutes.

MIRROROIDE is the only screen that will not lose the picture close up, or detortionize at an angle view. Leading experts acknowledge it the peer of all—bar none—the world's best. Get our free samples. Test any way you desire.

Gundlach Projection Lenses

The Only Lenses Which Guarantee You The Best Pictures
The Only Lenses Giving The Greatest Possible Illumination
The Only Lenses Exact in Focal Length To Within 1-100 of an Inch

There were no high grade Lenses on the market until GUNDLACH LENSES were made and none now that equal them in optical quality and illuminating power.

The GUNDLACH NO. 2 PROJECTION LENSES made the long throw possible and already hundreds of theater owners have taken advantage of this opportunity to increase their theaters in length and seating capacity adding to their profits at the same time.

The superior quality of GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES is recognized by the leading makers of machines and they will be supplied to order in place of the ordinary lens equipment at very little increase in price.

No matter how well satisfied you are with your picture we invite you to order a GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENS for trial to see the difference. Nearly all our lenses are sold to exhibitors who have ordinary lenses, but are looking for something better. In many cases a customer orders one lens for trial and then re-equips all his machines, sometimes the machines of several theaters.

GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES are used by the Kinemacolor Company of America because they must have the best.

THIS LETTER TELLS THE STORY

Mr. J. H. Hallberg
Jacksonville, Ill., Jan. 12, 1913

Dear Sir: "I have recently acquired the Gem Theatre in this city, and in order to make a success of it, it will be absolutely necessary to keep expenses at the very lowest possible point, and I am unable to see how I can do so without a 'Hallberg Economizer.'

"Fred L. Wakefield."

The above is an unsolicited testimonial, and is conclusive evidence of the esteem in which the "Hallberg" is held by those who have once used my Economizer.

Buy the Hallberg Standard A. C. Economizer only. It saves the most and gives the best light.

Write for price list of "USED MACHINE BARGAINS" and also second-hand current saving devices of all makes

I EQUIP THEATRES COMPLETELY

Hundreds of exhibitors, in all parts of the country have benefited by my advice, without any charge, saving money in their original equipment, and by purchasing from me securing only the right goods and the best made.

FULL LINE OF M. P. SUPPLIES

The Hallberg Ticket Dispenser—Takes all standard tickets. Write for circular giving full description and price.

Free Circulars on all makes of M. P. Machines, but Hallberg's Big Catalogue, 100 Pages, costs you 25c by mail.

J. H. HALLBERG, 36 East 23rd Street, NEW YORK

I have been appointed distributor for all makes of motion picture machines under the new Sales plan. Dealers should apply promptly for contract.

WOMAN DECOYED INTO HOUSE; ATTACKED BY SAVAGE BEAST

SAVED BY FRIEND'S OPPORTUNE ARRIVAL

Widow of John Waring, South African Prospector, Victim of Conspiracy. Stealing of Gold Bearing "Claim" Motive of Mine Manager and His Accomplice. Two Reels of Adventure

IN THE CLAWS OF THE LEOPARD

This state right feature film, while depicting the motives of men alike in jungle and metropolis, is an antithetis to which in two reels tells of the greed of a mine owner which costs the lives of many drowned miners when the mine weakens under hydraulic force. There is a strong scene when the wife of one of the drowned miners, though realizing that her husband had died through the mine magnate's cupidity, defends him in her home against the angry kin of dead miners.

Significantly is shown the retributive power of natural justice when the mine owner, in agony lest he be surrendered to the non-gentle hands that itched to wreak vengeance upon him, dies of fear.

State Rights Sales are continuing on a three-reel detective story, in which love and adventure weave a curious crochet. Also on a three-reel portrayal showing that wickedness will be punished, and how, through science and coincidence, mind and matter contrive to bring the malefactor to condign punishment.

"The White Glove Band"

Also to be mentioned are

"The Bridge of Sorrow" (2 reels)
"The International Conspiracy" (3 reels)
"Perils of the Atlantic" (2 reels)
"The Vengeance of Egypt" (3 reels) and
"In the Land of the Lions" (2 reels—hand-colored).

An Opportunity

The Gaumont Co.'s advertisements have aroused interest, and they have received much correspondence regarding exclusive rights to Gaumont Weekly, being open in parts of the United States. Mention that disappointment would be avoided by the immediate sending of inquiries was timely.

Watching Copyrights

As a guard against unprincipled persons who seek to duplicate film they could not otherwise buy or produce, the Gaumont Co. have their lawyers active at Washington.

Through Film Supply Co.

Shipments of all Gaumont releases will continue to go through the Film Supply Co. of America.

Direct your inquiries to Flushing, New York City.

NEXT!!!

(A Gorgeous 3-Reel Powers)

Right on the heels of "Sheridan's Ride," which itself is without question the best three-reel subject ever made in America, and which goes to Universal exhibitors AT NO ADDITIONAL COST OVER THEIR REGULAR FILM SERVICE PRICE, comes the Universal's next three-reel masterpiece, entitled,

"SNOW WHITE"

(A Famous Fairy Tale in 3 Reels)

You will be intensely proud of the Universal when you see "Snow White." It is simply superb in costumes and settings and a pure delight in acting by the celebrated Powers kids and a big cast. It will give you a totally new idea of what great big things we can accomplish with our mammoth Pacific Coast organization. Watch for it, and, meantime, remember that

LINCOLN J. CARTER IS NOW WORKING ON SOME GREAT MELODRAMAS FOR THE BEST PROGRAM IN THE WIDE WORLD!

We are also about ready to announce other big pieces of news that will thrill every Universal exhibitor with delight. In fact, we are doing about ten times as much for you as anyone else is. AND WE'RE GOING TO WIN YOU SURE!

SCENARIO WRITERS, READ THIS:

Insure Your Future
Mr. Exhibitor!

There was a time when some of you were positively afraid to show Independent films in your theatre, even when you knew they were better in quality than the ones you were using. No such fear should stand in your way now. We have demonstrated that the quality of our pictures is superior and that our program is a gem of perfection. The fact that the Universal is not violating any of the laws of the land and the further fact that it is not a stock-jobbing proposition but a sincere, honest and determined movement to make and sell films of best quality should prove to you once for all that THE UNIVERSAL PROGRAM IS POSITIVELY THE SAFEST FOR YOU TO USE, IN EVERY RESPECT. If you care to insure the future of your theatre, then begin immediately to—

A Letter of Commendation from a Prominent Western Exchange Man:

I wish to congratulate you on the fine productions of the "Flying A" Company. I have taken great pains in seeing all American films in the past. They are certainly getting better every day and the photography is beautiful.

The exhibitors of this territory are all very anxious to get all American Films. There are less complaints of poor subjects than on any other make. All subjects are well acted, and they certainly make a great hit.

For instance—"Starbucks" is the talk of the territory. Every exhibitor that has shown this great feature has asked for another booking.

Wishing you all the success in the future, I beg to remain.

> "The Solax Company has made a thriller of the thirty-third degree. It is bound to be a huge success. A single showing is not enough. One would like to see it several times."

The production is more remarkable and more noteworthy than other productions, because in nearly all of the scenes the players appear alongside of the wild beasts.

KAY-BEE THRILLING FEATURES

TWO REELS "THE FAVORITE SON" FEB. 7

A sensational and thrilling war story, in which Jim, the favorite son, is a coward at heart. His brother, Bill, saves him from disgrace by acts of self-sacrifice on the battle-field, and gives Jim his chance for liberty when they are held prisoners. Jim repays this kindness by telling Molly, whom Bill loves, that his brother died in prison and persuades her to marry him. On the day of the wedding Bill comes home in time to protect his village from a band of guerrillas, who are driven off in a fierce hand-to-hand fight, and while running away from danger Jim is struck by a stray bullet and killed.

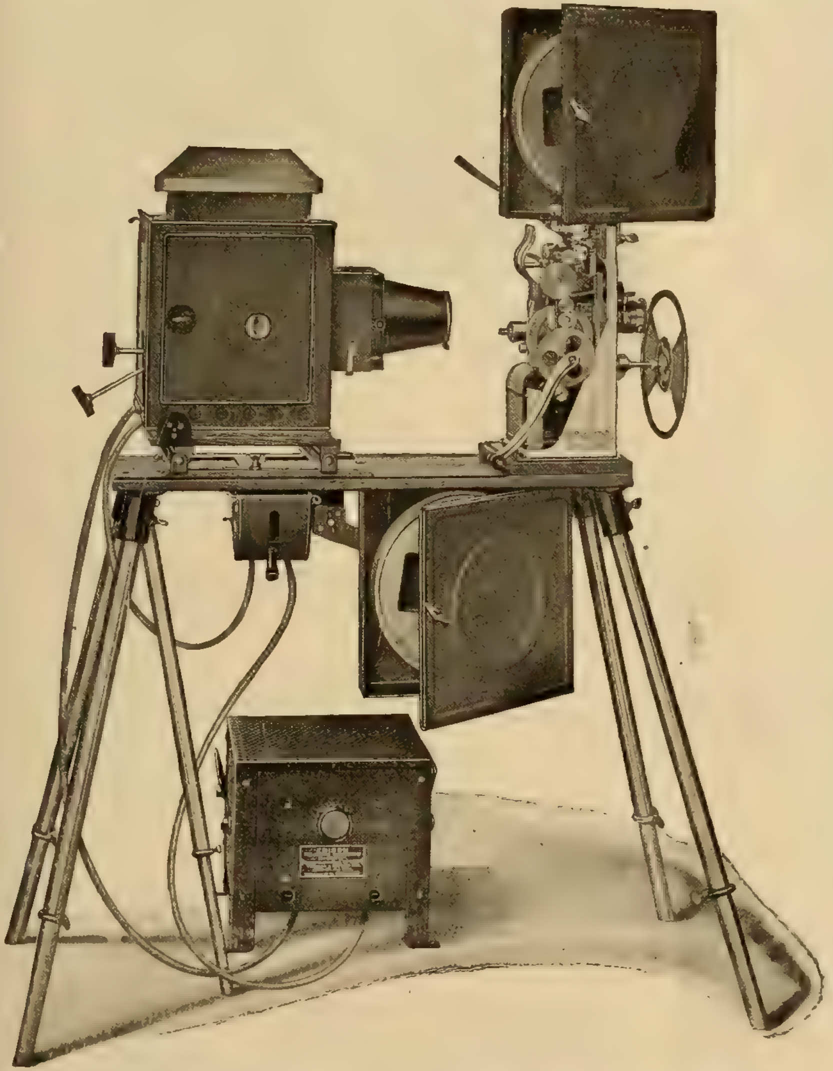
The Edison has always been noted for its steady projection but that is not enough—all possibility of unsteadiness must be eliminated. So the Edison is now equipped with four floor sockets for the heavy legs. A new oiling system feeds the main bearings from a central oil cup, assuring uniform lubrication, with the greatest convenience to the operator.



But these minor improvements would be of no importance if the machine itself were not constructed of the best materials that can be put into it.

"ON THE THRESHOLD"

Tuesday, January 28th

" On The Threshold "

Richard Cartridge would rather spend his evenings at home with his wife and child, but Mrs. Cartridge thinks that real happiness is only to be found in a whirl of society. She makes an engagement to go to the theatre with a mutual friend. He calls for her in his auto, and she leaves despite her husband's objections. As she is about to enter the machine, she repents, and goes to spend the evening with her mother. Cartridge, worried and annoyed, sits by the fireside with his child, and dreams of the many incidents of the happy past. The wife returns, tells where she has been and all is forgiven.

Facts and Comments

"NO picture," said an exhibitor recently to the writer, "goes on this screen unless I have seen it myself and am willing to show it to my own wife and children. When I am in doubt, or if any objection is made by any representative element in the community, I am doubly careful." The words of this particular exhibitor are entitled to great respect, for in the short time of six months he has converted a dead and empty house into a paying proposition. Every one of his three shows in the evening is crowded to capacity, and the capacity is in excess of a thousand seats. We believe that exhibitors of this type will eventually be the most effective censors of the motion picture. When the exhibitor refuses to show a film because it is stupid or immoral or tiresome, he strikes the solar plexus of the man who has made the picture. He discourages the exchange which handles bad stuff. He cuts down the demand for the cheap things and helps to raise the standard.

PICTURES showing the harrowing details of an execution by hanging ought never to be passed by a board of censorship. It is no excuse to say that the execution was part of a dream. To the audience it is frightfully real, nevertheless. It is bad enough to flash a view of a gibbet before the eyes of an audience and to indicate, however dimly, that a human being is about to be done to death. To revel in such details and to stretch them out with painstaking care and an evident morbid relish, is an intolerable offence. What excuse can an exhibitor make to the outraged parents of boys and girls who are shocked and sickened by such exhibitions? It has cost years of agitation to abolish public executions. Are they to be revived by the motion pictures?

THE advantage of a clean, educational entertainment on Sunday in which the motion picture and the lecture form the two important parts of the program seems to commend itself not alone to exhibitors but to public-spirited citizens generally. We are informed that in a small New England city a number of business men are sponsors for a movement to hold Sunday afternoon meetings in the city opera house. A committee, of which a clergyman is chairman, has been in communication with a film supply house and has secured the promise of suitable pictures for every one of the ten proposed Sunday meetings. No stated admission will be charged, but a collection will be taken up. If there is any deficiency at the end of the series, an association of local business men will make it good. If past experience is any indication of the probabilities of the future, there will be no deficiency. The Sunday entertainment is patronized wherever it has come into vogue.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD wishes to thank the many exhibitors who have written in appreciation of our efforts for a Sunday entertainment under proper restrictions. It is no small source of pleasure to us that exhibitors approach the Sunday question just in that spirit of moderation and diplomacy which we have so earnestly recommended. They are uniformly careful to lay stress on the fact that they believe in a special program for Sundays. A petition addressed to the legislature of Indiana, for instance, urges a proper supervision of Sunday programs as a condition for the granting of the Sunday entertainment. Everywhere exhibitors use the columns of the daily press for a campaign in favor of the right kind of Sunday exhibitions. If our friends persevere and continue to show tact combined with energy the result in the vast majority of cases will be a victory for the exhibitor.

In the state of New Jersey a well-known society woman, who had been acting as a sort of honorary president of the various charitable and correctional institutions, deplores the evil effects of the motion picture on the minds of the young. We urge her to be more specific. Let her mention the objectionable picture by name, and there will be a basis for useful action. These broad and indiscriminate statements, no matter how sincere they may be, do absolutely no good whatever.

WE believe that with certain exceptions the moving picture audience of today has outgrown the illustrated song. The exception in the main is the small and generally rural community, where "everybody knows everybody else" and where interest in local talent is always keen. In the larger theaters in such cities as New York, Chicago, Boston and Philadelphia, the illustrated song elicits but a very weak response from the audience. We have in many electric theaters in the big cities fine and intelligent audiences, consisting of mostly grown people in commercial and even professional walks of life. Audiences of this kind ought not to be asked to join some callow youth with untamed vocal cords in a chorus, wherein the singer assures an imaginary sweetheart that he will love her until "the sands of the desert grow cold." Nor is this the worst. There are some very nasty and vulgar songs which are simply obnoxious to the men who go to such theaters with their wives or daughters. When the manager of a metropolitan moving picture theater on Broadway can find no lesson in the profound silence that greets the showing of the chorus slide on the screen he casts a serious cloud on the title to his salary. There was a manager of a large house who, when multiple reels became numerous, would sandwich cheap vaudeville in between the different parts of a feature. This sort of nonsense has been stopped. To persist in asking a thousand sane and intelligent adults to burst into "song" at the end of each show shows either a cruel disposition or an approach to idiocy. There are other and less drastic means of emptying a house.

Moving picture theaters must not be made responsible for the spreading of bad songs. One sure way of avoiding such a reproach is their total elimination from the electric theater. A prominent Western daily after deploring the many obscene and disgusting "popular songs" holds the motion picture theater responsible for their wide circulation. The paper goes on to say: "The demand for 'popular' songs is greater than ever before because such songs are heard in public a hundred times to-day where they were heard once a dozen years ago. This is due to the cheap motion picture and vaudeville houses. Unfortunately these places are too often run by people who mistake noise for applause. It takes only a very few to make a great noise." The paper might have gone further and pointed out that the noisy element is a distinct detriment to any reputable motion picture house. They make order impossible and a theater given over to rowdyism of any kind will not last long.

"Marionettes"

By W. Stephen Bush

"THEATRES DES MARIONETTES" in English "puppet shows" had a great vogue in France and Italy for almost two centuries. These countries and neighboring states were dotted with puppet shows. There were playwrights who wrote comedies and dramas for this sort of entertainment. There were many superior factories of marionettes. At times their popularity seriously affected the revenues of the great theaters of Rome and Paris. At last, however, when the charm of novelty had worn off, people began to remember that they had after all been looking at dummies made out of wood and pasteboard. The fiercest villain and the most virtuous heroine were in the end nothing but "figures suspended by threads on wires and imitating with their limbs and heads the movements of living persons."

In the products of many manufacturers of motion pictures here and abroad the careful observer cannot fail to detect a fatal resemblance to marionettes. I am not speaking of the actors and actresses of the silent drama. It is only just to say that their work has steadily improved. Not only are there dozens of stars who would do credit to any stage, but the average has improved wonderfully. If they are playing the parts of puppets, it is not their fault, but the fault of the directors who give them no chance to play any other part.

It would be quite impossible within the limits of a short newspaper article to point out all the marionette parts forced upon the actors of the silent stage. As all criticism to be of practical value must be specific, a few of the marionette parts will be pointed out.

Have we not had enough, for instance, of the "Western Gambler"? There is a genuine marionette with no resemblance to any actual living thing. Low-browed, silk-hatted, knife in his boot and always cheating at cards. Are we not all heartily tired of the "Mexican half-breed" with fierce moustachios, an impossible sombrero, a furtive manner and a drawn stiletto? His loss on the screen would be a distinct gain to the quality and variety of the motion picture. "The great detective," too, lags superfluous on the kinematographic stage. Well-deserved ridicule has taken away quite a little of his ancient popularity, but there is still many a producer who takes refuge in that cheap and ancient fiction. The sheriff, especially the Western brand, is likewise entitled to a long rest. The public is more than willing to give him a prominent place on the list of those "who never will be missed." Somebody's "Revenge" or "Vengeance" belongs to moving picture antiquities. It deserves quite a large niche in the museum of kinematographic relics, to which all rural or so-called "b'gosh" comedies and dramas ought likewise to be consigned. Our readers know what we think of the undue prevalence and prominence of the cowboy. This is the worst marionette of all.

Prisoners, whether captive, escaping or escaped, are decidedly de trop. According to statistics, about one person in ten thousand is in prison, but in the studios, where they are trying to substitute the marionette for the kinematograph, there is a most outrageous defiance of statistics. Then there is the rough-looking person, who is addicted to appropriating the horses of other people. As we see him in so many motion pictures, he presents all the artificial qualities of the marionette and gives one the impression of being strung on wires. His appearance and action never vary in the slightest. Due for an early exit is the burglar. He is another puppet, for in nine cases out of ten the same wires are pulled and he goes through the same motions. Be it well understood that the public object to these figures, not alone because they are objectionable from a moral point of view, but because they are tiresome and, like marionettes, destroy the illusion of reality.

These marionettes are not imitations of nature, but strictly inventions of studios. In the marionette performances of old, two things recurred constantly: weddings and deaths. Of course, weddings and deaths are quite common in real life, but one is much like the other, and to show in unending succession the ceremony of marriage and the agony of death is not only very tiresome but bespeaks deplorable mental poverty on the part of producer and director. Even the novelist and the playwright spare the public in this matter, and do not insist on a constant repetition of the details of marriages and death struggles. The temptation is great, because a wedding or demise is always good for about a hundred feet or more, and it is very cheap to the producer.

The root of all the evils so briefly indicated here may easily be found. Producers seem to entertain a very low opinion of the tastes and rights of the motion picture audiences. Pictures today are still on the flood tide of popularity. Hostile agitation, drastic laws, denunciation by the press and persecution by all kinds of reformers have had no power to check this popularity. We do not, of course, attempt to compare the motion picture with the marionette in any sense of the word; the marionette was a purely mechanical invention, while the kinematograph makes a universal appeal to humanity and has the roots of an art.

The vitality of the motion picture may not be doubted. Its educational power alone assures its permanence as a factor in our civilization. It is, however, entirely within the bounds of the possible that the kinematograph as a form and means of amusement will lose prestige and popularity at least for a time, unless people are entertained with something better than a procession of marionettes, representing nothing except the cheap taste and barren imagination of directors in distress.

The novelty of the invention is dying off; what we need now is some novelty in the means of utilizing the invention for the genuine entertainment of all the people.

"THE MIRACLE" AT BALTIMORE.

"The Miracle," the well-known four-reel production of the German Art Film Society, was exhibited in Baltimore at Albaugh's Theater in the week ending January 6th. The attendance was good and the presentation of the films very creditable. An orchestra of twelve pieces rendered the special musical score, which had been prepared by Mr. E. Luz. Mr. Louis Bache, formerly assistant manager of the Electric Theater Supply Company and recently connected in a prominent way with the General Film Company of Philadelphia, had charge of the projection and his skillful work elicited praise from the press and the public. Prices ranged from 25 cents to one dollar.

Rapp: Have you noticed the deliberation with which some ticket sellers at the bridge terminals and the subway and elevated stations pass out change?

Knox: Yes, I have observed something similar. For instance, the dilly dallying with the motion picture ordinance. The Aldermen seem to be waiting for its supporters to forget it.

"Sardoodledem"

By Louis Reeves Harrison

THAT word is not of my creating. It originated with a modern dramatist so eminent that he can not disguise his great ability from himself. He resembles Shakespeare in some respects, mostly in having a name that begins with the same three letters. He has invented many clever devices, and "Sardoodledem" is one of the most impressive of his inventions. I credit him with it, and probably reach a half truth in assuming that he derived it from the easily-pronounced name of a very-French playwright, Sardou. That is as much as I can do for Mr. Shaw within this writing.

Sardou was very methodical. He never allowed a thought to escape. Instead of dissipating it on his friends he deposited it in his savings bank against the time he might run short, a very thrifty habit for those who have no unfailing font of genius to supply ideas in an emergency. A publisher named French has done the same with printed plays of other days, much to the delight of studio directors, if not to the edification of motion-picture audiences. Sardou also wrote scenarios, but no director ever had a chance to appropriate or otherwise misuse these, not until after their conversion into plays.

Social relations in France may be interesting to French people and useful to dramatists of the Sardou type, but the bearing they have on our own problems is very slight. There is nothing dramatic in the life of a jeune fille Française; her career is that of a child, so that the playwright naturally seeks material in the relations of husband and wife. Either the proud and penniless young wife is tied to a wealthy and coarse parvenu with a well-founded suspicion about the handsome young man for whom she affects platonic friendship, or a noble woman of culture and refinement is married to a wretch who has an affair with a Lingerie Lady of cigarette propensities and careless reputation.

Tragedy or comedy as the case may be, or varied in characterization, the situation is always the same, and its stupid vulgarities minister neither pleasure nor profit to the American audience. It is that of "The Eternal Triangle." French producers of photoplays cling to this tedious and obvious old form of plot because their directors are afflicted with the idea that their antiquated methods are new to us, whereas they have been long reposing in the theatrical lumber room with "Lady of Lyons" and "East Lynne."

In the beautiful simplicity of their souls new directors in American studios imagine they are doing the correct thing to copy these happily-forgotten themes. Perhaps they do not know any better! Let us be just! The men who wrote these old plays and former stories were responding to the public taste of their times and could not be expected to conceive of development of rational beings in a world like ours. The men who copy such relics of other days may be afflicted with antiquarian tastes and be wholly unaware that the most tiresome people are those unable to shake off the false conceits, superstitions and prejudices of past centuries.

Our people do not want the whitened skeletons of misguided thought in photoplay form, nor in any other form. We have been throwing off the mass of error in which we were clothed ever since those hardy heretics, the first settlers, started the idea of equalizing opportunity by opening public schools. Americans do not like the odor of this old theatrical rubbish, and are objecting in all parts of the country to having it thrown at their children. Too much of it is being shoveled out of the studios onto the white screen that appears before our faces. To the ash-can with "Sardoodledem" and its exponents.

I never saw a French director who did not have a bad case of it, and it seems to be contagious, like other things that we do not want. The amount of ivory imported from La Belle France in the noddles of studio directors solidly obstructs the elimination of error and the substitution of truth in the photo-dramas because none of them seems capable of passing by a single leap from the orthodoxy of old faith to the freedom of modern thought. If they are given opportunity to do as Americans do, their performance is marred by a French accent.

There is no room in modern drama of any kind for cold-storage revenge, for hysterical heroics, for agonizing self-sacrifice, for the inherently feeble plays built around an ingenious mechanical device. We are a complex people, with complex intellectual and emotional habits and are most fond of those stories which disclose the latent qualities of characters taking part in them. A character that preserves the same attitude throughout, the same wooden expression, that of a cigar Indian, may suit "Sardoodledem," but it annihilates the interest of an American audience as soon as it becomes evident that there are no underlying soul-states to penetrate.

This complexity of character is due to progress. Most of us carry strong traces of past conflicts in our hereditary composition, multiplied and heaped up in us, preserved and perpetuated, then varied according to circumstances, until the human being is a complicated creature with virtues and faults, fortune and misfortune, so entwined and intermingled that one or another characteristic may be unfolded at any moment. Just as there are no set expressions for the manifestation of emotion because of an infinite variety of personalities, so no two individuals reveal themselves in the same way.

Nearly all the traditional "Sardoodledem" moving pictures have acquired from stage presentation has been to the detriment of the newer medium of expression. Many of the best actors were never on the stage. Some of the best directors have no traditions to hamper them. The thing to do is to act with sincerity, to write with sincerity, to direct with earnestness of purpose. Playwright, performer and producer have a common purpose, that of telling an interesting story in action.

What finer literary artist have we produced than Mark Twain? He went at what he observed without an idea of "Sardoodledem" and dealt with the deepest problems of our existence in masterly fashion though without pretense. He hated pretense, vanity and affectation as we hate it, and he made us laugh at it because most of us were in sympathy with his progressive and intensely American ideas.

There are splendid photoplays to be made out of what is going on all around us, and I have no doubt that thousands are written and sent to the various studios, but few of them ever reach the screen because of "Sardoodledem." Perhaps the presence of false gods in directorial minds is the "High Curse" on moving pictures.

NEW THEATER TO BE BUILT.

John Wicks, Jr., manager of the Lyceum Theater at Kittanning, Pa., is at the head of a project to build a $30,000 theater in that city. The contemplated structure is to be located at Market Street and McKean Way. It has not yet been decided what the house will play.

Why Not a Biographic Masterpiece?

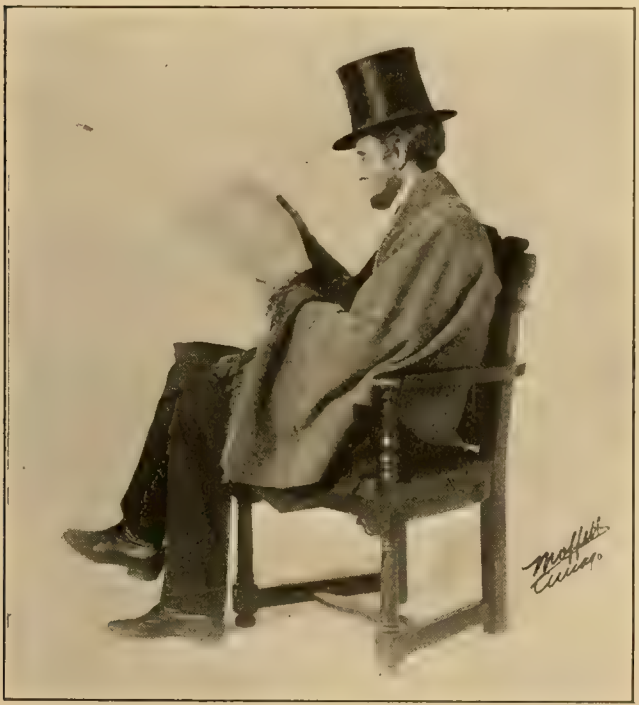
By W. Stephen Bush.

THE call and need of the hour is to act on the possibilities of the motion picture rather than speculate and talk about them. We all know that the mission of the kinematograph aims higher than the filming of cheap dramatic composition. Kinematography must be a recorder of the past and present, the secretary of Time. In matters of history, promise still leaves performance miles and miles behind. The means of recording are at hand but we look in vain for the manufacturers, who are willing to inscribe the great events and the deeds of great men upon the screen, which catches the reflection of the world.

Take American history. If there is a period in the annals of mankind more heavily fraught with importance to the development of the mental, moral and material progress of mankind than the centuries of colonization upon our Atlantic coast, it has never been mentioned in the textbooks of the civilized world. The story of the thirteen original colonies, from their first settlements until their union into a new nation, afford a dazzling wealth of material for the moving picture chronicler. A set of reels embodying this portion of our history would be of supreme interest to the student of history and would likewise possess enough of the element of picturesqueness to make it a pleasing spectacle to every kind of audience.



BENJAMIN CHAPIN AS ABRAHAM LINCOLN.
He Has Never Played in Pictures.

I see, however, a more pressing duty of the historic kinematograph. General studies in history may be left to the hour of leisure, but there are particular epochs and particular men, whose memory is a living source of patriotic inspiration. There are makers of history whose influence is still felt in our national life. When such influences are wholesome, tending not only to affect the national ideals but to mould our individual lives and raise them to the higher planes, then it becomes the concern of the commonwealth to perpetuate these influences and to extend as far as possible the sphere of their usefulness. The ideal perpetuating record of the day is the motion picture.

Apply all this to the idol of the American people—Abraham Lincoln. The eagerness of our people to learn all they can about Lincoln is little short of marvelous. The man who writes or speaks about Lincoln is immediately sure of his audience. If the chance is offered why not perpetuate the personality and the great deeds of Lincoln in motion pictures? We have had glimpses of Lincoln in motion pictures, but no attempt has been made to give to the American public such a series of pictures in motion as would at least come near doing justice to the subject. Of course an adequate portrayal of the personality of Lincoln is the first and prime requisite—the condition sine qua non. It may well be doubted whether in all the history of mankind there ever existed a more conspicuous, more striking and more unique individuality than that of Lincoln. The people have learned to associate all the grand and all the lovable qualities of the man with this quaintest of personalities. Even the oddities and weaknesses of the character lean for interpretation on a correct portrayal of the Lincoln personality.

The great difficulty in securing an accurate impersonation of Lincoln is obvious. There are, to begin with, certain physical characteristics. There is the question of facial expression, the task of reproducing the homely, rugged features, the eyes at once so sad, so open and so strong. The peculiarities of his walk, his postures while talking, or standing, or sitting in a chair, are known by actual observation to many persons still living and are fairly familiar to millions of our countrymen, who have given much time to a loving study of the subject. His mannerisms, his halting movements, his attitude of deliberation, his favorite pose when telling a story, and, above all, that simple but sublime dignity which he at times assumed without the least trace of self-consciousness must be found in a proper and effective portrayal. Nor must the matter of dress be forgotten. We know from his various portraits his fondness for the old shawl, that took the place of the overcoat, his hats and the general style and fashion of his clothes, such as were much affected by the rural statesmen at and before the time of Lincoln's entrance into public life.

Let us be very sure, that none but the best, the most conscientious and the most painstaking impersonation of Lincoln would be welcomed by an American audience. The name of the man commands respect even to the point of reverence. A Lincoln drama is witnessed, a Lincoln lecture is listened to, a Lincoln picture is looked at with that deeply silent attention, which, with our people is an unfailing token of respect. There is on such occasions, always a sudden and involuntary hush—we realize our presence on enchanted ground.

What if there is in this country now living and now in his physical and artistic prime, a man, whom Nature and Study have helped to give a most life-like representation of Lincoln? The writer has never seen the man and was inclined to be skeptical. It had been his privilege to be well acquainted with a man, who knew Lincoln intimately and whom Lincoln loved. To listen to stories of Lincoln from the lips of this contemporary, now some years dead, was a pleasure never to be forgotten. How much greater must be the pleasure, how much greater the inspiration at seeing a living copy of Lincoln.

The evidence that Benjamin Chapin, the man referred to, may justly be called a true living copy of Lincoln is conclusive and irresistible. His claims to verisimilitude in portrayal, stood the severest test possible—the critical observation of men, who knew and loved Lincoln and who would have been sure to resent even slight imperfections. There are a score of eye witnesses, but the testimony of General O. O. Howard, who knew Lincoln intimately, seems sufficient. General Howard, who like many friends and intimates of Lincoln, had freely given of his knowledge and advice to Mr. Chapin, attended Mr. Chapin's four act play "Lincoln" which in the season of 1909 was running at the Hackett theater in New York City.

After the third act, in response to nine curtain calls, Mr. Chapin thanked the audience, then smiling up at the box where sat the hero of many battles, he said, "General Howard could speak with more authority than I can." The audience recognized the General and applauded him. He saluted and bowed; then they called upon him for a speech. In his response, the venerable General said: "I knew and loved Lincoln as my friend and commander. I saw Mr. Chapin's wonderful portrayal several years ago and was greatly pleased and deeply impressed by it. At that time I had only one criticism, the voice seemed to me different—to lack something of the Lincoln vigor and power, but Mr. Chapin's voice has developed with the years and tonight even the voice seems like that of my own Lincoln."

Plenty more evidence of the same kind might be adduced, but it would only be cumulative. There is no question as to the unique and extraordinary abilities of Mr. Chapin, whose presentation embodies the patient labor and study of many years.

I must strike the same note at the end, which I touched in the beginning. This is the time to act, the time to produce a grand American historic epoch with the foremost heroic American figure in the center. Let the subject of the first great biographic motion picture in America be its martyred president and let the work begin while the opportunities for the best of craftsmanship abound all around us, with an ideal Lincoln impersonator at the head of the procession.

MORE MATRIMONY.

J. H. Bunnell, manager of the Olympic theater, Toppenish, Wash., secretly married on November 7, 1912, Miss Mary E. Jones. The friends of both the bride and bridegroom were greatly surprised recently when they officially announced that they were married. The newspapers at North Yakima, the city at which the ceremony was performed, agreed to keep the matter quiet. The Rev. Mr. Turner, who tied the knot, agreed likewise, and everybody was kept ignorant of the fact until the couple "broke the news."

Three-Reel Kay-Bee Release.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A TRACING of related human lives through intricate patterns formed largely by the power of circumstances. This play deals with a subject long fascinating to the most intelligent creatures on earth, and it is admirably developed. It hinges entirely upon an incident which might easily become weak if not confusing to the audience. I saw the reels without sub-titles, and they may clarify the situation. I sincerely hope they do, for the vast amount of work involved in putting on so large a subject deserves infinite care at critical moments.

There is a game of cards at a military post, and the younger officers are playing for high stakes. One of them, a married man with a charming wife, loses his temper and accuses another of cheating. A fierce quarrel ensues, the combatants are separated by friends, and the accused man leaves the room. He broods over the insult until he decides upon exacting an explanation. In case none is forthcoming he prepares for retaliation by thrusting a revolver in his holster. A clash is inevitable. The two men meet outside the post gate and enter upon a heated argument, while an Indian friendly to the married man for reasons set forth in preparatory scenes watches them from behind a clump of bushes.

The accuser refuses to retract. The accused officer draws his pistol. A hand-to-hand fight ensues, and the pistol is discharged. The concealed Indian fires at the same moment. One officer falls dangerously wounded. He is the one accused of cheating at cards. From what source came the bullet that laid him low? As far as I could make it out the Indian is guilty of attempted murder for the sake of the officer to whom he has become deeply attached. More than that, it appears that the real assailant makes no secret of his act. In other words, the accusing officer, the one with a lovely wife and sweet little daughter, is made aware that the Indian shot his antagonist from ambush.

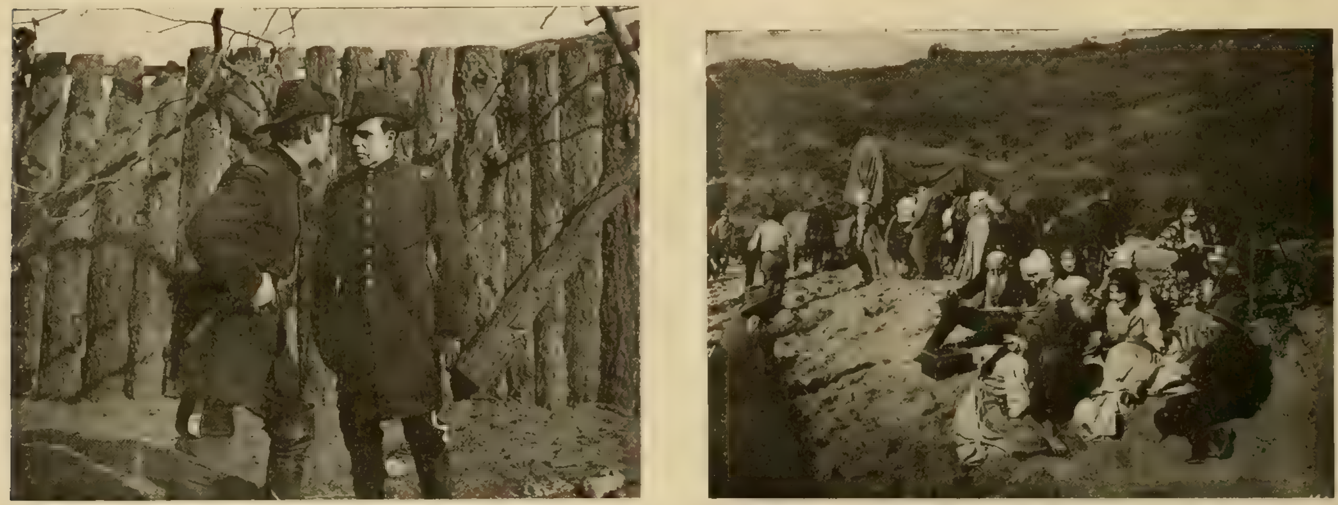
This is the crucial scene of the play. All that follows depends upon it. I am no stickler for truth in trivial matters, but I am for that which is in accord with experience and correct beyond discussion so far as the highest situation of a play is concerned. In order to be convincing throughout the playwright can not disregard what is in accord with universal experience or with the established ideals of an audience. A regular officer of the United States Army receives a high training in manly honor, and it is not in accord with his character as a whole to run away and remain in hiding for years if he knew to a certainty that he was innocent, even if appearances were against him.

Picture a graduate of West Point covering himself and his family with eternal disgrace, subjecting his sweet wife to years of anxiety terminating in death, clouding the happiness of his little daughter, because he might be accused of injuring an enraged assailant in a struggle! Far more important than the costliness and most ingenious mechanical contrivance ever shown on the screen is attention to what is consistent and convincing. He might run away if fully satisfied that he had killed his brother officer, but that is not what is conveyed by the incomplete presentation shown me.

With this uncertain feature eliminated—as it probably will be—the play proceeds along true lines to a conclusion of great dignity and beauty. The officer who has been accused, who is believed to have shot the man he charged with swindling at cards, becomes a fugitive from justice. During the ten years that follow his alleged crime, one tragic event succeeds another in the careers of those he left behind him. His wife meets with death in the desert; his daughter wanders helpless and alone until she is found by a vagabond trapper, and she is brought up in a rude environment.

She is nourished, protected and cared for by the trapper, and nature does the rest. She grows up to be an attractive girl of warm impulses, preserving no links to her past life but a doll and a locket containing a picture of her mother. The inscrutable ways of destiny and the irresistible tendency of events bring her closer and closer to her father until their lives are united without either being aware of the relation. The fugitive officer takes her to his home after the death of the trapper, but he is not permitted to violate the social code of the place. The young girl has barely conceived an intense attachment to him when she is removed to the minister's house.

The father has been the central figure from the outset, but she now divides interest with him and introduces the strongest sympathetic element in the piece. She also divides her affections when she falls in love with a deserving suitor, a young officer. She is overwhelmed with delight when the identity of her father is established through the locket she has preserved, but he sets up the shadow of his alleged crime as a barrier to her marriage. This would be very much overstrained if he was fully aware of his own innocence. He would not spoil the lives of his wife and daughter as well as his own because of an unfounded accusation.



Scenes from the Three-Part Feature, "The Wheels of Destiny," by Kay-Bee.

The intricate workings of circumstance bring about a satisfactory termination to the play. The man who did not clear his own character has it done for him, and his daughter is given her heart's desire. The ending is original and artistic in the presentation—indeed, the play is well produced—but there is too much evasion in it for the satisfaction of an audience. Kay-Bees are being received with great favor where I see them shown, but I do not think this drama is up to the standard for many reasons. Our sympathies are baffled through the larger part of it and only awakened in the story of the child in the last part.

Wherever the conjunction of circumstances seems forced to the audience, where the author compels a situation beyond the common approval of those sitting in front and competent to judge from watching thousands of plays on the screen, interest flags if it does not fall down completely. In the way of suggestive criticism I should advise the avoidance of any frenzy of self-sacrifice in a plot. The man who prefers to suffer and to heap ignominy, humiliation and torture upon innocent women and children rather than face an accusation and clear himself of false imputation can not be made of sufficient interest to people in front to hold their attention.

As Director Ince has done such fine work in other productions, I suggest that he put on a play showing the ethics of self-sacrifice in their TRUE LIGHT.

"The Broken Heart" (Essanay)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

ESSANAY'S Eastern stock company, under the direction of Harry McRae Webster, has furnished an artistic photoplay treat in "The Broken Heart," which is scheduled for release on February 7. There is a decided atmosphere of "class" about this production. The cast has been very happily made, with one exception; the settings display admirable taste and intelligent selection, and the photographic effects merit the highest praise. Indeed, there are some inferior views in this film which may well be taken as a standard for photographic excellence.

I refer especially to the bedroom scene showing Osaki San retiring. There is a subdued light on this scene, and one cannot help admiring the delicacy with which the subdued light on the bed is toned down into the shadows in the corners, shadows through which the faint outline of objects impresses one distinctly. The conservatory scene is another fine sample of photographic art. The objects stand out so strongly that one's senses are impressed as of viewing them in relief.

Scene from "The Broken Heart" (Essanay).

"The Broken Heart" has to do with people of gentle manners and culture, and the Essanay photoplayers are to be congratulated that they never forget this. There is not a lapse in this respect on the part of any of them, although, without any desire to be acrimonious, I should have liked to see the part of the Rev. Nathaniel Keith in more fitting keeping.

The story has an affecting and pathetic close, and producer Webster has done well to relieve the scene of any harrowing effect. The gentle soul of sweet, little Osaki San passes out into the unknown, not on a boisterous sea of suffering that would shock tender hearts, but as softly as her beloved chrysanthemums distill their perfume.

Miss Ruth Stonehouse is always pleasing as Osaki San. She represents the Japanese girl as being coy without demureness, as delicately sensitive, and possessed of the Spartan pride and courage of her race. When suffering from the mortal blow that has been unwittingly inflicted by Paul, she suffers alone. It would be desecration in her eyes to reveal to her adopted mother and best friend the depths of her despair. She had shared with that good lady the joy she felt in the belief that she was beloved by Paul, in the pretty bedroom scene, where she prays devoutly for her supposed lover and her friends. Little Osaki San had only sunshine for those she loved.

Bryant Washburn's Paul shows finished and easy impersonation. There is nothing stiff or self conscious about him at any time. He has absorbed the character. In Miss Drew, who appears as Edith Towne, the Essanay forces have secured a beautiful girl and a good photoplay actress. I should like to see her in a leading part that would thoroughly test her ability. Miss Helen Dunbar gives a fine character study in the role of Mrs. Nathaniel Keith, and Miss Dolores Cassinelli sustains the part of Mrs. A. Keith with her customary talent.

Paul, the son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Keith, loves Edith Towne. His uncle, the Rev. Nathaniel Keith, and his wife pay his home a visit, on their return from the Orient, accompanied by their adopted daughter, Osaki San. Paul is deeply impressed, at first sight, by the beautiful Japanese girl, and she learns to love him.

But Paul is deeply in love with Edith, who has been somewhat cold in her advances. She has learned of the arrival of Osaki San and of Paul's attentions to her, and decides to pay the Keith family a visit. She is unusually kind to Paul and he asks her to be his wife.

Scenes from "The Broken Heart" (Essanay).

Osaki San, unaccustomed to occidental manners, had interpreted Paul's attentions as an expression of the dearest devotion; now she is heartbroken, when she sees that he worships at the shrine of Miss Towne. She learns that the wedding day has been set, and pines her heart away in silence.

The day of Paul's great happiness arrives, but Osaki San is in such frail health that she cannot attend the ceremony. The gay party sees the bride and bridegroom off on their honeymoon. The same night Osaki San dies of a broken heart.

ON BEING WIDELY KNOWN.

The world is growing smaller. One needs only get the right rope and hold on to it nowadays to make a fortune like Rockefeller's; for all sections of the world will have to contribute to it, and as for fame, what actor through all the world's long history has won the wide recognition of John Bunny? Has any won so many friends as he? For though it is only an airy presence and a name that comes and goes, whisked by the greatest magician that has ever been as the winds of sleep might whisk a dream, still it is recognized as a friend and finds a friendly welcome. So do many others who accompany or follow him.

Truly they are only dreams, these itinerant friends of human kind—Mark MacDermott, Florence Turner, Mary Fuller, G. M. Anderson, Jane Wolfe and a host of others—they are the same in substance; but they are recognized separately and each gets his or her own greeting. They always appear with a bright light behind them; strange streets, strange rooms and strange sights come with them to shine as long as they shine and then to go. They smile and they weep and take part in the joys and sorrows of all alike; but let them be questioned never so much, no one ever hears them answer. They seem like shadowy nothingness; but after all they are real people and the friendship that they get is real. How great this advantage must be to them—John Bunny needs no introduction anywhere. If he's on a steamship, he owns it for the time. If he needs to travel by land, how easy for him to get a lower berth in a sleeper. Hall boys will wait on him without thinking of the tip and if he wants information at any time, he'll be treated like a rich relative. He can talk to any one; but then how many old stories he must listen to; how he must talk about moving pictures till he is sick, and how often be wearied by the chit-chat of bores.

When $10,000 worth of contraband liquor was destroyed recently in Independence, Kan., a cameraman was on the job. He said the film would very nicely fit in with his set of "Carrie Nation" pictures, of which he has a series.

Irving Cummings.

Mr. Irving Cummings, leading man in the Reliance Company, who, as you will see below, has a first rate picture smile and what appears to be the "camera eye," has also and all who have been watching recent pictures will agree on it, remarkable ability as an actor. Though he had appeared in many film offerings before the Champion feature, "Camille," his work in that picture, as Armand, first brought special attention to him. It is a romantic role and he did very well in it; but since that time he has been agreeably surprising his friends by developing in his playing unsuspected abilities. His growth artistically has been astonishing and this is a happy omen for his future, since it shows the ability to learn by experience. This is the fundamental basis of all good work in every art and is not a quality that will desert him.

Irving Cummings.

For over six months now he has been with the Reliance Company as its leading man. He has played in "Thelma," "Caleb West," "Guy Mannering," "Don Caesar de Bazan," "Fires of Conscience," "Duty and the Man" and "The Faith Healer." A fine picture that is to be released during the coming week by the Reliance people is, "The Open Road," and in this Mr. Cummings plays a young son of a rich man whom fortune leads into strange experiences and who finds himself in the silken toils of a most delightful romance. His work in this role shows solid artistic merit and his many friends will enjoy seeing it. He is to appear soon in "The Bells" and also in a new picture, "The Strike Leader." Both these pictures we dare commend even though we have not seen them as yet.

THEATER CLUB DISCUSSES PICTURES.

A meeting of the New York Theater Club was held at the Hotel Astor on Tuesday, January 21. Among the subjects discussed at this meeting were motion pictures and remarks were made by Mr. Charles M. Seay, of the Edison studio; Mrs. Frank Lawson Stratton, of the National Board of Censorship; Mr. Hal Reid, who has written and produced a number of picture plays, and Mrs. Mildred Holland, of the Reliance studios.

"A Tale of Old Tahiti" (Melies)

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

IN planning their kinematographic trip around the world the Melies Company have wisely chosen many spots which lie out of the beaten paths of travel. Primitive places, which have been but lightly touched by the broom of civilization, are not the least interesting.

In this story there is a happy vein of pathos not without touches of refined humor. The picture derives much of its unusual merit from the splendid natural frame in which it has been set. Tropical magnificence of scenery makes a superb setting for any plot and here the action accords singularly well with the surroundings amid which it occurs.

A young midshipman aboard a French war vessel visits with others of the crew the habitation of a native chief. He makes a deep impression upon one of the dusky daughters of the chief. It seems that every year is leap year in Tahiti and the maiden naively confesses her wish to have the young Frenchman for a husband. The latter is somewhat timid and returns to the ship doubtful as to what to do next. The maiden confides her desire to her father, who takes a choice assortment of his warriors aboard the French vessel and proposes to swap one or more of them for Jacques. He is surprised to find that the captain will not take his proposition seriously and departs in disappointment.

Scene from "A Tale of Old Tahiti" (Melies).

Scene from "A Tale of Old Tahiti" (Melies).

When he sees how his daughter grieves over his failure to bring Jacques home he resolves to kidnap the young Frenchman. Here the action of the little drama is carried on by a number of natives, armed with the peculiar spears of the island. They are evidently proud of their parts and very conscientious in their efforts to please. The midshipman is captured, but the natives and the chief deal with him very gently indeed. While he is transported to the cabin of the chief, one of the natives, with catlike agility, climbs up a tree and brings down a cocoanut to refresh the white prisoner. We observe with delighted interest how cleverly and quickly the natives open the cocoanut and make it ready for lunch.

The journey progresses through stretches of luxuriant vegetation and across many pretty sheets of water until the residence of the chief is reached. Young Jacques is soon won over by the blandishments of his dusky admirer and we learn many interesting things about courtship in old Tahiti. For art in wooing, the Tahitians are far superior to our civilized methods. Instead of swain and maiden cooing in the parlor, the Tahitian maiden in presence of all the people crowns the choice of her heart with a beautiful wreath. In marriage this wreath is renewed by the young wife as a token of continuing affection. At last Jacques tires of his stay in Cathay and longs for the fleshpots of civilization. An expedition has been sent out by the captain of the ship to find the midshipman and when the latter is found and his comrades appeal to his patriotism he tears himself away from his dark-hued charmer to rejoin the crew of his ship.

All the points of excellence that characterized the first production of the Melies "trip-around-the-world" company are found in this second release, which will be no less welcome to the exhibitor, because it is a two-reel feature. The great educational interest is well sustained throughout this second release and combined as it is with a pleasing and probable story it ought to meet with the friendliest of receptions from exhibitors and public alike. With the aid of these pictures and the others of the same series it ought to be easy for an intelligent and wideawake exhibitor to get the best people in his community or neighborhood into his theater. He need but show the same enterprise, that has inspired the producers, in order to secure crowded house and new circles of friends. It will be well to emphasize in the advertising of this fact that no such undertaking was ever planned or carried out before. Even the fiction of the fertile Jules Verne is here surpassed in the reality. I think that properly approached most daily newspapers will give these pictures space in their news columns. It is well worth trying.

MOTION PICTURE ANNUAL.

Its Object and Contents—Complete List of 1912 Releases One of its Features.

The Moving Picture World has always felt that a publication in the nature of a trade annual was a much needed addition to the current kinematographic library. Such an annual containing information useful and interesting to every branch of the industry was an undertaking of some difficulty, involving much labor, research and time. There were no precedents to go by, but many precedents to establish. The Moving Picture World has now practically completed such an annual. It is now in the hands of the printer and the date for its sale and delivery will be made known shortly.

The annual contains a complete list of all the films released in the course of the past year by all the various groups of organized manufacturers. This list is arranged in alphabetical order and contains the title of each release, the producer and the date of release. The book likewise contains a fairly complete classified trade directory, giving the names and addresses of all manufacturers, all exchanges and allied trade interests such as houses dealing in supplies, slide manufacturers, chair factories, etc. There is much valuable information for exhibitors who are interested in features sold on the State Rights plan. Everything has been done to make the list of State Right holders as complete as possible, but in some cases the desired information has been withheld. In some cases no doubt this was due to a mistake of the firms controlling the American rights of great features. It is expected that they will see how much other firms, who willingly gave the information, have profited thereby and that next year this list will be complete.

There is also a complete list of all the foreign trade papers. In addition to all this there is a literary part, to which such well-known writers as F. H. Richardson and other experts in their lines have contributed. The educational film, the photoplaywright, the history of kinematography, an appreciation of the late James P. Chalmers, the founder of the Moving Picture World, a review of the events in the world of kinematography of 1912, are some of the features.

While everything has been done to make the annual a handy and valuable book of reference to all who are interested in the motion picture, the Moving Picture World realizes that in a pioneer endeavor of this kind there must be room for future improvement. Taken as a whole, we believe that this Motion Picture Annual will prove a welcome and useful friend.

OHIO EXHIBITORS IN CONVENTION.

Take Action Favoring Paid Censorship Board, Examination of Operators and Sunday Opening.

Columbus, Ohio, Wednesday, January 22d.—The eighth State convention of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of Ohio was opened in the Southern Hotel yesterday and closed this evening with a grand banquet given in the same hostelry. At the opening session, to which all were invited, Mayor George Karb gave an address of welcome, which was responded to by President Neff. Two executive sessions were held in the evening, at which were elected Ohio State officers for the ensuing year, delegates and alternates to the coming national convention in New York, and also members of the State committees on auditing, grievances and recommendations.

The State censorship of films was also considered at the closing session Tuesday evening, and was resumed at Wednesday morning's executive session. The bill on State censorship, which had been previously drawn up by the State League's attorney, aided by President Neff, was read to the members present and accepted as read, before being submitted to the legislature. This censorship bill provides for a board of three and a secretary, the chairman's salary being fixed at $2,000 yearly and that of the other two members at $1,500 each, the secretary to receive $1,200. These salaries are to be paid out of the revenue accruing from a charge of $1 a reel for censorship, to be paid by the manufacturers. All films coming into the State are to be numbered serially and charged at the rate of $1 a reel.

Another bill, drawn by the league's attorney and President Neff, regarding examinations for operators, was discussed by the members in private session before being carried to the legislature. The bill fixes the minimum age of an operator at eighteen years and every operator must secure at least 75 per cent. of marks in his examination for eligibility. Each operator is allowed an apprentice, whose salary will be paid by the manager. This bill will be introduced concurrently with the censorship bill.

Another bill concerning Sunday opening in Ohio, which was also drawn by the same men, was read to the members and discussed. The bill aims at securing a State law for the opening of picture theaters on Sundays.

A motion was then carried that a State convention can be called only by the State president, who has the power to name the place of meeting and date. The attorney of the State league was instructed to draw up a bill for the action of the legislature making the use of motors in connection with projection machines legal throughout Ohio.

At noon, Wednesday, those attending the convention marched to the Capitol building, headed by the Columbus Battalion Band. There every exhibitor as he filed past was introduced to Governor Cox by President Neff. The Governor, former Senator Foraker and other speakers were guests at the banquet.

The convention has been a great success. Eleven national vice-presidents, from points as far away as California and Texas, were in attendance. JAMES S. McQAUDE.

NEW JERSEY MINISTERS FAVOR PICTURES.

A regular meeting of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of New Jersey was held on Wednesday, January 15, at Achtel-Stetter Hall, 844 Broad Street, Newark. There were present, as invited guests, four of Newark's prominent clergymen: Rev. Dr. Howard, Rev. Dr. Vogel, Rev. Dr. Morgan and Rev. Dr. Hillis. They took a lively interest in the proceedings and each made an address expressing his personal convictions that the motion picture has more possibilities as an agent of morals and education than have been generally recognized. Each one of the reverend gentlemen stated that he thought that the evils of motion pictures have been as grossly exaggerated as their power for good has been understated. None of the clergymen speaking could recall to mind any more than one or two isolated cases where pictures they had seen should better have been censored, and each minister stated without hesitation that he and his family were regular patrons of the photodrama. They advised the exhibitors not to relax their vigil in keeping the pictures and performances clean and above reproach. The churchmen in concluding gave evidence of their friendliness toward the motion picture and departed upon the best of terms with the New Jersey exhibitors.

During the business session a resolution was passed that a Child Law bill be drafted, using as a pattern the present pending bill before the New York Legislature, and that the bill be introduced into the New Jersey Legislature forthwith. One clause in the New York bill provides that a matron be stationed in each theater to look after unaccompanied children. The committee appointed to look after this bill will furnish each exhibitor with a slide requesting patrons to use their influence with their State representative to get him to vote for the measure. The legislative committee was also empowered to retain counsel to draft a bill modifying the unreasonable provisions of the present law governing operating rooms. The meeting was well attended and much good work was accomplished. Adjournment was taken subject to the call of the president.

NEW YORK LEAGUE DIRECTORS MEET.

A meeting of the board of directors of the New York State League was held in Utica on Thursday, January 16th. The following officers and members of the board were present: Samuel H. Trigger, president of the State League; Harold W. Rosenthal, State secretary, New York; B. E. Cornell, State vice-president, Syracuse; R. M. Davidson, State vice-president, Binghamton; John C. Davis, State treasurer, Saugerties; George Wright, president of Albany Local; L. C. Smith, vice-president, Schenectady; William A. Douque, president, Utica; Harry Lux, Jr., treasurer, Utica; Geo. H. Morgan, president, Syracuse; A. N. Wolff, president, Rochester; Harry Marsey, vice-president, Buffalo; Jos. Friedman, treasurer, Buffalo; M. D. Gibson, president, Elmira.

Among other things the censorship matter was taken up and thoroughly discussed. Suggestions were made that the exhibitors appoint a committee to censor the pictures and, if necessary, get a bill passed through the legislature covering State censorship. It was also suggested that no member should display a feature or other film which has not been approved of by the censorship board and notification to this effect be sent to all members of the State.

Matters pertaining to theaters in different locals and number of reels run was thoroughly discussed. In Syracuse at the present time all theaters are showing only four reels of pictures and no vaudeville or singing. In Utica they have agreed to run three reels of film. Mr. Wolff, the president of the Rochester Local, stated that they were going to dispense with vaudeville in all picture theaters in Rochester, and Mr. Smith, of Albany, stated that only one member of the Albany Local was running vaudeville. Mr. Friedman, of the Buffalo Local, made the same statement regarding all their places. Mr. Davidson, of Binghamton, stated that the Binghamton Local consisted of every motion picture exhibitor within five miles of Binghamton and the work of organizing, although somewhat hard, had proved of great benefit to its members who were greatly at variance until recently.

Motion made by Mr. Douque and seconded by Mr. Davis, that the State Board of Directors meet every three months in a different city and that the next meeting be held in Buffalo on the first Tuesday in April. This motion was carried. Motion made to hold the next annual convention of the State at New York City, on Monday, July 7, 1913, at 9 a. m., also carried.

Harold W. Rosenthal, chairman of the law and legislation committee, reported the work done thus far to secure the passage of the Griffin bill amending the penal code, so that minors may be admitted to moving picture theaters during certain hours and under certain conditions unaccompanied by parents or guardians, and explained the great amount of work that was necessary for the passage of this bill.

SPECIAL MEETING OF THE KANSAS STATE BRANCH.

A special meeting of the Kansas State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was held January 13th and 14th at the Hotel Hamilton, Wichita, Kas. There was a large attendance, among whom were G. H. Wiley of Kansas City, Mo., state organizer; E. Wayne Martin of Hutchinson, Kas., national vice-president of Kansas; Carl Gregg, national vice-president of Oklahoma; representatives of the Universal, Mutual and General Film exchanges and many others representing the motion picture trades.

Monday's meeting was an open one and matters of general interest were discussed. On Tuesday the meeting was executive and many important matters were adjusted, a resolution passed encouraging three reels to constitute a five cent program, a legislation committee appointed, composed of C. E. Glamann, Wellington; Carl Mensing, Leavenworth; J. C. Elliott, Topeka; E. J. Grubel, Kansas City, Kas.; F. L. Wright, Wichita. This committee was instructed to take up the matter of Sunday openings with members of the state legislature, which is now in session. This committee will also take in hand the proposed bill creating a new building code for moving picture theaters.

President G. H. Wiley of the Missouri State Branch addressed the meeting in regard to censorship and the purposes and benefits of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. N. H. Spitzer of Wichita, Kas., resigned as president of the state branch, and C. E. Glamann, Wellington, was elected president for the unexpired term. G. H. Wiley of Kansas City, Mo., was given full charge as state organizer, and the state branch voted to have their first real convention at the National Hotel, Topeka, Kas., June 2 and 3, 1913, at which time Mr. Wiley hopes to have a membership of 150 exhibitors in good standing.

The following exhibitors were made members of the state branch at this meeting: W. H. Daly, Pittsburg; Geo. H. Merriam, Kingman; Perry R. Rhine, Pittsburg; Chas. E. Krause, Cedar Vale; L. W. Schroder, Harper; A. L. Rehm, Baxter Springs; H. H. Hill, Arkansas City; Herbert J. Thacher, Salina; Wm. Baries, Jr., Wichita; Geo. W. Burgess, Downs; H. E. Herbert, Newton; C. E. McClendon, Anthony; Frank Klingaman, Topeka; J. O. Bibler, Florence; Allen Graves, St. John, and Lew Nathanson, Topeka. These, together with the present membership, makes a total of nearly seventy members in good standing in the state branch, and this is considered an excellent showing, as the branch has only been organized since December 10, 1912.

MUTUAL'S NORTH CAROLINA EXHIBITORS MEET.

A number of the exhibitors of the Mutual Film Corporation's North Carolina circuit held a meeting on Tuesday, January 14, at Clegg's Hotel, Greensboro, N. C., and formulated plans for the forming of the Mutual Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of North Carolina. A majority of the exhibitors of the North Carolina circuit were present.

The organization was perfected and the Mutual program was voted as the program for the exhibitors, based on quality, variety, and the proper handling of the service.

This organization is intended to elevate the exhibition of motion pictures throughout the State, to co-operate with the exchange in the proper handling and the care of films and in any other way that may tend to the general uplift of the business and to bring the exhibitors into closer touch with each other.

The Exhibitors' Association hereby extends a vote of thanks to Mr. A. C. Bromberg, manager of the Atlanta office of the Mutual Film Corporation, for the able manner in which he has handled the North Carolina circuit since he has taken charge of the Atlanta office.

Mr. E. C. Pearce, of the Amuzu Theater, Winston Salem, N. C., and Mr. W. L. Younger, of the Edisonia Theater, Durham, N. C., were elected temporary chairman and secretary, respectively, until the next meeting. This second meeting will be held in the near future at some central point along the circuit and at which time permanent officers will be elected.

VINCENT REJOINS KALEM.

James Vincent, one of the first of the Kalem players to go to Jacksonville, Fla., several years ago, has again become identified with the Kalemites, as a member of Kenean Buel's company, now at Jacksonville. Since his former connection with the company Mr. Vincent has appeared in a number of dramatic successes, notable among which is "As a Man Thinks" and "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine."

NEW YORK PICTURE ORDINANCE.

Attempt to Override Mayor's Veto Defeated—New Measure Offered by Alderman White.

There was an attempt made to put new life into the censorship ordinance recently vetoed by Mayor W. J. Gaynor, at the meeting of the Board of Aldermen on Tuesday last, but it met with defeat for lack of votes. It was the intention to pass the measure over the Mayor's veto and the agitation stirred up by various Brooklyn ministers by holding public meetings wherein it was advocated that the ordinance should be passed by the Aldermen over the Mayor's veto resulted in drawing a large crowd to the Council Chamber in the City Hall.

The result of the vote showed that the resolution to override the Mayor was lost and this clearing the way, Alderman White introduced a new moving picture ordinance, with a censorship clause, giving the censoring of the pictures into the hands of the Mayor's marshal. The new ordinance was referred to committee.

EXPOSITION SPACE SELLING FAST.

Since the publication, in the January 4 issue of this paper, of the floor plan of the Grand Central Palace, New York, with a general idea of the layout of the various trade exhibits, the exposition committee of the Motion Picture Trades Exposition reports the sale of nearly half the main floor space for exhibits that will be seen at the first great annual exposition of the motion picture business, from July 7 to 12, 1913.

From many parts of the country requests have been coming in by mail from large concerns in the trade, asking for space reservations. As the space allotment is a case of first come, first serve, some of the choicest blocks of space have already been contracted for by some of the largest firms in the trade, who were wise enough to realize the value of doing their exposition shopping early. Those manufacturers who have taken advantage of their opportunity to grab off preferred locations are: Precision Machine Company (Simplex), Nicholas Power Machine Company, Eberhard Schneider (machines), Scott & Van Altena (slides), United Electric Light Company, Motion Picture Story Magazine, Vitagraph Company of America, Newman Manufacturing Company, Manhattan Slide Company, Arthur Brady (Poster Company), Standard Machine Company.

Another novel idea has developed since the last notice. There will be two motion picture studios in full operation, both afternoon and evening, during the exposition. It is the idea of the committee to have one studio for the use of licensed companies and another for the independents. Working by turns these companies will enact interior scenes for their regular releases, for the edification of the visiting public. According to the plan, one entire company will transfer its regular day's work from its studio to the exposition hall. Scenery, props, costumes, etc., will be transported to the exposition studio, where the actors will report for duty and makeup for their parts. There will probably be a schedule whereby certain companies will use the studios on certain stated afternoons or evenings. During the odd moments there will be a good opportunity for some company to take motion picture portraits of visitors and their families, to preserve as mementos of the occasion as well as to make a beginning on the motion picture family tree, which will some day take the place of Heraldry.

Those who intend making exhibits should not delay too long. While there may seem to be plenty of time to get ready between now and July, a good exhibit cannot be gotten together in a hurry, and time passes very quickly. All communications relative to space, etc., should be addressed to F. E. Samuels, secretary of the Motion Picture Trades Exposition, German Bank Building, 4th Avenue and 14th Street, New York City.

NEW UNION FEATURE COMING.

There is being produced for Union Features, one of the largest and most comprehensive feature pictures ever prepared in America, for release in the near future. This feature covers the atmosphere which in the past has been shown in a way, in such pictures as "The Passion Play" and "The Holy City."

The title of the production is "The Mysteries of the Rosary." The production is in three reels and over two hundred people used in a splendid cast of leading characters. Some very gorgeous settings are shown. This feature will undoubtedly be one of the real successes of the year.

Hearings in Government's Suit

Testimony is Taken in New York City in the Action Brought to Dissolve Motion Picture Patents Company.

Before Joseph R. Darling, special agent of the Government in the suit brought under the Sherman anti-trust law to dissolve the Motion Picture Patents Company, the taking of testimony in New York City began on Wednesday, January 15, and continued through Thursday and Friday, when adjournment was taken until the following Tuesday. Sessions were held on that day and Wednesday and Thursday, and it was expected they would continue through Friday and Saturday. Edwin P. Grosvenor conducted the examination. The hearings were held in the Hotel McAlpin. The attorneys in attendance were George R. Willis and Fred R. Williams, representing the Motion Picture Patents Company, the Biograph Company, Jeremiah J. Kennedy, Henry N. Marvin and the Armat Motion Picture Company; J. H. Caldwell, for William Pelzer, the General Film Company, Thomas A. Edison, Inc., Kalem Company, Inc., Melies Manufacturing Company, Pathe Freres, Frank L. Dyer, Samuel Long, J. A. Berst and Gaston Melies; Henry Melville for George Kleine, Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, George K. Spoor and W. N. Selig; James J. Allen, for the Vitagraph Company of America and Albert E. Smith.

About 175 witnesses will be called, it is expected. Those who testified in the hearings the first week were: Henry N. Marvin, president of the Motion Picture Patents Company and vice-president of the Biograph Company, and William Pelzer, of the Edison Company and the Motion Picture Patents Company. On Tuesday, January 21, William H. Swanson, secretary of the Universal Film Company, was on the stand. The following day Louis Rosenbluh, general manager of the Greater New York Film Rental Company, was examined by Mr. Grosvenor. His examination was continued through the morning session of Thursday. In the afternoon Mr. Swanson was cross-examined by the attorneys for the defendants.

J. P. McGowan, director of the Kalem Company, working in Birmingham, Ala., is receiving active co-operation from the local Chamber of Commerce.

NEW SYRACUSE THEATER BUILDING.

Mitchell Fitzer, proprietor of the Happy Hour Theater, 224 North Salina Street, Syracuse, N. Y., is preparing to build a handsome picture theater in that city. The auditorium will be 120 feet deep by 40 feet wide and will have a seating capacity of 800. Construction will be of concrete and reinforced steel throughout, with elaborate heating and ventilating plants and ornate decorations.

---

Out in Minneapolis the Rev. J. W. Cool says facetiously that a change in the name of his church to "Children's Church" is under consideration because the young people are coming in so fast. This is on account of his use of moving pictures on Sunday evenings. The doctor says the plan has been a splendid success and will be continued.

---

The Universal Indians are much interested in the building of a permanent pueblo, which is to be a practical building in every way. It will house the Indians and they will feel right at home, for the members of the various tribes are all from the pueblo country in New Mexico. It is being built on the hill above the scenario office and overlooks some fine scenery.

LAW DOES STUNTS FOR RELIANCE.

Rodman Law Tempted Fate in a New Way Before the Cameras of the Reliance Company Recently.

During the production of "Saved by Airship," Law climbed from his seat in Harry Bingham Brown's aeroplane and swinging from the skids by his hands made a drop of seventy-five feet to the waters of Long Island Sound, while the airship was making over sixty miles an hour.

After he struck the water he saved the life of Rosanna Forbes, one of the ladies of the Reliance Company who had been blown from a launch by the discharge of a quantity of gunpowder.

Several camera men stationed on a pier and two tug boats kept their cameras busy and the result was some sensational film that will make "Saved by Airship" interesting from more standpoints than one.

J. V. Ritchie, Eustace Hale Ball, Rodman Law and Members of Reliance Company Appearing in "Saved by Airship.".

Foreign Trade Notes

BRITISH NOTES.

By Our Own Correspondent.

APROPOS of the recent references in this journal to the attitude of the American press generally towards the trade in matter of announcements, I should very much like to point out an example for the American offenders. I could indicate many admirable instances illustrating the perfect amity and good feeling that exists between the British press and the moving picture trade as a whole, but for one of the most widely read illustrated dailies to come out with two entire pages of illustrations and letterpress in proportion describing a single film is almost beyond the most avaricious dream of the press agent. Nevertheless, this is exactly what has happened for, as I write I have before me a copy of today's "Daily Sketch" containing eight exceptionally large and clear half-tone cuts of the principal scenes in the Cines masterpiece, "Quo Vadis," and a description lauding the production to Elysian heights. What may appear as a strange and inexplicable fact to the American mind is that the company in question have never done a single halfpenny in advertising in the journal in question. It is quite a common occurrence here to see voluntary and quite lengthy trade puffs preceding most important releases even in such staid journals as "The Standard" and the "Morning Post," while the "Daily Telegraph" now runs its weekly Cinema column.

A Yorkshire film renter approached me the other day with a copy of the Moving Picture World and remarked on the paragraph in the issue of January 4th on educational films. "It appears to me and to many of my colleagues in the trade," he said, "that American producers show most laxity in the manufacture of educational films. I have not a single client with whom I supply films who does not particularly specify that at least one educational film shall be included in each program. Some take two and I have one customer who has three in his program. Surely, if the railroad advertisements are any criterion, there is material and to spare for scenic productions, yet of the hundreds of American films in my stock room I don't think you could find more than a round dozen of the educational order." My friend's argument certainly provides food for serious reflection, for while such firms as Ambrosio, Pathe and Gaumont are regularly releasing as many as six "educationals" a week, American producers rarely include this class of film in their productions. The value of the educational film may not be apparent, but it is undoubtedly this and this alone that has brought the cinema—through the medium of press, pulpit and platform—into universal favor in England.

Mr. Hy Hibbert, the director of Hibbert's Pictures, has just developed his exposures taken on a recent American tour and very fine and very clear they are, too. Mr. Hibbert, I understand, will lecture the country on "From Sandy Hook to the Golden Gate." After that there is a probability that his company will take over the negatives and they may be released in the ordinary course. If these films do happen to be exported to America, would it not seem a trifle incongruous to the conservative American dealer?

For the benefit of those theater managers who wish to experiment in the novel performance suggested by the Moving Picture World a week or two ago, I might mention that the "educational" performance is an unqualified success at several theaters here. There are three shows in one London suburb alone which feature an educational matinee on Saturday afternoons and it is quite common for a party of schoolchildren under the guidance of a teacher to attend weekly. This idea can be extended on various lines by any manager with a pretence of a claim to originality. If he runs a theater in Harvard, Yale, or Syracuse, let him do as they do here in Oxford and advertise special Shakespeare and Dickens evenings, showing nothing but photoplays adapted from the works of the celebrities named.

There is a strong rumor current here concerning the formation of a large and important Anglo-American combine of film manufacturers and producers with the object of erecting studios in various parts of the country and a factory near some suitable commercial center for the manufacture of film stock and accessories. Whether this has any thing to do with the recent protracted visit of a prominent Western magnate to this country it is impossible yet to state. But it is ominous and sufficient to build upon a little when a small party of prominent trade personages are known to be scouring the country looking for a suitable site for an experimental studio-theater.

Mr. Redford, the unofficial censor of films, has now got to work and went through his first batch last week. It would be interesting to know exactly how American releases, which will already have been censored once, will be treated. Mr. Redford's premises are situated in the heart of London filmdom, Shaftesbury Avenue. All releases after March first for exhibition in the British Isles will be shown before the censor. This is the agreement arrived at by the manufacturers and renters here.

The chief constable of Leeds says that cinematograph shows are responsible for increased sobriety amongst the populace in the North of England. He further states that he would not be surprised to see a juvenile picture show for the exclusive use of children in which suitable films were shown. Here is another unconscious tip for the American showman.

A Program from Beirut.

We print below in fac-simile a kinematographic program issued by the Theatre des Fleurs in Beirut, Syria. It was placed at the disposal of the Moving Picture World by Mr. Charles A. Nasar, a well-known exhibitor of Toledo, Ohio. Mr. Nasar will, in the near future, establish a chain of model picture houses on the American plan in all the larger cities of Asia Minor.

Educational Pictures in Switzerland.

The little republic of Switzerland is quite wrought up over the kinematograph. While in some portions of the country there is a vehement agitation against the motion picture, it is highly appreciated in others. In Lausanne the directors of Ecoles Normales du Canton de Vaud requested the largest exhibitor of the city to place his theater at the disposal of the pupils of the school for the purpose of giving purely educational program. The exhibitor readily complied and the entertainment was voted a great success. It is reported in the Swiss daily press that a part of the annual appropriation for school purposes is to be used for the purchase of educational films.

Notes.

From Russian governmental reports it appears that in the past year 100,000,000 people have attended the moving picture theaters in the empire. The average price of admission is estimated at twenty cents, though in many places, especially in the larger cities, there are well-appointed theaters charging from 25 cents to 75 cents admission.

In July or August of the current year the manufacturers and exchanges and exhibitors of Belgium will hold an annual convention in the city of Ghent. A number of very important and interesting questions will be taken up for discussion and action.

Mr. Emilio Vardannes, a well-known director of the Milano Films Company, will hereafter be associated with the Savoia Film. While connected with the Milano Company his work has been largely confined to comedies, of which he produced quite a number of successful ones.

The motion picture is very popular in Egypt. A large exchange dealing with reels from all the European and most of the American manufacturers has recently been established in Alexandria.

The organized exhibitors of the Austrian empire at a mass meeting recently held in Vienna adopted a set of resolutions, urging a national censorship. The present system of local censorship is causing great hardship to exhibitors. Several deputies of the federal council appeared at the meeting and pledged their support to the scheme of regulation advocated by the exhibitors.

GREAT NORTHERN SPECIAL FEATURE.

The Great Northern Special Feature Film Company is priding itself upon its latest release, "In a Den of Lions, or Life in a Circus," which is said to be one of the most realistic dramas so far presented and dealing with the thrills of the sawdust arena. In this film almost the entire equipment of a circus is brought into action. The story is shown in the form of a drama and is said to be filled with many exciting incidents, as well as heart interest. The lion tamer is in love with a high wire walker who is the wife of a gymnast employed in the same circus. The attentions of the lion tamer are repulsed and he becomes enraged. During the action of the photo-drama a giant python escapes and finds its way into the dressing room of Ulla, the young wire walker. The little child of the latter is asleep on a couch and is saved from the embrace of the serpent by the timely arrival of the mother. Then there is a den of trained lions, over which the wire walker is obliged to take a perilous journey. She falls, but is rescued by her brother. In the end the lion tamer shoots himself accidentally while trying to keep his beasts in subjection. In the interim there are gymnastic stunts in midair, and the husband of the wire walker plunges through the net. The photography is said to be excellent and the production up to the Great Northern standard.

JAMES O'NEILL WINS SUIT AGAINST GENERAL FILM COMPANY.

The petition of James O'Neill to the supreme Court of New York for an injunction against the General Film Company to restrain that company from leasing the Selig production of Monto Cristo on the ground that it is an infringement of his copyrighted play of the famous story of Victor Hugo, has been decided in favor of the complainant. The court held that the Selig production had closely imitated Mr. O'Neill's version and had reproduced the scenes and action bodily. It is understood that the action was brought in the interests of the Famous Players Film Company, which has the right to produce Monte Cristo in pictures based upon the O'Neill version. At this writing the full text of the court's decision is not at hand, but it is said to discuss the questions involved in an interesting manner.

SUN FILM CORPORATION ORGANIZED.

The Sun Film Corporation, of New York City, to manufacture photographic films, has been organized with a capital of $50,000. The incorporators are Tobias A. Keppler, who for a long time served as counsel to the New York City exhibitors; Julius H. Dreher and Sidney Ascher, vice-president for New York State of the Exhibitors' League of America.

LUBIN BANQUET.

Siegmund Lubin, the photoplay film manufacturer, was the guest of honor Monday, January 6, at the Progress Club, Philadelphia. Many appreciative speeches were made, to which the motion picture king feelingly responded. The occasion was emphasized by the presentation of a large silver loving cup mounted with deer horns, and inscribed:

Presented to Siegmund Lubin,
By His Friends, January 6th, 1913.
Jacob Greenwald, Harry Goldman, Charles Oppenheimer, A. E. Oppenheimer, Joseph Harris, Samuel Abrams, Jacob Weinmann, Theo. Greenwald, Morris Meyerhoff, Abe Strouse, Joseph Call, N. B. Strouse, Chapman Marks, Max L. Kahn, Joseph Mastbaum, Charles Shoyer, Leopold Shoyer, Samuel Deutsch, Albert Cohn, Jay Mastbaum, Is. Hecht, L. Effron.

The cup will ornament the executive room of the Lubin Manufacturing Company.

The Moving Picture Educator

THE DANGER OF A LITTLE KNOWLEDGE.

IN the last issue of the Moving Picture World, the Chicago correspondent gives us the interesting information that an eminent and learned Detroit clergyman had spoken of the moving pictures as appealing "to children, and the uneducated mind"; but, that they did not appeal to "the educated and cultured." He further stated, "in my opinion the moving picture is not a high form of art." This statement coming from an educated man caused the writer to look closely into everything he had said, with a view to finding out how such a man could be guilty of such a criticism. Before very long the discovery was made that the learned clergyman also made use of the astonishing assertion, "the eye alone is a crude avenue to the mind"; the extraordinary use of the word "crude" in this connection is at once a libel on the eye and an unpardonable digression from that knowledge which every educated man is supposed to possess. The eye is not "crude," but perfect, and, as an avenue to the mind, is the most perfect possible, being doubly superior to the ear and capable of use without the ear. Of all men no one more than a clergyman should know:

> There is a book, who runs may read,
> Which heaven's own truth imparts,
> And all the lore its scholars need
> Pure eyes and faithful hearts.

From this quotation it will be seen that the whole book of nature and revealed truth enters the mind through the eye. It cannot therefore be surprising that a man should have such a poor opinion of the moving picture when he evidently has so little knowledge, or, so small an opinion, of the human eye. Whoever possesses sufficient knowledge which will lead to a proper and high appreciation of the eye will find himself correspondingly entertaining a high opinion of the moving picture. In all educational circles the greatest measure of praise has been accorded to the moving picture, in that, because the language of the eye is universal, the moving picture is the greatest teacher the world has ever known. From these deductions it will be seen that whoever may think of the eye as "a crude avenue to the mind," must also naturally think that the moving picture "is not a high form of art." On the contrary, a right admiration of the wonder, beauty, and marvelous possibilities of the human eye as the Creator's ordained "avenue to the mind," will also lead to the realization that the moving picture is not only "a high form of art," but a wonderful teacher alike to the child, the scholar, and the cultured.

THE DYTISCUS OR DIVING WATER BEETLE.

This Eclair film is a rich addition to the natural history series of moving pictures. Thanks to the microscopic enlargement, many beautiful pictures of most minute detail are shown, making an unusual combination of interest and instruction. The dytiscus is a species of carnivorous water-beetle. The larva shows a broad flat head with strong side-shaped jaws. The respiratory apparatus, placed at the end of the tail, keeps a bubble of air suspended, supported by the tiny filaments. It is always on the lookout for food and seizes its prey with its strong jaws, holding it in its tenacious grasp until it is devoured.

It is instructive to know that the dytiscus (the Greek name for diver) is one of the most gifted of insects. When the metamorphosis of the larva is complete, the full-grown beetle can swim, fly, walk, live on land, in the water, or in the air, and procure its food anywhere. The male has smooth wing-cases, while those of the female are striped along their entire length. The head is very strong, carrying the formidable jaws of the larva. The first pair of feet have sticky pads which help to secure its prey. The hind feet have beautiful feathering, which enable it to swim. The wing-cases cover membranous wings which are marvels of perfection in delicate texture, yet as strong and perfect as the swiftest flying insect. A special picture is shown descriptive of the great power of this marvelous insect. A triton caught by the jaws of the dytiscus finds it impossible to release itself, although much larger, and more animal like in size. From this description it will be seen that a scientific subject, requiring much knowledge and research, has been brought within the reach of the school child.

It is such pictures as these that make popular the most scientific subjects, and those firms who produce them should be commended and encouraged. The Eclair Company deserve praise for the elaborate and beautifully photographed details of this picture, in which instruction and interest is combined.

THE REGULAR RELEASE OF EDUCATIONAL FILMS.

Now that the release of educational films has passed from the accidental and occasional into the regular, it would seem eminently fitting that a more regular notice of them should appear on this page. At least six makers are now releasing from one to four or five films every month; this means a great advance along those broader lines so often advocated here. The possibility of making satisfactory programs for a regular exhibition of educational pictures is now practically assured. This means much to the enterprising exhibitor, enabling him to meet the demands of those about him, who ask for something more than "the same thing," besides enlarging the usefulness of the pictures and meeting demands of parents, children, schools, and churches. The following is a list of releases during December and January:

Scenic.

Picturesque Sorrento, Italy (Cines).
Among the Abruzzi Mountains (Cines).
The Velino River and Falls (Cines).
Yosemite National Park, and Big Trees of California (Edison).

The Jelly Fish and the Plankton (C. G. P. C.).
The Genet (C. G. P. C.).
The White Heron (Champion).
A Few Million Birds (Thanhouser).

Geographical.

China and the Chinese (Essanay).
India and Life in India (Eclair).

Scientific.

Radiography in Practice (C. G. P. C.).
The Part Played by Air in Respiration (C. G. P. C.).

National subjects are represented by "French Naval Manoeuvres" (C. G. P. C.), and sports by "The Lake Geneva Camp of Y. M. C. A." (Edison).

The Weekly Topical.

A few years ago an English weekly illustrated paper decided upon a daily venture. At that time it was considered impossible to obtain sufficient subjects to illustrate; the venture succeeded, however, and the daily Graphic became immensely popular. In like manner, but in a larger degree, the regular appearance of the two illustrated "weeklies" have become a standard of authority in the majority, if not in all the moving picture houses all over the world.

No greater disseminator of knowledge appears before the people than that which combines news and instruction, with the pleasure of picture illustration at the same time. The remarkable growth and wide scope of both the Pathe and Gaumont "weekly" is a twentieth century wonder; the gathering of illustrations of current events of every kind, from "the four corners of the earth," and redistributing them over an equally wide area, is a tremendous accomplishment. The time is here when the exhibitor who does not show the "weekly" is certainly not up to date; and the average person who is ignorant of the same is unpardonably deficient in the knowledge of that which is to the advantage of himself and his family.

"THE RACHEL OF THE SILENT DRAMA."

Rachel, who died at Cannes, near Toulon, France, on January, 3, 1858, and left an enviable record as an actress which the theatrical world keeps fresh in its memory, has now a challenger for the honors in Miss Marion Leonard, the charming, young American dramatic queen of motion pictures, says Isador Bernstein, of the Monopol Film Company. Miss Leonard has also the distinction of being the highest salaried moving picture artist in the world, her contract with the Monopol Film Company, of New York, netting her $1,000 per week for forty-two weeks in the year.

Miss Leonard's popularity dates back to the early days of motography, when her wonderful emotional work was brought before the public through a series of dramatic masterpieces issued by the Biograph Company. Since then she has been starred by the Vitagraph, Reliance, Rex and Gem companies.

Marion Leonard.

Jeanne D'Arc (in which Rachel toured for several seasons) will be one of the masterpieces in which Miss Leonard will play the leading part, while the Countess Du Barry and books and plays of similar natures are also to be included in Miss Leonard's program.

The Monopol Film Company, which has become famous in the moving picture world as the distributors of the great masterpieces, Homer's "Odyssey" and Dante's "Inferno," will be the sole distributors of the Marion Leonard productions.

PALEY RELIEF FUND GROWS.

Edison Studio Comes to the Aid of Veteran Picture Man—A Good Suggestion.

The appeal for aid for the veteran picture man, Mr. William Paley, who was recently injured in the line of duty, brings a substantial contribution from several members of the Edison studio forces. It is gratifying to observe the interest that is being taken in Mr. Paley's condition by the rank and file of the industry. With the exception of the most generous donation from Mr. Nicholas Power, the greater part of the relief fund thus far reported to The Moving Picture World has been contributed in small amounts by the working picture men. While these contributions are helpful, and indicate the spirit of generosity on the part of the donors, they also set an example to the men of means in the trade better able to contribute to the relief of Mr. Paley. On the subject of gathering contributions to this fund, Mr. S. M. Jacobi, in a letter to The Moving Picture World, says:

> "In reference to the sad case of Wm. A. Paley, the veteran cameraman, who is permanently disabled as the result of an accident while on duty, would it not be feasible to appoint someone in each studio to gather subscriptions to relieve the immediate wants of himself and family? I cannot consider myself as being an old friend, but was struck by the urgent need of help, and indeed most of the subscriptions I gathered were from persons who did not know him at all personally, and who responded cheerfully. Enclosed please find check for my small contribution. I remain,

While The Moving Picture World cannot undertake to appoint persons to gather these subscriptions, it offers the suggestion that some responsible person in each moving picture studio in the country take the matter into his own hands and make a canvass of his fellow employes, bearing in mind that small contributions will be thankfully received by the beneficiary. We append herewith the contributions that have come to the notice of The Moving Picture World up to date:

At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs

By George Blaisdell.

A GOOD man, and a young man, has gone. Poor Coover! He was one chap to tie to. Whether calling on him at the Eclair office or chatting with him in the World office, or meeting him outside, he was always the same—cheery, optimistic and as willing to take banter as he was ready to give it. There are men you get close to, whom you intuitively trust, on short acquaintance. It is this feeling of confidence, of reliance, that transforms acquaintanceship into friendship. Such it was, and all too short.

James K. Hackett did not take a trip south in order to find water of a comfortable temperature for the moat scenes in "The Prisoner of Zenda." Instead, the studio of the Famous Players was the place, and the water was taken from the Croton supply. Mr. Hackett found it cold—he was forty-five minutes in wet clothes—much too cold for comfort. To add to the unpleasant experience he was just in the full swing of the after effects of furious horseback riding—the first in which he had indulged in some time, and for which he was entirely out of training. Mr. Hackett has found much in pictures to interest him, however. In conversation at the studio the other day he remarked that he had been obliged to use all his knowledge of the various branches of athletics; he had fought, wrestled, fenced, shot, rode horseback, swam ditches, and even danced. There were several other items which have slipped the memory. Mr. Hackett seems to be thriving in spite of his strenuous times.

To one who had within a few weeks reread "The Prisoner of Zenda" it seemed almost like walking into the book to step into the Players' studio and see King Rudolph, or, rather, the man who was filling the place of the King (Mr. Hackett); the Grand Duke, "Black Michael," so realistically typified by David Torrence, who hurried away after his appearance before the camera to join the company of Miss Barrymore in Philadelphia; fine old Colonel Sapt, the loyal soldier of the real King, obliged to confess that the Englishman thrust into the shoes and seat of the actual ruler was the better man (Frazer Coulter), and the superb Flavia, of queenly figure and charming manner, portrayed by Miss Beatrice Beckley.

Picture-player friends of "Ed" Porter would feel genuine pleasure could they hear the kind things said of the technical director of the Famous Players by Managing Director Daniel Frohman and by Mr. Hackett. It is plain Mr. Porter is making firm friends among the stage artists. Mr. Frohman is enthusiastic over "The Prisoner of Zenda." He referred to the fact that in nearly all plays love is the underlying theme, but in this work it was an even greater and nobler theme—renunciation. He spoke of the effective ending of the play, the same scene as the opening one. Rassendyl, who had so sturdily filled the throne of a ruler, is seated at home. He sees a vision of Flavia. He picks up the rose she had given him. The picture fades.

Mr. Hackett, who on tour is his own stage director, has in the course of the making of the picture made many valuable suggestions. To Albert W. Hale has been given the management of the "mob" scenes. The coronation ball, staged last week, is expected to prove something unusual in motion picture settings. There were a hundred dancers. In the ballroom were people well known in New York—but who are accustomed to the orchestra side of the footlights. They were delighted at the opportunity to appear in the picture. And why not?

Have you seen Kalem's "The Wives of Jamestown"? In the language of the street—and also of the Avenue—go to it. It is worth while. It is two reels—packed. Sidney Olcott, Gene Gauntier and Jack Clark may rest their case on this production. In the scene where Lady Geraldine begs of John Pierce, the colonist who has purchased and wed her, to permit her to live in seclusion, Gene Gauntier shows real quality. If there be a man who can witness the following scenes—where Geraldine retires and bolts the door; where Pierce removes his beard and begins to play upon the old-time flute; where Geraldine, with that strange look in her eyes, unbolts the door and, recognizing Bryan, flies to the arms of her lover of early days—and remain unstirred, he had better consult a doctor. His heart is too good.

Walter Rosenberg on January 12 opened his Park Theater, at Columbus Circle and 59th Street. Here's a guess that there's a real record business for an opening day, especially when there is taken into consideration the fact that but 48 hours notice of opening was given. Following a performance by Adeline Genee the house was turned over to Mr. Rosenberg at 5 o'clock on Friday afternoon. The theater opened at 12 o'clock Sunday noon, and between then and 11 o'clock at night $814 was taken in at the box office. That means a lot of people. The prices were 15 cents for the orchestra and the first balcony, and 10 cents for the second balcony. The house will be open daily from 11 to 11. A feature will be the projection. The curtain is 14.8 by 17.8. The booth is placed in the balcony, so as to give a direct throw. Mr. Rosenberg removed 56 seats in order to get this; he is satisfied with the result; there is no question that his patrons will be.

The Satax films, featuring Martha Russell, formerly of the Essanay company, will be marketed through the agency of Warner's Features. There will be behind her a competent company, under the direction of Mr. Powers, formerly of the Pathe forces. It is intended to make three-reel features, and occasionally a single-reel drama. Mr. Warner announces the formation of another company which will book through his offices. This will be under the direction of George P. Hamilton, a well-known picture man, now of St. Louis. The name of the new aggregation has not been selected.

J. G. Boyle, a detective attached to New York Police Headquarters, is writing for the Universal program a scenario covering some of the more exciting incidents of a long police career. Mr. Boyle was at one time associated with the famous Petrosino in the pursuit of Black Handers.

Among the recent visitors registered at the Kinemacolor headquarters are Charles Dana Gibson, Langhorne Gibson, James S. Metcalfe, W. F. Connor and Ruth St. Denis.

Emil Kehrlein, Jr., of San Francisco, representing the Turner & Dahnken circuit of houses, is in New York on a business trip. Mr. Kehrlein, who is a graduate of Columbia, '06, is no stranger in New York, but he says New York, with its new theaters and buildings, looks strange to him.

C. Lang Cobb, Jr., attended the convention of exhibitors at Columbus, Ohio, on January 21st and 22nd, representing Reliance, Majestic and Punch films. Mr. Cobb specialized with the two-reel Reliance comedy-drama "The Open Road," in which Irving Cummings has the lead, and in which he has done some of his best work. Oscar Apfel made the picture. It is a corker.

Vitagraph puts over a decided novelty in its release of January 9th—"Two of a Kind." Edna and Alice Nash, twins in their teens, appear in the picture, and although they have had practically no experience in acting, do good work. George Cooper and James Morrison, who play opposite them, are not to be blamed for being unable to tell one from t'other, for they are so much alike the observer is in the same predicament. They will appear in a second release, to be issued in February, entitled "Cutey and the Twins."

"Sam" Speedon, the man who tells the people how good Vitagraph pictures are, paid his first visit to the new offices of the Moving Picture World on Wednesday. He looks, if anything, a bit younger than ever.

John F. Pribyl, personal representative of William N. Selig, is in New York on business.

Robert H. Cochrane, who has had business relations with Carl Laemmle for seven years, and who conducts a large advertising business in Chicago, is now located at the main offices of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in this city, and it is announced that he will be permanently. It is not unlikely that Mr. Cochrane will open an advertising agency here, his Chicago office remaining under the supervision of a brother.

Joe Universal Brandt has been in Columbus the past week telling the exhibitors in attendance at the convention there all about the virtues of Universal films. Two of the shining examples he took along were "Sheridan's Ride" and "Gold Is Not All."

E. J. Hudson, of the Universal's publicity staff, recently sent out circulars to newspapers offering to furnish them with moving picture news. As a result he now has on his list 250 papers.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Ringing the Bell.

HENNEGAN AND COMPANY, of Cincinnati, want to know what we think of their "Ding-Dongers." In the language of the shooting gallery, we think that they "ring the bell" in providing a cheap means of pictorial advertising. The slips are prepared for the subjects of the licensed manufacturers, and are printed on both sides. The sheet is 5½ by 8 inches and carries one cut, the sheet being folded to make a four pager. Each reel is covered whether one or two subjects, the cut going to the more important topic if there are two titles. All title pages carry a large "coming" at the bottom that will take a rubber stamp imprint of the date without seriously marring the "coming." These are sold in packages of five hundred each, title in lots of one thousand or more at one dollar a thousand, about what a local man would charge for a cheap one impression job. If you have a reasonably certain idea of what you are going to get, we do not think that you can get a bigger value than these ding-dongers, and we are glad to make mention of them here, more on account of the exhibitor than to please Hennegan and Co. though their effort to meet the demand for material entitles them to all the help they can receive.

As their advertising ding-donger says, "You must keep ding-donging, lest they forget." And this is about the cheapest reminder that can be had. We are in favor of patronizing the local press wherever possible, but something like this is a value that cannot be overlooked. The stuff is displayed by the most experienced poster compositors and they get a greater value from their lines than the average country printer possibly can and they are put at a price that no country printer can meet unless he can order his paper by the ton, for the dingers are not printed on cheap news stock, but on a quality of paper that carries the cut. There is plenty of variety to the stuff and it is not the old cut and dried mortised idea, each circular being set with thought for the copy for that particular issue. They can't come any cheaper.

Display Work.

And that matter of display work is something that should attract more attention than it does. It is not enough to prepare copy and take it to the printer. Take it to the printer and get him to second your efforts by making the proper lines stand out. The printer's first idea is to make a pretty page. He uses type as type and not as advertising matter. He sets according to his idea of what will look nice, regardless of the fact that his scheme of sizes may bury the best line in your copy. Mark the stuff to show which lines are most important and insist that these be played up wholly without regard to what the printer thinks. If you can change your lines around to suit the printer's ideas, perhaps you'll get a better display, but whether or no, insist that the big lines, the title, the date and data be played up so that you can know what is what at a glance. We've found it the best way to take copy to the printer and try and have a chat with the man who sets the type and the foreman, on the proposition that we know what we want, but they know what they want to do. By holding a consultation the best results are apt to be arrived at without friction.

Sure Thing.

Sam W. B. Cohn sends in a throwaway and wants to know if we approve of it. We assuredly do. It is a red ink shriek, but it makes the right sort of a noise. It advertises The Invaders and the line "War Is Declared" in red ink dominates the entire sheet. You can't help seeing it and it is going to be hard to keep from reading far enough to see what it is all about. Right below the title of the subject is printed in 42 point. As a rule the title should be the largest line, but here the catchline carries the title. There is a brief announcement of the film and then this line "Remember! The New Spokane Theater never changes its admission price." There are times when the Spokane could do so with profit, but it reads well, at that.

Mr. Cohn writes that he distributed 10,000 of these and played to ten thousand in the four days the subject ran. Maybe it was only 9,999, but the point is that he advertised luridly but effectively and captured the business. There is a nice art in knowing when to explode bombs and burn red fire and when to go around and whisper things. The Invaders was a military drama full of hurrah and the advertising was made to match. We would like to see if Mr. Cohn uses equally good judgment with more quiet features, if he will be good enough to send in some more of his printed matter.

Another Arnoldism.

Some of these days we want to see S. A. Arnold, of the Lyric Theater, Mena, Arkansas, hit it over to the big time. His ideas are bigger than his location. Here is his latest. It's a regular idea and with the Tigre company supplying a lot of regular brands with these lion pictures and Selig making many more, this tin can lion will be in good demand. Mr. Arnold writes:

> For the benefit of any exhibitor that wants to use the same method for this or any other animal picture I present a plan and one that I used successfully with the "Lion Tamer's Revenge."
> I first secured a large transfer wagon and made a shell or frame to exactly fit the wagon and in the top and bottom arm pieces I bored holes about four inches apart, then borrowed from the blacksmith enough iron bars to finish my lion cage. I covered the bottom half of the cage with sign cloth announcing the picture at the Lyric. This is done to conceal an inside view in to the cage, then made me two lion roars from two five gallon lard cans; all that is necessary to do is punch a small hole in center of can and run a small cord through which should be resined, then take a small cloth and by pulling cloth back and forth it will produce the roar; the cage and roar give the suggestion of what is in the cage. Parade your town well and the crowd is yours. Of course there should be flags, etc., in fact, make it as much like a circus wagon as possible.

We've even an idea that some enthusiastic small boy can be induced to regard it as a privilege to work the roar.

Handle With Care.

The Q Amusement Company, Los Angeles, offers a new idea that may be taken up with profit by some managements, though it is rather a risky experiment. It is a pupils' night, the students of local conservatories being given a chance to work before an audience.

Every Thursday a program is formed, no pupil being accepted without the guarantee of the teachers. This is an excellent thing for those who contemplate platform work since it gives them the invaluable training of appearing in public; it is good for the teachers and it is a good thing for the house, since all relatives and friends may be expected to attend the debuts.

The Q sends a couple of booklets, one announcing the subject and one rejoicing over the first performance. An error of phrasing makes an incorporated company state that it has had stage experience where it is probably only the writer of the announcement who is meant. Even were all of the Q company ex-players the company itself could not have stage experience. Another error is the excessive use of capitals. Where emphasis is desired italics and full face in upper and lower case is greatly to be preferred to the all capital line since the latter is hard to read. An excessive use of either destroys the emphasis through overwork. An entire paragraph should never be set in all capitals. The Q gets out nice looking advertising and should not detract from the effect with this overplus of capitals.

If you think you can make use of the idea and keep your audience from regarding the occasion as an amateur night you'll find that it will pay you, but it would be well to have the people give a trial performance without audience before your program or you are likely to have a riot anyhow.

Almost.

Brunswig Brothers and Sparks, of the Classic Theater, Asheville, N. C., sends in a pseudo day letter printed on the regular blank of the Western Union. The idea is almost good, but having gone so far they should have tried to make the imitation complete. Instead, a part of the space is taken up by a red ink cut and the printing is all in red, not at all like a regular telegram. Black ink and printing through silk would have conveyed the suggestion of an actual lettergram and would have been many times more effective. When you get an idea carry it all the way through.

Wants Some Suggestions.

L. C. Ross writes that he is showing the pictures in small towns through Southwest Texas, where he cannot depend on hand bills or daily papers to advertise some film that may come in with no advertising matter. He wants suggestions.

About the only thing that seems to suggest itself in such a case is a sandwich man. A pair of boards could be provided and the advertisement put on in water color that may be washed off, permitting the boards to be used repeatedly. In a town of that size one man should be able to cover the place pretty thoroughly. A town where a job of printing cannot be rushed through cannot be very large and a single perambulating advertisement could cover the place repeatedly in a couple of hours. Perhaps someone else similarly situated has found some more effective method. We'll be glad to have suggestions.

All But the Ads.

The Lyric Theater, Corning, Iowa, sends in its jubilee program giving a list of special features for the anniversary week. The program is done on good paper and the front page is well displayed, but the printing of the program might have been better done and the trade advertisements look as though they might have been set by the printer's small son. Possibly a lack of type faces gives too much monotony to the display, but any printing office should be able to afford a better variety than this. The two advertising pages pull down the entire program and we do not like the idea of using the program proper as an insert to the four-page folder. It should have been made an eight-pager and stitched, else the program should have run complete on the third page with advertisements on the fourth page only. The idea of the program is good, each night being a "special" with subjects and music to match, patriotic airs on Patriotic Night and operatic airs on Classic Night, but the advertising cuts down the average and poor composition also hurts.

Passes Everywhere.

Lee D. Balsly sends in some printed matter from his Aladdin Theater, Springfield, Mo. One of these is a card with "A Modest Brag" about the house and topped by a pass good for one except Saturday and Sunday. The others are larger sheets announcing special releases. Each carries a boxed pass. We think it would be better to find some other means of distributing the passes. That they are printed on all advertising matter gives the suggestion that they are so common as scarcely to be worth while. The same general distribution might be made in such a way as to suggest that the pass was something of value. Half a dozen schemes have been mentioned in this department.

We like Mr. Balsly's idea of giving a complete weekly program on all special matter, but the smaller of the two large sheets suggests congestion. There is too much type to the page to hold the attention.

Out of the Ordinary.

Something very much out of the ordinary is the booklet sent out by the Shawmut Theater Company, Boston. This house is in the residential district and the booklet tells in the form of a story of the discovery of a family that they do not have to go into the theater district to see a good show. The alternate pages carry full-page cuts of the exterior and interior of the house, the entire book, save the cover, being printed on heavy coated paper. The cover is a greenish gray pebbled in black with border and title in gold and just a touch of red in the device of the house. It is an unusual piece of printing for a photoplay theater, but in making an appeal to the residents of the section it is probable that something of this sort once would be worth a couple pounds of posters. It is largely a question of patronage. In many sections this sort of advertising would be money thrown away, but here it probably did much missionary work.

Gets the Grown-ups, Too.

Joe H. Bunnell, of the Olympic theater, Toppenish, Washington, has the right idea of reaching out for the grown-ups through the children. He writes:

> Being a constant reader of The World, I always turn to the advertising for exhibitors first. I have found a great many good ideas in the department, and think I have run upon a good thing myself, so will pass it along. I am always looking out to keep the people coming my way and to keep them coming when I once get them. I run all the features I can get, but can only charge 10 cents. I think we should have more but the other house cut to 10 cents for features and I had to also. I have tried all kinds of schemes to advertise my features, but the ticket for school children beat them all. The tickets were put out at the schools by the teacher and she gave an account of Old Rip. The result was more paid admissions for "Rip," than any feature I ever had, besides 408 school children free. I got all my advertising, including two write-ups in the papers and a small sum for each ticket redeemed. It brought faces that I never saw to the show before. If you think my scheme is worth anything to others pass it along.

Works All Ends.

Mr. Bunnell works all the angles of this scheme. In the first place the paper indorses the theater and advertises it. Through the fact that it is a newspaper scheme and not the advertisement of a theater, the school people took it up and got the children interested and they, in turn, got the parents to come. It seemed a shame to let the free ticket go to waste, the child was primed with arguments by the teachers, so everyone, including the manager, was happy. The ticket is worded:

> RIP VAN WINKLE
> OLYMPIC THEATER
> THURSDAY AND FRIDAY EVENINGS, DEC. 19-20
> This ticket will admit any school child under 12 years of age as the guest of THE TOPPENISH REVIEW, to either of the above performances, WHEN ACCOMPANIED BY AN ADULT.
> ADMISSION FOR ADULTS, 10 CENTS

The keynote is sounded in this extract from the paper:

> Appreciating the interest of the school children in this old fashioned American story, the Review has arranged with the management of the Olympic Theater to entertain the pupils as above noted. The tickets have already been distributed at the different schools.

It Can Be Done.

But it seems to us that the fact that the "other fellow" charges the usual ten cent admission for features is no reason why more should not be charged if the reels are reasonably recent and in good condition. The fact that you have to charge fifteen cents should be played up. It is apt to make persons think that the features must be better than those shown at ten cents. Lay stress on the fact that these are the same features that will be shown at ten cents but that you get them earlier, in better condition, run them more effectively and offer a more pleasing performance. Then make good on those points. Get them before they are worn out, put them on with extra music, make the subject important and you will find that you'll actually get a larger crowd at fifteen cents than you could draw at the regular admission.

You'll find that most persons will accept your valuation if you do not over value. Give good value, but don't get the idea that you cannot get more than ten cents, and forget the other fellow. Be aware of opposition, but do not be guided by it. The fear of opposition has done more to create failures than any other single factor. If your opposition is not all out of proportion to the size of the town, do not let it scare you. If you are alert, you can get your share of the business. Let the other fellows have theirs. Some managers get so busy about that hated "other fellow" that they cannot run their own house properly. This does not seem to apply to Mr. Bunnell in full, but he started us off and it had to come out.

Save Calendars.

A personal correspondent in Chicago writes that the Bonaventure Theater, Chicago, gave calendars as souvenirs Christmas Eve and Christmas Day, each being adorned with a postcard of some photoplayer. The writer adds that most of the patrons being advertised that they could have their choice, expressed their preference without hesitation.

The postcard is becoming the standard souvenir because the personality of the player is of more importance to the average patron than the brand of film. Three years ago Pathe nights were prevalent and then came Biograph nights and Vitagraph nights, but now the specials have reference more frequently to the player than the brand.

Cameraphone Bulletin.

We do not see the Cameraphone Bulletin as regularly as we would like, but this Pittsburgh publication turns up every little while and we note a growing tendency to work in the reading feature. The latest issue is about equally divided between film anouncements and talk about players and plays. It is hard, sometimes, to nerve yourself to cut out the advertisement of the film and put in something about one of the companies or the films in general, but in the long run, if you make your appeal through special and general matter instead of sticking to the special subjects in hand and using them alone, you'll find that you have made your whole audience photoplay fans and have bound them to you by a closer tie than the fact that you have something particularly good next Wednesday. Remember that you are going to be in business for some time if you work things right, so advertise beyond the coming week. Make your patrons fans and what you have next Wednesday will not be so important, provided that it is good. Advertise not so much the particular films as the films and the fact that you get the best. Do a little in the headline end yourself. Be a feature. The Cameraphone is one of the best edited film programs in the country. They would not waste the space in readers if it did not pay them.

In the Same Spirit.

In the same spirit comes a letter from Melvin G. Winstock, of the People's Amusement Company, Portland, Oregon. He takes less pride in the write up of Cleopatra than in the fact that the dramatic critic has been made to recognize the photoplay theater as something worthy of personal attention. Mr. Winstock writes:

> I am sending you herewith some of the advertising concerning Helen Gardner's "Cleopatra." We absolutely packed them into the very limit of capacity for the full engagement and made one of the biggest hits ever known in this section of the world, in fact, on Sunday, the opening day, we smashed every record positively that the house has ever made, and we secured for the first time recognition from The Oregonian in the way of criticism on the part of their regular Dramatic Editor, who came and sat through the show and wrote the criticism which I have marked. This is the first time they have ever done this, hitherto leaving it entirely to me to do the write up. If I have succeeded in making The Oregonian recognize us among the regular dramatic attractions of the week. I think I have taken a big step in the right direction.

The clipping in question runs about half a column and starts off this way:

> Just as well call the production of "Cleopatra," at the People's Theater, a drama and view it with attendant importance, for such it is.
> There are 6000 feet of this drama, although that is a fact one notes from the billing, and not because of any consciousness of the entertainment's length. In truth the two hours it takes to reel off this wonderfully-enacted story of the beautiful sorceresss of the Nile, are as charmed minutes, so rapidly do they glide by.

It's no small feather in Winstock's cap and probably is the reason he has been squandering part of the profits in night letters trying to get Miss Gardner to cross the continent and appear in person. She is too busy to leave the studio for the three weeks, but Mr. Winstock's willingness to pay a good salary and transportation argues something for photoplay theater enterprise.

Edison Advance.

There are the three Edison best bets for the early part of February: "The Princess and the Man" to be released Feb. 1st. A strong dramatic picture in which the daughter of a King secretly attends a Revolutionists' meeting to see what it is like and becomes their friend. After an invasion by the people of the palace the submission of the King is brought about through the intercession of his daughter and the sight of some of his starving subjects. The settings in this picture are excellent.

"How They Outwitted Father," to be released Feb. 5. A comedy with a good laugh. The secretary of an old eccentric banker is secretly in love with his daughter and concocts a scheme to get rid of her father's choice, an old fossil by nature and fossil by name. He disguises himself as her father and sees old fossil when he arrives, but her father enters also and the real and the disguised meet face to face. After a few laughable incidents Old Fossil is forced into the wig and side whiskers of the secretary in time to be arrested as a dangerous intruder. The secretary gains the consent of the girl's father for his bravery in the matter.

"Barry's Breaking In," to be released Feb. 10. Barry's father, a millionaire, realizes that his son is a fine specimen of the idle rich youth of today and decides to see if he has any good in him. He sends him to an eccentric inventor, a friend of his, to try him out. Barry falls in love with his daughter and asks for her hand, but is refused on account of his idleness. He accepts a position with the inventor and is put through the hardest stunts by his fellow workmen while the girl looks on with an aching heart. He proves his real worth and gains the girl, however, when during an explosion in the chemical room, he risks his life to save that of his fellow workman.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Those Schools.

Lawrence S. McCloskey, of the Lubin Company, has been supplying William Lord Wright with some of the letters that have come into the Lubin studio from graduate students of the photoplay schools. They are crude, unintelligent and a most telling argument against the swindling advertising that coaxes the money from those who can ill afford to pay.

We are not going to use our letters because they have come to us as communications from clients. They are privileged, much as the communcation of the patient to his doctor, but some of them are pathetic in the extreme.

There was a letter from a girl who had completed her course. She sent several stories to the school to sell for her. They charged her for the typewriting and sent them to the Edison Company. The Edison Company very promptly sent them back to her. Then they came to us. All we could tell her was that she had not the slightest idea of comedy action and that any man who took her money for typing those plays was either a fool or a thief, or perhaps a foolish thief.

We have stood over the camera for a long time. We stood over one for ten hours the day this was written. We know, through experience, that the ideas were not good. The head of the alleged institute did not know because he never wrote and sold a decent photoplay of his own and perhaps never saw one turned. We'll be willing to bet a couple of dollars that if he knows that "turning" means taking a picture he got it out of some paper. And yet he poses as a professor, a learned instructor. He passed her script because there was money in it and once he had the money for typing it he let it slip back to her through the Edison Company.

The same company told another pupil that a story was very clever. They sent it to Lubin and P. S. McCloskey returned it with the statement that the tale never would pass the censors.

Mr. McCloskey was right to a dot, but the woman who wrote it, a high-minded and well connected resident of a small town, was shocked into sending it to us. We told her what this self-styled professor should have known, that the spectacle of a man and woman, total strangers to each other, in the same bed was something that could not be shown. The story, as a story, was an old and tried friend, the sort that could be told to anyone without bringing the blush of shame, but this man who runs a correspondence school does not know any more than the pupil did that the sight, the actual physical sight, of the man and woman in the same bed was a photoplay impossibility.

And yet this man will get $20 when he can take $2 when he has to. Here are some extracts from a letter we had this week:

> I am about to become identified with a photoplay school. Several of my business associates, who, in their ignorance, regard me as more or less of a genius, have organized a school of this character, and have offered me more money than I ever knew existed to take charge of the course and permit myself to be featured as "the only successful photoplaywright engaged in giving correspondence instruction." I consented, and our advertisements will appear in the February magazines.
> Now I honestly believe that photoplay writing can be taught by correspondence. I believe this just as firmly as you believe the opposite, and I am just as sincere in my belief as you are in yours. We cannot endow a person with what God has denied him, of course, but if a student has the foundation, at the completion of our course, he will know a darn sight more about photoplay writing than he can glean from text books. I am getting up a course which I think will be adequate. It is based upon what I have read, what I have observed, and what I have learned by experience. I am putting into it every ounce of ability I have, and when it is completed, and the rough edges removed, I will not be ashamed to own it. I am making this statement, Mr. Sargent, because I want you to believe that I am sincere. I would be glad to send you the course (not right away, as I am writing it under heavy pressure and it will be several months before I get it into proper form).
> Now as to my ability. I began writing photoplays last March. I work twelve hours a day as a private secretary, and all my writing has been on Sunday. In this time I have written 29 photoplays. I have sold 19 of them, five are on the road and five have been destroyed (three of these latter because they came back marked "done before"). If I had had the time I believe this number would have been nearer 129 than 29. This is another good reason why I am going into the school business. I will not only place myself several laps ahead of the wolf, but I will have time to do a little writing of my own, and I am going to produce some photoplays that are photoplays.
> I wrote and sold six photoplays right off the reel, then got chesty and went "bad." I wrote several indifferent scenarios and they all came back. I then came to my senses, fixed up what I could of the drivel and got down to work. I have studied hard and I believe I can truthfully say that any photoplay I write now is a saleable one.
> I am a dreamer, without the ability or training to express myself in words. I think I am possessed of a large measure of common sense. To these two faculties I attribute the fact that I sold six photoplays without one single rejection when I began writing, a record that I think it would be hard to match.

We have written and sold to one company alone 35 scripts since the first of September. We have sold a number of others to various companies, but in less than five months we have sold to a single company six plays in excess of his entire production and sixteen more than he has succeeded in selling. In one week recently we wrote seven half reels and one full reel. The latter is in hand and four of the seven splits have been produced.

That same week we turned down the proposition of the leading literary magazines to assume the charge of their personal instruction by mail, the one system which, if anything, can help the author. We did not feel that even this personal letter course was within our ideas of what would avail. We gave up the idea of conducting it just as quickly and just as cheerfully as we would have done had we had no other source of income. It is by no means the first proposition we have turned down, nor do we think it will be the last. We could have done the work in addition to our other duties, but we did not believe in the scheme of instruction by mail and we turned it down, and yet this genius who has been working at photoplay since last March is going to set up in business with a system that he does not yet dare show a practical producer of pictures.

There is nothing in his letter to show that he knows the least thing about practical production, indeed some of the excised portions of his letter (excised because they might give a clue to his identity), prove that a majority of his scripts have been sold to a studio more than five hundred miles distant from his home. And yet, if you please, he is a professor of photoplay, and a blind leader of the blind.

Is it any wonder that we hold to the opinion that the photoplay school idea is a common swindle and that the man who accepts the advertisement is only one degree less culpable than he who inserts it?

We think that Mr. McCloskey has made a valuable contribution in showing the mental equipment of many of these pupils, but none of the McCloskey letters show the heartbreaks, the disappointments and the actual privations that lie back of the letters. These come to us. He lacks the strong reason for thinking, for knowing that the man who without qualification and solely for the purpose of gain pretends to teach photoplay writing is the meanest, low-down thief that is allowed to exist outside of prison walls. He steals from women and children, from the widows and the helpless. And he knows it.

Universal Rules.

We quote from a "flimsy" sent out by the Universal. Not long ago we warned writers against sending to the Universal. This brought a kick, but it also brought a change in the system of handling scripts. No longer are they allowed to accumulate on the floor or wherever may be handy. The new reader is handling the back submissions rapidly and is about to start fresh. Here are some of the promises and requirements. Note them carefully if you wish to sell to Universal—and it is our personal opinion that you can sell now, for Joe Brandt has interested himself in the question, and we have a lot of faith in Mr. Brandt.

Scripts not found available will be returned in one week or less.

Those held for action will return to the author within a month, either as a rejection or a release script.

The minimum for full reel will be $25 with more if the script is worth it. Double reels will be paid for on a larger scale, but probably less than double the single reel minimum, as is quite right and proper.

Credit on the screen will be given the author.

Scripts will be read for all companies. They may figure as modern day stories of any part of the country. They say: "Bright, snappy comedies, virile dramas of Eastern or Western environment, military and cowboy comedies and dramas are among the principal requirements of the company. Particularly for the mammoth western organization is desired one, two and three reel scenarios requiring casts with large ensembles of Indians, cowboys and miners (note: the cast proper should require but few leading players.—Ed.). For the eastern companies comedies and dramas with a majority of interior settings, together with split reel comedies are in demand."

It is required that each script supply a synopsis within 300 words, a cast of characters, and a plot of action properly divided into scenes and supplied with full leaders and inserts. This must be written on paper 8½ by 11 inches and MUST BE TYPEWRITTEN.

Plots must be original unless stated to be from a copyrighted or other source, when that source must be given.

If desired a minimum price may be noted on the script.

We do not follow the exact phrasing of the announcement, but have reduced it to more simple terms. What it amounts to, is this:

The Universal is willing to pay good prices for good scripts and medium prices for medium scripts. It does not want poor scripts. It wants them in proper form for easy reading, on paper of the proper size and typed. At present it wants mostly studio stuff for the eastern companies and outside stuff for the westerns. It wants two and three reel subjects that are too big to go in one reel, not merely one reel stories padded out to two or three reels.

If you can make good it wants to do business with you and as a return for your assistance it will help you make a name for yourself.

The Universal has accorded wretched treatment to the photoplaywright since its inception, but it is going to be good now. That is what Mr. Brandt says—and we are strong for him.

The Record.

We think the record for age goes to a photoplaywright in Memphis, who has taken up the writing of pictures at the age of 69. Education and some other things are against her, but she has the comedy idea and we hope some day to count her one of us.

Say Not So.

William Lord Wright says that the proper paper to use is 8" by 11". If he worked on a regular paper we would shriek a remonstrance, but the chances are that his boss didn't like the look of that fraction and cut it out. Typewriter paper is regularly cut in three sizes. These are 8 by 10½ inches, 8½ by 11 inches and 8½ by 13 inches. There is no 8 by 11 size. Set it down as a misprint and note that the 8½ by 11 inch size is that most used or the 8½ by 11 cut into two sheets 8½ by 5½ inches. These two sizes and these two sizes only are of a proper form.

Nice!

We understand that a certain house organ published in the middle west is about to apply for second class mail privilege. The sheet is merely the organ of an alleged correspondence school that has been in trouble with the postoffice authorities already because the men behind the concern have taken money and have yielded no return in goods or service. If the Third Assistant Postmaster General extends the second class rates to this publication we shall have more to say in the matter. It is a source of surprise to us that the promoters of the scheme are not now under federal indictment for using the mails for improper purposes.

Some Tips.

A. Bruce Campbell, who has written a number of scripts and who seems to be in line for a sub-editorial job, sends in some useful hints that epitomize much of what has been said in these columns from time to time. In this compact form it should be pasted up over the desk. Here they are:

Learn to respect all moral, religious and civil laws.

Do not hurry; haste makes waste. Nobody but an expert can write a good photoplay in a couple of hours. An author will regret it more than once if he sends out a play half-baked; he is sure to think of many places where improvements could be made. Time devoted to study and revision is well spent.

Good photoplays are the product of deep thought. First thoughts are not apt to be artistic. Artistic things are accomplished only by digging beneath the surface—by study.

The supply of hurriedly written, mediocre photoplays far exceeds the demand. Learn to avoid trite, commonplace, hackneyed incidents and methods. Study and digest all the criticisms of photoplays available.

There is no dramatic problem that cannot be worked out to its logical conclusion if proper knowledge is employed.

The spectator's sympathy must be aroused if his interest in the characters is to be maintained. His sympathy and interest must be obtained in the beginning. This cannot be done successfully by opening with situations that are confusing, depressing or distressing. It is best to open with a light scene—one that is essential to the development of the plot, yet will bring a smile of pleasure and satisfaction; then follow with the heavier action, the problem and the complications.

Never allow the action to retrograde; work forward with increasing force to the climax. Far better to have the climax a scene or two before the end than in the middle. Better still—work through a series of climaxes until the grand finale.

A situation is dramatic only in proportion to the spectator's sympathy for the characters involved.

Study dramatic construction and technique—the ingenious juxtaposition of incidents and situations, so that the exact effect intended is the effect obtained.

An author must have the spectator's consent for every action; if not, his pleasure and satisfaction are impaired. If the characters do something that does not coincide with the spectator's sense of right and justice, the author must see that the matter is satisfactorily adjusted before the end.

Do not strike a blow of violence unless it be for the sake of virtue, honor and justice.

Do not commit a crime unless it is necessary to carrying out the essential idea of the plot. It is a good rule to see that criminals or evil-doers are properly punished; mete out the punishment only in proportion to their offense. Likewise bestow rewards upon the right-doers in proportion to their good deeds and merits.

Murders and killings are always to be avoided. Deaths do not necessarily make a play strong. A death is not dramatic unless properly employed. The prevention of what appears to be certain death by logical and consistent methods is much more to be desired, and is quite sure to be dramatic. For instance—the story of Damon and Pythias.

It often happens that a dramatic problem can only be solved by the employment of a death. If the villain must be killed, be sure that death is just what he deserves.

A photoplay is artistic and dramatic only in proportion to the human motives employed. Notice that Shakespeare's plays deal principally in the human passions, emotions, etc.; material things are wholly subordinate. Mechanical devices, old stage tricks, accidents and co-incidents are entirely too commonly used. Drama is life—whether played upon the speaking stage or projected upon a screen. Drama is obtained through a clash of human wills—conflict of minds—equal forces opposed.

A well-known photoplay authority says to give your play a soul; I add to that, a heart and spirit as well. There are far too many plays that have just about as much heart and soul as a gasoline engine—mere puppets.

I have found that directors tone up and then tone down a scene. They cut a little off the beginning and a little off the end. It is better to have a trifle too much meat than not enough so that padding is necessary. Only the essential—necessary—points are those used.

Never kick if they manage one of your scenes to suit themselves. They would not make changes unless necessary. They know their business. If they buy your script it is their property to cut up, turn upside down, inside out, if they wish.

An author's success depends entirely upon his own ability, his experience and knowledge of human nature. The more of these, the greater his versatility and capacity to write interestingly.

Have all the trouble you will in your play, but follow George Cohan's advice and "Always Leave Them Laughing When You Say Goodbye." "Laughing" does not necessarily mean grinning from ear to ear, but having a sense of mental satisfaction. If you must have sorrow and woe try to be cheerful about it.

Book Plays.

We hope that it really isn't necessary to warn any of the readers of this department against using some book for inspiration, but if it is we would remind that the publishers are now commencing to take an interest in the picture feature of the publishing business. Several of them are watching the production end closely and one or two are looking for a chance to mulct some manufacturer. If you can't think up your own ideas, do not try to write.

Chicago Writers.

Chicago writers who desire to "talk shop" should communicate, by letter only, with Marc E. Jones, 4400 Lake Avenue. Mr. Jones has formed the first regular circle and will be glad to welcome those who can show sales.

Inquiries.

NOTE—Replies cannot be sent by mail. State name of character. Do not ask for "leads" or "that man." Addresses cannot be given here, but a list of studio addresses will be sent for a stamped and self-addressed envelope. Only questions of general interest will be answered. Replies cannot be repeated.

H.T.B.—The player you ask about seems to be with Thanhouser. If you want his name mentioned, ask the advertising department. Looks a little like press work.

BROWN BETTY—"Two Females" will have to wait until some male suggests a photoplay circle in Boston. The male is advised that two females await him with anxiety. Send your address if you are on the level.

J. A. A.—Yale Boss is with Edison. A stamped and addressed envelope will give you the Edison studio address.

MRS. L. L.—Address is in the advertising pages each week. Just Los Angeles will reach.

M. J.—A film exchange may not release a subject ahead of date without getting into trouble if it is found out. Please note that we publish from New York. Address here.

MILLIE—See answer to Betty. Looks more than ever as though you were kidding this staid department. Presume you are the other "female." Yes?

ANNER—Miss Sweet was the Alice in "A Temporary Truce." Miss Dorothy Bernard had the other parts. Do not know where Miss Reva Greenwood is. Will she please find herself.

J. M. P.—Victor does not supply us with casts. C. G. P. C. cannot be arrived at. A foreign film. Casts are not received here. "A Soldier's Honor" was released by the old Bison, June 15, 1912.

D. F. D.—We do not place the person you mention.

J. H. H.—Do not ask foolish questions or those for which you have the answer. It doesn't matter whose baby Miss Pickford used. We opine it is not her own. For addresses, see the advertising pages. If you cannot find it there, send for list of addresses as offered above.

COPE—We do not list directors. In "A Sawmill Hazard" Earle Foxe was the son.

VINCENNES—Miss Dorothy Gish was the girl in "My Hero." Do not know about Mr. Bushman. Read the paper.

H. C. T.—Only Owen Moore relative we know is Tom Moore, of Kalem. Do not place the second inquiry. American has a couple of companies.

H. M. J.—Every week we offer addresses for a return envelope. Read above. Never mind about Mr. Costello's wife. James Morrison was the country boy in "Following His Star." Why improve on the Vitagraph title? They called it "The," not "Her Picture Idol." Mrs. Clara Kimball Young was the foolish girl.

L. D.—If Mr. Coolidge advertises that he wants only synopses, why not take his word for it? He knows what he wants. Send him only that.

M. L. S.—Owen Moore is not with the Biograph. Walter C. Miller was the graduate physician in "A Cry for Help."

M. S.—Write the various companies regarding the players you want, or send a stamped and addressed envelope for the address of a concern that deals in such things. We know nothing about the player you ask for, other than that he is not where he was.

MEXICO—"Technique of the Photoplay" may be had of the publishers of this paper for one dollar a copy.

W. E. W.—We do not know the Kinemacolor plans for Baltimore. Jack Dillon was the groceryman in "The Telephone Girl and the Lady." Dell Henderson was the divorced husband in "The Divorcee." The Identifier does not know second victim. We don't know why the Nestor had their studio in Baltimore two years ago. Ask them. We won't.

R. C. M.—Your questions have been answered.

R. S.—Charles Arthur and Miss Ethel Clayton were Charley and Ethel in "The Last Rose of Summer." Get a second guess in as to that Majestic title. Same thing with the Selig. We go by titles, not by hunches on what the title should be. Miss Beverly Bayne does not play in the Anderson section. We do not know Miss Sankey.

L. L.—Sorry, but we cannot look up that formula. "Last year" is too vague. Look in the advertising section for cameras.

MARTHA—Leave off the C. P. That belongs to our friend Flossie. The Kay Bee Identifier—and we have a Kay-Bee identifier—says that Miss Ethel Grandin was the leading woman in "The Law of the West," and Francis Ford the lover who joined the Indian tribe. The father seems to be J. B. Sherry, though he did a cowardly hide-out behind a set of whiskers.

A. L.—The paper is too thin. Why worry about a two-cent stamp in making a $20 or $30 sale? Is that business? It costs us two cents just to mail the heavy return envelope we use. That's business.

C. W. D.—Miss Lawrence is still in pictures. Very still. She is not working. We do not get Mr. Conway.

RICHARD ROE—We have named Three Friends. Miss Alice Joyce was Betsey and Logan Paul G. W. in "The Flag of Freedom." Mr. Linn's films are not licensed, but "otherwise."

A. M. N.—The Thanhauser Kidlet is Helen Bagley, and she is not Mr. Benham's daughter. NO!

Projection Department

Results.

WHILE the result of the postcard vote was not large enough to be effective, still, as soon as I called the attention of the Vitagraph Company to the favorable votes sent in, Mr. Smith of that company assured me that Vitagraph split reels would in future have four feet of blank film, or tailpiece, inserted between the end of the first subject and the title of the next. No doubt others will follow suit. But, to make such a matter really effective by its impressiveness there should have been not less than 5,000 postcards sent in.

California Law.

Section 4 deals with moving picture equipment, and inasmuch as it contains nothing which could be justly criticised it need not be printed. I am glad to see that it prohibits the use of anything less than a No. 6 B and S gauge wire for projection circuits. Clause 5 reads as follows:

5. Electric Wiring.

> a. All wiring, apparatus, etc., not specifically covered by special rules herein given must conform to the standard rules and requirements of the National Electrical Code. Requirements for auditorium, stage lighting and other appliances will be found in Section 38 of the "Code."
> b. All wiring inside of operating room for whatever purpose must be in approved metal conduit, exposed ends of conduits to be equipped with approved terminal fittings. Wires from switch to rheostat, rheostat to lamp, and switch to lamp must be asbestos covered, stranded wire of not less than No. 6 B. & S. gauge, and connections in lamp and at switch and rheostat must be provided with approved lugs. Wires for arc lamps used as a part of moving picture machine must not be less than No. 6 B. & S. gauge for each arc, and if more than one machine is within the operating room, each arc will be considered as requiring 45 amperes. There must be a double pole fusible cut-out where connection is made to main supply wires. There must also be a double pole fusible cut-out and switch in the operating room, so that each machine may be entirely disconnected from the circuit when not in use.
> c. No ordinary pendant flexible cord will be permitted within the operating room.
> d. Not more than one light for each machine and one for each rewinding shelf shall be installed. For drop lights only metallic-armored cable or portable cord shall be used. Each lamp must be provided with a guard.
> e. No fuses, except for lights in operating room and machine arc lamps, shall be placed within the operating room.
> f. If house lights are controlled from within the operating room, an additional emergency control must be provided, so that house may be lighted from outside the operating room near main entrance to theater.

In addition to the foregoing, suggestion is made that buckets of sand or approved chemical extinguishers be kept in the operating room; also provision is made for a 12-inch vent pipe in the operating room ceiling, but there seems to be no provision requiring it to be carried through to the open roof, or to the open air, or any limitation as to the material from which it may be made, or its proper fireproofing, all of which is bad. In addition to this a pipe 12 inches in diameter is only about half large enough. For the benefit of the California authorities, let me inform them that the maximum capacity of moving picture operating room transformers (economizers, inductors, etc.) is 60 amperes—not 45. But inasmuch as the wires from the transformer to the projection lamp are ordinarily asbestos covered, the 45 ampere provision will serve. Clause C stipulates that no ordinary pendant flexible cord will be permitted within the operating room, while Clause D says that for all drop lights metallic-armored cable or portable cord shall be used. This I do not regard as at all necessary. High class flexible cord is plenty good enough for operating room use, and is much easier to handle, but, in any event, a metallic-armored cable should not be required, as it is unnecessary and a nuisance to the operator. So far as I am able to see there is no provision for the protection of fuses—that is to say, no cabinet or anything of that sort is required—and this, in my judgment, is not good. Only link fuses should be allowed on the operating circuit, and these fuses should be properly protected by a metal cabinet. This is the New York requirement, and it is a good one. With a proper cabinet there is no reason why other fuses cannot be located in the operating room, though elsewhere is perhaps preferable if only one man is employed in the operating room.

On the whole, the California Underwriters' rules leave very much to be desired; yet, taken as a whole, they are distinctly better than some of the efforts emanating from other places.

Light Trouble.

St. Louis, Mo., sets forth his troubles as follows:

> Am running a new Edison Model B, using a 25 to 40-ampere rheostat, projecting a 12-foot picture at 40 feet. Have 60-ampere cartridge fuses. When I draw about 25 amperes get a very good light, but the carbons talk pretty loudly. When pulling about 28 amperes I get better light, but it is not steady. It dies down for a minute or two and then comes up again, and keeps doing it all the time; also the carbons hum so loudly as to be almost unbearable. When I attempt to draw 30 amperes the fuses blow. Have tried different brands of fuses and different makes of carbons, but without result, except that some makes of carbon are not quite so noisy. The light from 28 amperes is not what it should be.

Provided you have stated the proposition correctly, St. Louis, you have a heavy ground or current leakage (partial short circuit) somewhere. You cannot blow 60-ampere fuses with 30 amperes; hence more than 30 amperes is going somewhere. Test your lamp and lines carefully (see page 106, new handbook) for grounds, also for current leakage. As to the light dying down and coming up, that might be caused by overload of feeders, the light (voltage) coming up when something, maybe an elevator motor in some building, is shut off. It also might be due to small wires in your own house, or to poor connections, or to faulty set of your carbons. Feel your wires and lampheads after a five-minute run. If they have warmed up much they are either too small or too old. In either event put in new ones. Take apart all connections, especially at lamp and rheostat; clean them thoroughly by scraping with a knife or polishing with emery cloth or sand-paper, tightening up solidly afterward. I cannot offer you further advice. Your rheostat could not let through enough current to blow 60-ampere fuses without getting red hot, and you have not said it does anything of that kind. The proposition, as you state it, is a puzzling one. You must be using a. c., and if so need not expect good results from less than 35 amperes.

Failed on Salt Brine.

Mr. Joe Jenkins, La Grange, Ga., writes as follows:

> Am using 110-volt, 60-cycle current, projecting a 12-foot picture at 70 feet, using Power's "Six" machine and a Ft. Wayne compensarc, both of which I find to be excellent. Have made several trials of the salt brine stunt and fell down on it every time. May have been my fault, however. Tried different solutions, with same results, viz.: Very good light at first; then it became dim. Do you think this due to carbons not being dry enough? Dried them three days on a stove. Shall try again, and will get it before I quit. Everything is O. K. in my operating room and have no trouble at all. Projection is good, I think, for a town of this size. But why should we not have good projection in small towns as well as in cities? Am using three reels of licensed, and desire to say a good word for our exchange. They sure do send out reels in good condition. If all exchanges would keep their films in as excellent shape as does the General Film Company of Atlanta, operators would have far less trouble. Tried some of that graphite on my lamp and it works fine. Apply when lamp is hot.

I am especially well pleased to hear this good report of the Atlanta exchange. Wish more of that kind could be had. Presume you refer to the bicycle chain stick graphite mentioned in the department recently. While it is much better than nothing, or than oil, still dry graphite, used as directed on pages 198 and 199 of the handbook is better, since the grease in stick graphite (tallow) will leave a residue when used as liberally as it is likely to be when applied to a hot lamp. There are two reasons why we do not expect as great excellence in projection in small towns as in cities, viz.: Usually the small town manager either cannot, or thinks he cannot, afford anything but comparatively old films, and this means rain marks, chunks cut out and kindred evils; also the small town operator has not the opportunities to learn enjoyed by his city brother, but he can, by studying this department and the handbook, go far toward perfecting his work if he has the will to study, as Brother Jenkins seems to have. Due in great measure to the two above named factors, small town projection is improving rapidly, which gives added enjoyment to hundreds of thousands of people every day—a thing we may all be proud of. Yes, your carbons were plenty dry, I think. Cannot say what the cause of your failure may have been.

Editor Goes Visiting.

The Editor has received a most courteous invitation to attend the ball, to be held by Operator's Union No. 86, Apollo Hall, Springfield, Mass., Wednesday eve, Jan. 29. He has concluded to accept and will trip the light (light is good, he weighs 210 pounds), fantastic with the Springfield boys on the eve of that day; also he will do what he would like to do with every city and town, viz.: meet and become personally acquainted with the men.

Motor Drive.

Mr. Frank Harris, Rock Hill, S. C., writes:

> Enclosed find M. O. for $2.50 for handbook. Can you inform me as to where I may obtain the Chambless motor drive? Have been open about five weeks and doing good business. Project a 12-foot picture at 55 feet, using Power's "Five." Get excellent > results. Have brown corners in stereo light, which am unable to remedy. If I move lamp close enough to condensers to clear the stereo field, when I pull over to m. p. the spot is about 4 inches in diameter. I have a shutter about completed which can be adjusted backward or forward while in motion. Would this be worth patenting? Will send the model if you wish to examine it.

Your stereo trouble probably is due to the fact that you are using a "quarter size" stereo lens of very much longer focal length than your m. p. lens. A "half size" lens would help matters. Tell me exact width of both m. p. and stereo picture and I can then advise you intelligently. While I could not say without examining the device, still, as a general proposition, I would not consider such a thing as a very promising investment, taking into consideration the cost of a patent and the fact that unless it be of the kind called "basic" a patent is very largely a bluff anyhow. Machine manufacturers usually are slow to purchase outside ideas, even though good. They prefer to do their own inventing. You might make money with such a shutter, but—??? I know the chances against it better than you do. If I gave out addresses of those having goods to sell the advertising department would get after me with a tomahawk. That is exactly what the advertising columns are for.

An Invitation.

Spokane, Wash., sends a beautifully gotten up menu of a banquet given by the managers of the Rex, Arcade, Clem and Casino Theaters, to which not only the local film world notables, but the employes as well, were invited. The Mayor, several City Councilmen and Mr. Albert Dorris of the Vitagraph company were among the guests. There were 118 employes at the tables, and in the course of the peeches Spokane operators were accorded much praise for the excellence of their work. Spokane winds up with:

> And now just a few words in general. Conditions here are very good. Only two open shop houses, and one of these has asked for two union men January 1st. We take great interest in the M. P. World, and, of course, particularly the Department. We here in Spokane would very much like to have you pay us a visit on your way to the convention in Seattle next year. Come out and see us and we will show you that Local 185 knows how to entertain its friends and do it right. Attached menu is sent with compliments of the Rex Theater and Local 185.

Sorry, boys, but nothing doing in the Seattle line. It's too far away, and I've too much to do. You bet I would enjoy meeting you all, and we would have one good time, but—too far off, brothers. The menu is evidence that you did things in style. Such acts on the part of theater managers create good feeling, which reacts beneficially to all concerned. Those out-of-focus biscuits and Vitagraphed potatoes must have been classy. Hope you did not get intoxicated on that Power's "Six" Cafe Noir.

Good Letter.

Messrs. Shields & Van Buren, Crescent Theater, Los Banos, Cal., contribute the following interesting letter:

> Since we learned there was such a publication as the M. P. World we have been subscribers, and expect to be as long as we are connected with the business. I always look at the Projection Department, and never miss a word. I mark those things which seem of particular interest to us, and which we believe we can put into practice. In reading your comments on projection I see you go after the proposition just as I do when I am at the crank of our machine, viz.: For all there is in it. Like yourself, I am not interested in reel-changing speed contests, but in the light and the details which go to bring out the best possible results on the screen, and these details are not the same for all reels, by any means. With the right kind of man in the operating room, even the faulty film may be made to show up well, but with the wrong man the perfect film will show up but poorly. Referring to reel-changing speed contests, I must relate an incident which was the direct result of an operator attempting to demonstrate his rapid changing ability. The regular man being ill, he called in this operator (who thinks he can't be beat) as substitute. About the first time it was necessary to change carbons he jerked out the lower reel and laid it on the floor at one end of the room, put in an empty reel and threaded like wildfire. He then yanked out the hot carbon butts and, not taking time to deposit them in the water pail provided, dropped them on the floor. One rolled over, snuggled up against the film, and !"?;'&$$$$$$$$$—the dollar signs standing for what the house lost. My greatest regret is that we did not have such a publication as the M. P. World at hand when we first began the business. It would have saved us hundreds of dollars. Why? Because we were alone here, and had everything to learn. Our troubles would fill several good-sized volumes. We were compelled to use gas for a year, but fortunately were advised to buy tank gas, which we did, and through experience learned to produce illumination which astonished many people, though, of course, not up to electric results. We then got a. c. in our little city, and had more things to learn, and more troubles. But we mastered them, and finally got to the point where our projection equaled (as to illumination) that of other towns using d. c. But still we were not satisfied, and finally installed a mercury arc rectifier, and though at first, due to lack of knowledge of the device, we had trouble, we now have a curtain illumination second to none. We have a really wonderful picture, though this is not altogether due to the light, the screen coming in for some credit. I will explain why if this escapes the waste basket. Our little town is well back in the country, and we do not use very late films, but so long as they are in good condition and our people have not seen them they answer as well as newer service. We had opposition at one time, but—we are here, and they are gone, which is all we need say. Have also received some valuable hints from the "Advertising for Exhibitors" department.

Now, here are men after my own heart. They are satisfied with nothing but the best, and don't mind the trouble necessary to secure excellence. There is no royal road to excellence. It is all hard work. I have discovered that fact by about thirty years of strenuous experience. Let us hear about that screen, gentlemen.

Trouble Located.

Redondo Beach, Cal., sends in the following:

> Regarding your reply to my inquiry in relation to "Lens Trouble," page 1295, December 28th issue, I had no desire to capture your goat. The fact is it got mine; also several other picture men lost theirs over this same trouble. But the problem has been solved, and I want credit to go where it belongs, viz.: to Mr. E. H. Amet, one of the pioneer picture men of this country. He was in the house recently, and I put the matter up to him. He explained it in scientific terms, but in plain language this was his idea: "The picture," said he, "is not really out of focus at all. The out-of-focus effect on one side is due to reflection of light rays on the silver coating, and to the fact that your screen is concave. This, however, is not due to the actual projection light, but to light from the lens falling outside the actual picture." To prove this assertion, which doubtless sounds "fishy," he cut a ¾-inch hole in a cardboard, held the same in front of the lens, and presto! the picture was sharp as a die all over. Every line was sharp and distinct. Now, whether or not this will appeal to your sense of reason I cannot say, but that is the fact. I later secured an "Iris" diaphragm (taken from an old camera) and attached it to front of projection lens. This allows of the opening being adjusted to suit the picture, since, while I do not know the reason for it, I find it to be a fact that different films require different size openings in the diaphragm for best results, varying from ⅝ to ¾ inch. If this sounds to you like buncombe you are at liberty to forget it; otherwise pass it along.

It is a well-known fact, and you will find it has been set forth by the editor in this department long since, that stopping down the lens with a diaphragm will frequently clear up an out-of-focus effect. But your trouble was of such nature that it did not occur to me that it would be cleared up thus. The reason why stopping down will sharpen the focus is that the outer edge of any lens is its weakest point, and if there is any tendency to spherical aberration it will be at the edges of the lens. Therefore cutting out the marginal rays is often of benefit. But stopping down to ⅝ is something else again. I shall try that and watch the effect on illumination. As to light rays from the lens falling outside the picture—well, I would have to be shown that particular thing, I guess. Still, possibly there are peculiarities in your own screen which might cause that effect in another way—by double reflection. Anyhow, we are glad your trouble is solved, and shall experiment with that diaphragm matter. It may be of very distinct value in more ways than one.

Reel Spring is Fine.

Alliance, Ohio, likes the reel spring illustrated in December 28th issue. He says:

> I have tried out the brother's patent reel spring, having four reels equipped with same, and it is a fine thing, all right. I am running two Power's "Sixes," one motor driven. Have an 8 x 16-foot operating room, with all-iron work bench and everything else necessary. Project a 16-foot picture at 76 feet on a mirror screen. Have a fine picture, excellent light and practically no flicker. Set my lamp straight up and down, with carbons angling out enough so that a silver ten cent piece may be slipped half way back between the new points when their back edges are touching. Am member of I. A. T. S. E., L. U. No. 189.

Sorry, brother, but I cannot recommend your method of carbon setting. You will get better results, take it day in and day out, using the set illustrated in Fig. 101, page 211 of the handbook. You are using what is known as the "jackknife set," which has been very generally abandoned by operators. You get a greater c. p. at times, but it is impossible to properly control the crater.

His Debut.

Vancouver, B. C., offers explanation of Redondo Beach's trouble. He writes as follows:

> This being my first appearance before the footlights of our department, I trust my remarks may be of value to someone. I notice many complaints of jumping film. If the machine is at fault every film will jump. There will be no exceptions. If some films run smoothly, without jump or vibration, while others jump, then the fault lies in the film, and not in the machine. Pull down your framer until the dividing line of the pictures is visible, as well as a little strip of the next picture. If the line is steady and the picture jumps, then the trouble is due to camera fault. The camera was not perfectly rigid. But if the dividing line also jumps, then it is due to one of the following things, viz.: Loose mechanism of the camera, uneven sprocket holes, usually caused by using films when too green or by operators who have their tension springs too tight, causing abrading and cutting, or even slight tearing of the sprocket holes. Also the intermittent sprocket may be dirty, or the intermittent movement loose, or the intermittent sprocket shaft may be bent, or, if it be a Power's "Six," one or more of the geneva pins may be bent or badly worn on one side. Managers often blame operators for jumping pictures, when the fault is entirely beyond their control, being in the films. Therefore I have attempted to set the above forth in explanation, to the end that the brothers be able to locate the exact cause, and either remedy it or else show the manager where it lies. Redondo Beach, Cal., is puzzled over the slightly out-of-focus streak on his screen (page > 1295, December 28th issue). If he will make a close examination he will find a ray of light is being reflected on this particular portion of his screen. It may emanate from the operating room or elsewhere. Were the fault due to his lens the spot would be circular, not perpendicular. And now one thing more and I am done. While the Photoplaywright Department is handing out lemons to the correspondence schools, what about the cheap operator's "schools" which are turning out "operators" by the score? Crank turners they are, who scarcely know a camshaft from a pair of carbon pliers. All the purpose they serve is to keep salaries down and compel the real operator to compete with the imitation. In closing I wish to express my best wishes to the World, which has done so much to perfect projection.

I am sorry that you requested the suppression of your name, brother. Yours is indeed an excellent letter, for which you should have credit. You have not named all the reasons for jumping film (not enough tension, for instance), but those reasons you have given are correct. Your solution of the Redondo trouble is, as you will note, correct, and is of distinct credit to you. By the way, if the picture jumps I want to take this opportunity, now that you mention it, to again impress upon operators the vital necessity of keeping the face (rim) of their intermittent sprocket perfectly clean. Dirt and gum collect on the intermittent sprocket face, and it should be cleaned off immediately or the picture will most likely not be steady. The schools for operators are, for the most part, I am sorry to say, fakes. They ought to be put out of business. Unions should themselves maintain an instruction department for their own members and apprentices. Come again, brother.

Union Label.

Rock Island, Ill., encloses $2.50 for handbook, and writes:

> Would not be without the new book for twice its price. As for the M. P. World, I have a stack of 'em three feet high. Have secured many valuable pointers from the Projection Department. You are in error. Not all I. B. E. W. locals are in the A. F. of L. There are two I. B. E. W. factions, known as the "Murphy" and the "McAully" factions, the latter being affiliated with the A. F. of L. Very likely the differences will be settled soon. I carry an I. B. E. W. card and have run up against both. Hays, Kas. (page 46, January 4th issue), must have an overload. His economizer must deliver more than 60. Better test. His fuse block is probably capped. Better get a new block and be certain it is properly insulated. Pull out the No. 8 and put in No. 5. In some letters operators beg to be taken into the I. A. Here they beg to be left out—afraid of the examination. Very old heads in the business here. Davenport, Ia., Moline and Rock Island, Ill., all work under same charter, being practically one city. The vaude. and legit. houses are all I. A. T. S. E.; also some of the deaf and dumb grinds are. We are trying to get them all, but it is like pulling teeth.

I was unaware of the I. B. E. W. scrap. Such things usually are due to the personal ambition of a few men, and those few men who are willing to subserve the interests of the body to their own ends ought to be kicked out of the ranks of labor. Hardly think your solution of Hays' trouble is correct, though your advice about the wire is good. There is another solution, just received, which appeals to me as not only ingenious but correct. "Deaf and dumb grinds" is distinctly good. Where did you get it? Let me advise the boys to get into the organization. It is foolish to stay out.

Condenser Breakage.

Avon, Ill., writes asking about condenser breakage. This question has already been treated time and again in the department. Inasmuch as it is covered in the handbook, we do not feel like going over the subject again in the department—at least not now. I therefore refer Avon to page 364 of the handbook. Meanwhile clean out the hood of your lamphouse thoroughly and keep the ventilation open and free.

Intermittent and Shutter Action.

Fort Worth, Texas, dons the war bonnet as follows:

> Recently a correspondent stated he had for years picked his machine with an eye to the intermittent speed. Then why did he cause four ——— projectors to be purchased in place of four ——— machines, and order half a hundred dollars' worth of parts for the latter to get them ousted? The Fort Worth operator with whom he argued was, in my opinion, right, as I also argued with him. If a shutter cuts 50 per cent. of the light it does that, no matter how fast the intermittent movement may be. [But if the movement were slower the shutter would have to cut more than 50 per cent., and if faster it could cut less than 50.—Ed.] If one were using 50 amperes and his shutter cut 50 per cent., then he would have just 25 effective amperes. The narrowest width of the aperture is 11/16 of an inch; therefore the double shutter, acting like scissors, must travel but 11/32 to close the aperture, while the single cone shutter must travel 22/32 to close. But with the flat shutter of any type the travel must be about 1⅛ inches to close, due to the fact that it travels corner to corner of the opening. Thus you will readily see that the double cone shutter saves considerably in travel as against the single cone shutter, and quite largely as against ordinary flat shutters. Figure it out. All this is of much importance.

The brother is correct in his figures, but this is one case where figures, to a certain extent, lie. Where he falls down is in the fact that with the ordinary flat inside shutter it is not necessary to the elimination of travel ghost that the shutter travel all that corner-to-corner distance. The shutter may lack almost 1/3 of closing the aperture when the film starts moving, and may open just a trifle before the film stops. But with the double cone shutter this is not true. The opening is then in the center of the aperture and the shutter must close absolutely before the film starts, and must not open the least bit until it stops. There is gain, possibly, in the single cone shutter. I never traced that matter out. Again, Fort Worth, the outside shutter does not deal with the aperture, but with the light ray itself after it has left the lens. But, much as I would like to discuss these matters in their finer details, I have neither the time nor space just now. I am surprised if the brother you name did as you say, after what he wrote me.

Hays, Kansas, Another Explanation.

Manhattan, Kas., sends in the following suggestion as to Hays, Kas. (page 46, January 4th issue), trouble:

> Note Hays, Kas., has trouble with fuses. Possibly I may suggest a remedy in this particular case, having been up against the same thing recently. Believe he will find his trouble lies in the fact that his fuses are on the wrong side of the economizer. I may be wrong, but here are my reasons: Were the fuses on the line side they would be carrying line voltage (110 or 120 probably) and low amperage. On the other hand, on the lamp side there will be but about 40 volts, and a possibility of 60 amperes or a little more. Also I believe the fact that the fuses are the smallest carrying element in the line has something to do with their heating. Now, my guess is that the high amperage and low voltage raises cain with fuses. Anyhow, I know they won't heat on the other side of the economizer. Another bad point about Hays' wiring is the fact that the economizer is "alive" all the time, whether the operating switch is open or closed.

Would advise you to purchase the Handbook at once, Manhattan, and pay particular attention to fuses, pages 56 to 64, inclusive. Voltage, viewed merely as voltage, has no effect whatever in heating a fuse. Any fuse could be charged at 10,000,000 volts, were it possible to raise that pressure. It is quantity (amperage, or coulombs) flowing which heats. But Hays' fuses did not appear to be heated by current flow. It was a peculiar case, and I believe is answered correctly by another brother in the next letter. You are quite right about the wiring, though No. 6 will answer very well.

Correct and Ingenious.

Mr. W. H. Greene, Cuero, Texas, contributes the following explanation of Hays, Kas. (January 4th issue), fuse troubles:

> Note a brother in Hays, Kas., has peculiar fuse trouble. Am confident the difficulty does not lie in the fuse itself. From his letter I take it he is using cartridge fuses. He does not say which fuse is giving the trouble, but that is immaterial, since it may occur in either. I think he will find the heat does not come from excessive amperage, but from a loose connection. This may be in either one of two places, or both. The wires may not make good electrical contact, by reason of looseness or from other cause, with the fuse block binding posts. This might heat the entire block. Again, the fuses themselves may not fit tightly in one or both of their contacts. This trouble, if my diagnosis of the case is right, may be remedied by correcting the fault. I would also advise the use of a larger block.

Now, there you are. It did not occur to me, obvious as it is, that such a trouble as Hays described (paper on fuses charring before fuse blew) would be caused by heating through poor electrical contact. But that is exactly what would cause that kind of trouble, if anything would. I congratulate you on having put one over on the editor this time, Brother Greene.

Far Too Late.

By a local clipping we see that Mr. Jacob Herman, a Houghton, Mich., operator, has applied for patent on a projection machine shutter having two blades, one being perforated with small holes, this latter being his patent claim. For Mr. Herman's benefit let us inform him that a perforated shutter blade was used years ago, and is still in use in one of the leading projection machines. As an operator-inventor Mr. Herman is seemingly far behind the times.

Film Mender.

Elmhurst, L. I., sends sample of a film mender made from thin copper, designed to be fastened to a wooden block. The device is cleverly made, but to intelligently describe the method of its making would be very difficult. Anyhow, such things can be bought for a trifle, so that it is hardly worth while. We are nevertheless obliged to Elmhurst for the trouble he has taken.

Supper Hour Question.

Brooklyn, N. Y., asks a pertinent question, as follows:

> Regarding Brooklyn's assertion (page 156, January 11th issue) that an operator who works supper hours ought to be ashamed of himself, can you advise any other course of action for a man who has a family dependent upon him, in a city literally flooded with operators, competent and otherwise, and who has already lost three positions through refusal to work during supper hours? The Board of Health of this city ought to be ashamed, if anybody ought. [How about managers requiring it?—Ed.] And Local No. 35, I. A. T. S. E., has something to be ashamed of, too, for they have at least one of their members working supper hour in Brooklyn. I was recently a member of that body, but when I attempted to enforce the union rules on my employers I got no support. If the executives of such a body had the interest and welfare of its members at heart, then this state of affairs could easily be remedied.

You perhaps did not go about matters in the right way. A strong, compact organization is absolutely the only hope you can have of remedying conditions such as these. But there are ways and methods for doing everything. You should have appeared at a meeting of the union, I think, and secured action looking to a concerted demand being made on all Brooklyn managers at one time. I have not had time to attend union meetings lately, or to give much attention to union matters, but I shall try and get to the next meeting and present this matter in proper form and see what can be done. I am sorry you did not supply your address. I would have liked to have called on you personally. Unfortunately a factional fight is now in progress here in New York, which tends to hold everything back, at least to some extent.

Out of Focus Effect on Drop.

San Francisco, Cal., writes expressing his belief that I was in error in answering Canton, Pa. (page 1188, December 21st issue). He says:

> On a short throw, nine feet of drop would enlarge the picture at the bottom, but I cannot see how it would affect the focus, which is a definite relation between the picture to be projected and the objective lens. Therefore if in focus it will be in focus whether the throw be 10 feet or 100. I write to the end that, if you have made a mistake, as we all do, you may correct it, whereas if I am myself in error you can explain where and why. Am using moving pictures in my work and find them very helpful.

The writer is a minister and evidently an up-to-date one. Would suggest to him that if he has found the old Handbook of such value he would find the new one of ten times greater worth. He is in error in supposing the focus to be only a relation between the lens and aperture. It is a relation between the lens, aperture and screen. If he has a picture in sharp focus at 50 feet and moves the screen ten feet nearer or farther away he will have to also alter the distance between his lens and aperture, which is called "focusing." The reason why a drop has tendency to produce out-of-focus effect is that the bottom of the screen is under those conditions further from the lens than its top. This matter is dealt with on pages 331 and 332 of the Handbook.

English Operators Excited.

The whole attention of the National Association of Cinematograph Operators is now centered on a bill before the House of Commons, designed to amend the Act of 1909. The bill demands that no one be allowed to operate at public entertainments (theaters, etc.) until he has first convinced an examining board as to his ability. If he be passed by the Board there will be a fee to pay and a certificate will be issued. The minimum age limit is given as 21 years, though those satisfying the Board they are 18 years of age, and have operated more than one year previous to the passing of the new law, will be certified. Should the bill pass and become law, the operator will be on a level with the motor driver and have all his little errors, suspensions, endorsements and cancellations registered officially on his license. I am not, as yet, informed as to what view the National Association of Cinematograph Operators has taken of the bill.

Condenser Focal Lengths.

Philadelphia, Pa., orders a Handbook and writes as follows:

> I hope soon to have something of value to the Department, from which I have gained much. Can you tell me the proper condensers to use with different throws. I am obliged to throw different distances, from 60 to 130 ft., using both M. P. and stereo. We have our own films, some of which become very hard and brittle. Can you give me a good formula for the eare of them?

Your last query was answered in full in the Department just a week or two ago. You have doubtless read it, therefore I will not repeat. As to condensers, it is not the throw alone, but the throw and size of picture—in other words, the focal length of the objective lens, which governs. All that can be said on that subject will be found on pages 363 and 364 of the Handbook, which you now have. No two cases seem to work exactly alike in this respect, due, no doubt, to the imperfection of cheap condenser lenses.

Rewinding Idea.

Mr. F. R. Culbert, Waterbury, Conn., formerly of Roxbury, Mass., writes:

> Well, I am now up in this part of the world. Do you remember the "Back Row Romance," July 27, 1912 issue? I was the benedict, and Cupid still wears the smile that won't come off. Have been in the business (operating) for five years out still am learning, from brother operators, from the Department and from you. An excellent scheme to clean a machine head is to fill up a gasoline blow torch with gasoline, pump it up and open without lighting. It will then spray gasoline and the mechanism may be thus washed off, turning the crank a few times during the operation. But the machine must be oiled with good oil at once afterward, since gasoline washes everything out clean and there may be binding if left to dry without oiling. Have been thinking of a rewinding scheme, thus: place two extra machine magazines under the machine table, just below the lower magazine and about 5 inches apart. Place reel of film in one, empty reel in other, and thread. Belt the one containing empty reel to lower magazine takeup shaft, using extra pulley, and film will be rewound as you run the machine.

Glad Cupid still sticks around. May it ever be thus. Here in New York he's a fickle little runt, though, or has that reputation, at least. Yes, your rewinding scheme would work all right, but it would add to the pull of the machine, therefore probably would not be popular, unless a motor was doing the pulling, in which case there would be no need of it since there would be time for rewinding. The main objection would be that, should anything go wrong with the rewinding it might stop the machine. Brother Culbert is now President of Local Union Aux. No. 1, of which S. St. John is Vice-President and Chas. Pesimo secretary-Treasurer.

Bausch & Lomb Guilty?

Atlantic City, N. J., submits the following:

> Am one of the Old Timers and have read The World ever since it first came out. Note your inquiry (Dec. 7, 1912 issue) about water-cooled condensers. Have used them but did not like them. They are made by the Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., Rochester, N. Y. These lenses are described in one of their catalogs. And now I will tell you of this City by the Sea. Projection here is only fair, because operators' salaries are too low to encourage excellence. There are new houses going up, but they are looking for cheap machines and cheap operators. The lowest paid man here is $7.00 per week, 2 P. M. to 11 P. M. Isn't that about the limit?

Atlantic City writes much more, setting forth a truly deplorable state of affairs, if what he says is correct. I do not feel like publishing all of it without corroborative evidence. For instance, the statement is made that since the license law, which went into effect the first of the year, the helpers have been licensed and the managers, not satisfied with already low salaries, are laying off competent operators and turning the projectors over to the helpers. It does not seem possible managers would be so foolish. I would like to hear more from the City of the Great Board Walk.

From St. Paul.

Mr. H. J. Gregg, St. Paul, Minn., writes thusly:

> Last time I wrote from Kansas City. Was with the Laemmle Film Service then. I suppose were I placed where you are I would go bugs entirely. Doubtless you receive letters we never see (you bet I do, and some of 'em are corkers, too.—Ed.), so that we cannot properly weigh matters. You say it is quite possible to project as good a picture with motor drive as when cranking. That "possible" covers a lot of ground. You well know, Friend R., that anyone working around machinery, particularly if there be danger of any kind connected with its operation, resolves to be mighty careful. But you also know that in nine cases out of ten that resolve is soon broken. Now a man who must stick right there, with one hand on the crank, has not nearly so much chance to get careless as when George-the-Motor is doing it, and the operator may be ten feet away reading a paper, as I have seen done. No, the motor drive is very nice, but it's too handy to get careless with them. The way to secure good work is to tie Mr. Operator right there to that crank, where he belongs. Think it over. And now I remove my hat to you, Friend R. I was in Des Moines six or seven years ago and there was some talk of affiliating with the I. B. E. W. at that time, but nothing came of it. That bunch down there always were a little batty (oi, oi—how about this, Des Moines?). The I. A. T. S. E. is the place for the operators, for the simple reason that they can get more real assistance there in time of trouble than anywhere else. And now as to the Brooklyn brother who says a man working supper hour ought to be ashamed. I freely admit that working the supper hour is wrong, but there are nevertheless working conditions which often practically compel it. If he quit perhaps it would be with the full knowledge that another would step right into the job and accept the proposition of working the supper hour. It is up to the Local, and No. 35 ought to get real busy. In closing let me say I believe there is a chance for better conditions all over the country.

Now, Des Moines, I guess you'll stand hitched for a spell, huh! Yes, Brother, if you could see all the correspondence you would wonder why I don't bite somebody. Some of the questions sprung on me certainly are the limit and some of the letters would puzzle the best hand-writing expert that ever lived. If you will look back over the Department, St. Paul, you will find that I have always favored hand drive, until such time as some scheme is devised to keep the operator right there at his post. I have even illustrated a scheme of my own, looking to this end, on Page 367 of the Handbook. But the motor drive is coming, whether we like it or not, therefore we must make the best of it. What I said was true. Just as good work can be done with motor drive as when cranking, whether it is likely to be is something else again.

A Good Town.

Mr. L. W. Trick, Secretary Local Union 532, Port Arthur, Texas, writes:

> It is with pleasure that I take advantage of this opportunity to ask for recognition in the Department though I have no troubles to present at this time. The boys of Local 532, I. A. T. S. E. send their regards. We have a splendid local here and doing nicely. Do not think because I am not coming to you with a bundle of questions that I am not receiving my share from the valuable information contained in the Department. I also have a copy of your old Handbook and will order a copy of the new one shortly. I also hope to enter the Department soon with a few valuable ideas. We think we have a pretty nice place; seats 600. We run three reels of pictures, have a three-piece orchestra, and are doing a fine business. I act in the capacity of assistant manager and chief operator. Port Arthur, we think, is about the best little town we know of. Just think of a small town with only 15,000 population supporting four picture shows, three of them running three reels and using orchestras, while one runs five reels and uses a singer sometimes. All are getting ten cents, but there is one thing sure and that is that we are cranks about good projection. I have no objections to you using my name, as I believe it will enable me to become better acquainted, and keep in closer touch with the brothers scattered far and near.

I'm not sure I have your name right, brother, as you were careless in writing the first letter. Port Arthur has the reputation of being a live, hustling, little city. Glad projection is good there. Keep it up. My compliments and a prosperous New Year to Local No. 532 and its individual members. The picture failed to reach me. Pictures, etc., intended for the Projection Department should be so addressed.

"THE GIRL AND THE GAMBLER" (Lubin), Jan. 18.—The benevolent gambler appears again in this picture. He's a square gambler, helps the girl, cures the girl's brother of a weakness for gambling and in the end, after helping the sheriff by holding up an outlaw who has just robbed a mail carrier, becomes acceptable to her father who is now willing to take him for a son-in-law. It was produced by F. J. Grandon and Clara Williams plays the girl; Edgar Jones, the gambler; James Daily, the girl's father; Jack Voshell, her brother. Wallace Clifton is the author.

"THE HIGH COST OF REDUCTION" (Biograph), Jan. 20.—A picture dealing with a couple of stranded actresses and their clever scheme for raising "dough" enough to get back to Broadway. It affords some laughs, but is not very much above commonplace.

"KISSING KATE" (Biograph), Jan. 20.—This farce is on the same reel and the little actress who has the lead in it most surely makes good. Her acting is not wonderful so much as natural and wholly pleasing; she, as far as this picture is concerned, merely plays her own delightful self. It is an amusing, pleasant, clean farce that we take pleasure in commending.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 4."—The topical picture is always a drawing card and this week it is as usual.

"THE NURSE AT MULBERRY BEND" (Kalem), Jan. 18.—A picture of the better kind with human interest, substantial freshness and some good acting. The author, whom we don't know, deserves a good deal of credit. He has provided a good, freshly imagined story and the producer seems to have felt that it was worth taking trouble with, for he has made it pretty affective. Its heroine is a scientific nurse whose charitable and sympathetic nature is contrasted with that of her rich cousin, a rather empty hearted girl. In the end, the nurse gets her cousin's fiance, a desirable young doctor away from her. That this ending can be foreseen a bit too early is the picture's slight, but noticeable defect. Alice Joyce plays the nurse; Tom Moore, the doctor; Leslie Scott, the rich girl; Mrs. La Varnie (a finely drawn old Italian woman), the grandmother of the sick baby; Hazel Neason, the sick baby's mother and James K. Ross, its father. All the adventure that comes to the nurse in her kindly ministration to these Italians is fresh and deeply interesting. We commend it almost entirely; it's a good picture. The photography is first class.

"WHAT A CHANGE OF CLOTHES DID" (Vitagraph), Jan. 20.—The author of this picture, J. W. Ross, doesn't deserve much credit. There is nothing new in it that is at all convincing and some of it is rather ridiculous. Maurice Costello is the producer and plays a rich man who is sought only for his wealth and goes on a fishing trip. A convict knocks him senseless, robs him and leaves him for dead. This escaping convict is made to seem innocent and the rich man marries his sister. Herbert Barry plays the convict and Clara Kimball Young the sister. The photography is fair.

"THOU SHALT NOT KILL" (Vitagraph), Jan. 18.—Some of the scenes in this picture give Julia Swayne Gordon a better chance than she has had, so far as we have noticed, in a long while and it is needless to say that she does some fine work in picturing a mother and also one who will soon be a mother again, as unjustly accused of killing her husband and condemned to die. We are shown who did the murder, the trial and scenes in the prison. When the woman's condition is discovered, the governor commutes the sentence. Meanwhile, the culprit's conscience has been troubling him and he confesses. Hal Reid is both author and producer. Robert Gaillord, Adele de Garde, E. R. Phillips and Logan Paul have parts and do good work. It makes a very fair picture.

"OUR ENEMY THE WASP" (C. G. P. C.), Jan. 17.—The wasp that builds his home in the ground is the interesting subject of this picture which was taken in Europe. It isn't the wasp that is best known to us, the one with the very slim waist; but the offering is of the greatest value none the less. We see the home and are shown much of what goes on there.

"ALONG THE RIVIERA" (C. G. P. C.), Jan. 17.—A hand colored picture with much that is fresh. It gives glimpses of some of the smaller places along the coast that we have not seen before and is a good offering.

"WHAT GEORGE DID" (Essanay), Jan. 17.—A farce in which a smart Alec office boy makes trouble by some conventional tricks; but which in the end, in spite of its rather amateurish situation, good acting makes truly laughable. Eleanor Blanchard, who takes the important role of mother to the girl, can be depended on to make good fun with anything like a chance. "Alkali" Ike (Augustus Carney), is her father. E. H. Calvert is her lover and Beverly Bayne, the girl. Thomas Shirley is the boy.

"THE MOUNTAINEERS" (Edison), Jan. 18.—Bannister Merwin can usually be depended upon to put freshness into almost any situation; has done it in this moonshine whiskey story even. Charles Ogle plays the old man; Gertrude McCoy, his daughter; Augustus Phillips, the revenue officer and William West the itinerant preacher. It was produced in some back woods community and has an interesting atmosphere. The acting is natural and intelligent. Miss McCoy makes a more earnest effort to be sincere in her playing than in several, so it seems, of her pictures lately. The result, in any case is quite pleasing. It makes a good offering.

"A DESPERATE CHANCE" (Kalem), Jan. 18.—A first class railroad melodrama. The scenes are all extremely interesting; nearly all of them were taken on a freight train in motion and the suggestion of speed in the runaway train is more marked than in any picture of its kind we remember. The sense of danger and the thrill are most convincing. Alice Hollister plays the girl with Earle Fox and R. G. Vignola as two railroaders, rivals for her affection. The former wins her; the latter fixes things so that the freight will run away and at a time when it had been ordered to make a siding to let a passenger train pass. The girl takes the desperate chance and side tracks one train just in time to save her lover's train from a catastrophe. It is all very well done indeed and the offering will be liked greatly. The camera work is of high order.

"LEONIE" (Edison), Jan. 17.—Leonie is an artist's model and the picture tells her love story. Mary Fuller plays the character, one that can hardly be called new even to her, with such fresh imagination and understanding that she seems new. The work of this gifted player, who has here a part just suited to her, makes the picture a worthy offering that will be liked. The producer has been careful and discriminating; his back grounds and sets are almost perfect for the story, which he has kept perfectly clear. Bannister Merwin, the author, deserves credit for much, but surely for giving Miss Fuller such a chance. Agustus Phillips plays the artist with his customary integrity and finish. Miriam Nesbitt plays the foil; Mrs. Wallace Erskine, her mother; Mrs. Wm. Bechtel, the landlady and Messrs. H. Beaumont, Geo. Lessey and Walter Edwin plays artists. The photography is of good quality.

"A REVOLUTIONARY ROMANCE" (Selig), Jan. 1.—The best thing about this picture is that it is a true romance; it's the best thing that can be said about any picture of this kind. Bessie Eyton plays the heroine and her work will add to her popularity which is deservedly great. It is her story, but she is ably supported by Thomas Santschi, who plays an American officer, her sweetheart, who is captured as a spy in her house. She saves him and the way she manages to do it makes the story. There are no battle scenes, just a skirmish when the Continentals come just before daylight to the rescue of their comrade from the red coats who are going to hang him. It makes a pleasant, serviceable offering that will be liked we think everywhere, in this country at least. The sets and scenes are pretty, the costumes and acting good and the photography, except some of the forest views, perfect.

"A HERO'S REWARD" (Kalem), Jan. 17.—A Mudville farcical love story, which begins with a fireman's parade and the dance that always follows such and then comes the love story. . There are so many people in the background that it is lively and amusing. John E. Brennan is one of the lovers, a fire chief who is extinguished by a younger man who wins the chieftainship and therefore the girl.

"KING COTTON" (Kalem), Jan. 17.—On the same reel is this fine offering that we enjoyed much. It is a well photographed series of views showing cotton from the planting to the cloth. A good offering, being a light innocent farce with an instructive and substantial number to balance it.

"THE MEXICAN SPY" (Lubin), Jan. 17.—A two-part story of the recent war with the Republic of Mexico, which we didn't have. E. C. Hall wrote the scenario which Wilbert Melvill produced seemingly at some army post in the West. It is a fair story, but somewhat conventional with a few added novelties which give it an apparent freshness. It is charitable not to say too much about the acting; but there is much to interest in a good many scenes where no acting was required, such as the fight between the Mexicans and the United States troops that come to the rescue of the hero who has been a thief and almost a traitor, but now bravely rehabiliates himself. Some of the backgrounds also are very acceptable.

"THE KISS OF SALVATION" (Melies), Jan. 16.—The Melies Company is about to release some very desirable pictures with novel and interesting backgrounds and first-class stories; but this; "The Kiss of Salvation" is poor. Sentimentality in any form of art more or less plainly makes honored things ridiculous; the sentimentality in this picture makes even sacred things a laughing stock. On artistic grounds it is as weak as can be, or almost so; but on ethical grounds, it is, with no evil intentions on the producer's part, almost reprehensible.

"POISON IVY" (Selig), Jan. 17.—A farce of scratching. It has a good laugh in its opening scene; but after that one, not many others. The best thing about it is its good acting and its queer characters, but its clear photography counts too. John Lancaster plays a typical hobo and Lyllian Leighton plays a fine country housewife. The sewing circle is interesting, in fact, every character in it is more or less so. Tom Dixon, Clara Dale and Palmer Bowman, with many others have roles. Charles H. France, the author conceived one good joke and then multiplied a little one to fill a half reel. Harry Fetterer produced it.

"THE CLAY INDUSTRY" (Selig), Jan. 17.—On the same reel as the above is this interesting and instructive offering showing how the potter moulds his clay. The photography is excellent and it contains a good deal that is fresh and new. The farce with it is thin, not vulgar and can be shown almost anywhere.

"AN ADVENTURE IN THE AUTUMN WOODS" (Biograph), Jan. 16.—A well written picture of adventure, set in the north woods. It deals with what might be called a night-long struggle for a bag of gold—first this is taken from its owner who intends it for the dot of his granddaughter, whose love story adorns the fringes of the picture's struggle. It seems to us not quite up to the best Biographs in acting and general conduct, but it surely is tense and exciting. The photographs are clear enough and the offering seemed to please the audience.

"IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN" (Lubin), Jan. 16.—A picture giving us a terrible dream which, at first, we are made to think is real experience and so are pleased to find isn't. The reason for this peculiar treatment of the story seems to be chiefly that it permits the use of a brutal murder, probably the only possible basis of this truly dramatic situation, and to use it in such a way that the feelings of the spectator are, in the end, partially reconciled. We prefer the classical method of showing such, which is by implication only. That the picture gets over as far as its intention goes is sure, as is the fact that its intention is both deep and significant; but it is harrowing and permits us to sympathize with no one of its characters, not even with the seemingly heroic servant who is willing to be hanged for such a scoundrel as the one who has killed his uncle and then found that the old man had made him his heir. It is a clever piece of work which it is hard not to praise. The author and producer is Geo. Nichollas. Bernard Seigel is the old man; Ed. Carew, his nephew and John Smiley, the servant. Isabel Lamon and Mathilde Baring have roles. It is clearly acted, but without a great deal of distinction.

"THE CLUE" (Selig), Jan. 13.—A picture showing the difficulties and final good luck of an ex-convict. It is an unusually well acted picture with some scenes showing the man's home life, which make a strong appeal and plainly pleased the audience much. Carl Winterhoff plays the man; Adrienne Kroel, his wife and Frances Osman, his engaging little girl. The ending is sentimental and rather weakens the impression. There are senses in an office, where the man has a job as janitor; just outside, where we see an old pal blackmailing him with a threat to tell the boss, and outside and also inside the boss's house. The author, J. Hungerford, has given the Selig players a good chance to act, otherwise he deserves little credit for any originality. Hardee Kirkland produced it carefully. Harry Lonsdale is the boss, Lyllian Leighton, the boss's wife and William Stowell, the pal. All do first class work.

"RED SWEENEY'S MISTAKE" (Kalem), Jan. 13.—A story of the under world and of a couple of thieves played by Carlyle Blackwell and Marin Sais, whom we don't remember having seen before. It is cleverly worked up, quite fresh and entertaining, but would have been more convincing if it had been produced in a big city. It shows how the pair are arrested after a theft of a paste pin. Jane Wolfe plays a woman detective and makes the final arrest. W. H. West also has a minor part. The photography is perfect and the audience seemed to like it.

"MIXED COLORS" (Pathe), Jan. 16.—A farce that begins rather tamely, but gets better. Perhaps the last scene of all makes the whole worth while. A darky woman has two baby carriages in her charge. Some small boys get her away and then paint the black baby white and the white baby black. Even their respective mothers don't recognize them. The washing of the kiddies at the end is most amusing. We have seen all the players do better work than in this picture, which could hardly have appealed to them strongly as artists. The colored people are the best in it, real darkies.

"OFF THE ROAD" (Vitagraph), Jan. 15.—How does a man feel who has committed a murder and been acquitted? Mrs. Breuil and Billy Cook are given as the co-laborators on the scenario of this picture which deals with the theme, giving us the particular phases of the experience as they are developed in the consciousness of a chosen individual who is played by Roger Lytton. The title "Off the Road" has a double significance, for the man is not only off the human road in that he lives no longer the normal life, but has become a recluse. The climax follows when the murdered man's son comes to the woods and falls in love with the murderer's daughter, an only child. It is a tensely dramatic picture, although it will not satisfy everyone that it has been written as powerfully as possible, its ending being very close at hand and easy to think out. The acting of Rogers Lytton is imaginative and for the most part quite convincing. Motion picture actors are apt, when drawing sharp emotion to carry it a bit further than the spectator's mind can follow and to keep it on a bit too long. Rosemary Theby plays, the man's daughter very well. Ralph Ince deserves credit for the production. The camera work is clear, but lacks artistic quality; is rather lifeless.

"CHINA AND THE CHINESE" (Essanay), Jan. 14.—The photography is clear enough and the matter is of great interest. A good picture to show.

"THE ROAD OF TRANSGRESSION" (Essanay), Jan. 16).—A story pictured as a dream which isn't at all like a dream. It has a moral purpose and shows an opium fiend as experiencing a horrible adventure while under the drug and as waking with the determination to live a wiser life. The man is rich and we have a few home scenes of the usual kind and a number of dive scenes also of the usual kind. E. H. Calvert plays the man and Lily Branscomb, a woman of the streets, who appears only in the dream. Both are fine players, but have little chance for significant character work in this picture. It is well photographed.

"THE TITLE CURE" (Edison), Jan. 15.—We have had other pictures whose purpose has been to show a young girl, even this same young girl if we remember aright, as being cured of wanting to marry a title by fake noblemen. It's a bit trite although the three foreign lords are fairly well acted and won a number of laughs. William Wadsworth, as the German count, is the best character in the farce, yet Edward O'Connor, as the Irish baron, is also good and amuses. Richard Ridgley, the Italian, didn't have any real chance in his role, Gertrude McCoy, as the girl, wears a queer black wig and isn't quite her best self. Augustus Phillips, her American lover, gets about all he could from his business—he has a fair scene at the end. Frank A. Lion plays the girl's father and Mrs. C. J. Williams her mother. Geo. A. Imlach, the author, doesn't deserve much credit. C. J. Williams produced it.

"HER FAITHFUL YUMA SERVANT" (Pathe), Jan. 15.—A typically Spanish story; they were telling just such tales in the days of Cervantes and that great humorist never was counted much as a short story writer. This offering stands almost wholly on its views which are well photographed and interesting. The situation, in which the girl's father wants to force an unwelcome marriage, is itself forced and artificial. George Gebhart plays the Yuma Indian who loves the girl as a slave might, and saves her from the convent where her father has immured her. She lives as an Indian basket-maker until her father is led to forgive her. We mustn't forget some good characters among the Indians, especially that old woman, who seems to be a sort of queen of the tribe.

"BRONCHO BILLY AND THE OUTLAW'S MOTHER" (Essanay), Jan. 11.—The bad man's old mother comes on the scene just after deputy sheriff "Broncho" has mortally wounded her son and though there is $5,000 reward he tears the warrant that she may never know that the son was not respectable. G. M. Anderson plays the deputy and is well supported by the whole cast. It is smooth, clear and interesting.

"PETER'S PLEDGE" (Lubin), Jan. 14.—A laughable comedy by Lawrence McCloskey. The suggestion seems to have come from some serious romance that perhaps appealed to McCloskey as comical. Mrs. Geo. B. Walters is left a legacy provided she marries Peter Lang, "the black sheep of the family whose only hope of reformation is in matrimony." He's an old soldier and, taking all things into consideration, it's a wonder that she, even she, succeeds in weaning him from the whiskey flask to the milk bottle. It's producer, Barry O'Neil, has cleverly worked up a good, fresh script into an acceptable comedy offering.

"BUD'S HEIRESS" (Selig), Jan. 14.—No one can produce his best picture every time he tries and it is no discredit to this picture's author and producer, William Duncan, that this offering falls a good way below his recent work. Those who have seen his "The Dynamiters," or his, "A Rough Ride With Nitroglycerine," will understand. The present picture is a rather broad farce with a rather conventional sissy-boy hunter in an important role. It isn't a truly strong work.

"TWO MEN AND A GIRL" (Eclipse), Jan. 15.—A rather suggestive love story. That it makes its purpose clear and is well acted and perfectly photographed doesn't add to its value as an offering for spectators who prefer their pictures absolutely clean. It is only fair to point out that the ending clears the atmosphere and keeps the mind from dwelling on the sex sense.

"TWO OF A KIND" (Vitagraph), Jan. 9.—This split-reel comedy marks an innovation in pictures—the introduction of two sisters—twins—so much alike they keep the onlooker guessing as to which is which. Although they have had no previous experience in dramatics they do good work. The similarity in face and figure is so remarkable that it gives rise to many comical situations. The girls are Edna and Alice Nash. George Cooper and James Morrison are the others in the cast.

"BETTY'S BABY" (Vitagraph), Jan. 9.—On the same reel is the story of the girl who wanted a baby elephant. There is some fun in it.

"THE WINNING HAND" (Vitagraph), Jan. 14.—Drama by the Western company, and well done. Robert Burns, Mary Charleson and Robert Thornby comprise the cast. There are moments of marked suspense.

"THE AMBASSADOR'S DAUGHTER" (Edison), Jan. 21.—Pictures come and go so fast that it is rather rash to say of any of them that it shows more effective handling than any other of its kind; such a statement would pass merely as a form of compliment. This picture is by Bannister Merwin and is a tense, well made melodrama, as speedy in its ending almost as the water fall that hangs from the face of the crag. Mark MacDermott plays the villainous clerk of the embassy and it seems strange to us that the ambassador (Robert Brower), didn't see through him in the first act. We wouldn't trust a man who acted or looked like that. Miriam Nesbitt plays the ambassador's daughter and George Lessy is the earnest hero while Charles Ogle and Mary Fuller play the not very important conspirators with whom Mark is in league. A very good offering.

"THE BIRTH OF A DRAGON FLY" (C. G. P. C.), Jan. 21.—Shows what the dragon fly comes from and what he is. There is something of a surprise in the developments from larva to fly and the picture is very interesting.

"THE MAKING OF A BOOK" (C. G. P. C.), Jan. 21.—A glimpse of the marvelous machinery used in making books wholesale. A big picture.

"THE WAYS OF DESTINY" (Pathe), Jan. 20.—A hand colored picture of the romantic adventures of a pretty girl. She was abandoned when a baby by her rich mother and adopted by a shepherd who, in the picture's first act, is killed by an ingenious stroke of lightning. The girl is left to make her own way and at length is found by her father, owner of a big department store. She gets a position in the store and has some very interesting and even tense adventures. Good acting at important points makes it grip strongly and it is just the offering that is sure to be popular. Its two reels are none too long and we commend it as a feature.

"LITERATURE AND LOVE" (Lubin), Jan. 20.—R. Hester, is the author of this rather commonplace picture of the girl writer who is in hard luck, but manages to get acquainted with the publisher of a magazine and her luck changes. It is a romantic, but not very convincing story and not very new. The girl is played by Ormi Hawley and Guy D'Emery is the publisher who has weak eyes, and whom the girl thinks is blind and helps across the street and then talks to in the park. L. Carlton, the producer has made a clear picture as effective perhaps as was possible with this material. As an offering it is so so.

Independent

"THE WHEELS OF DESTINY" (Broncho), Feb. 12.—Here is a three-reel production in which the interest never flags. Action follows naturally and the plot moves along briskly and forcibly. The quarrel at cards and shooting of the officer by White Feather lead to the false accusation of Lieut. Bell. Ten years later, by the twists of fate, he adopts his own daughter, who is afterward taken from him because he is a gambler. The scenes between father and daughter are very effective and reflect credit on the portrayers. A fine offering.

“THE STRENGTH OF THE WEAK” (Reliance), Jan. 18.—This is all “story.” That is to say, it really wouldn't happen so in life, because a man in the physical condition of the hero would hardly be permitted to attempt a delicate operation on the brain. But as a story it is fascinating. The hospital scenes are good and the work of the leading man excellent. A strong story of its type.

“HER FIREMAN” (Thanhouser), Jan. 24.—An entertaining photoplay, in which an actress adopts a street waif, played very naturally and pleasingly by the Thanhouser child favorite. The brave and handsome fireman appears later and saves the child from a burning house. This brings the three together at the close. The fire drill is good and the burning house figures well in the picture. A worth while offering.

“THE MASQUERADERS” (Reliance), Jan. 25.—A comedy in which a young man and his girl impersonate each other, to throw the sheriff and the French count off the trail. They are married in this fashion and afterward reveal themselves in proper garb. The photography is good and the very impossible plot has amusing moments.

“CABBY AND THE DEMON” (Majestic), Jan. 21.—With a stronger plot this picture would have been exceptional, as the costumes and acting are good. As it stands, however, it is but a series of attractive scenes connected by an uncertain plot.

“THE FAKE ALARM” (Crystal), Jan. 26.—This, on the same reel with the above, has a good laugh at the end. Slowman, who cannot wake up in the morning, ties a rope to his foot and asks a friend to pull on it. The milkman gets hold of the rope and almost pulls him out of the window.

“THE SURVEYER AND THE PONY EXPRESS” (Frontier), Jan. 22.—Through the medium of a surveyer's transit we see two bandits hold up the pony express and make away with $10,000. The scenes following are exciting. Good photography characterizes this production and some fine Western views are shown.

“THE BITTER DOSE” (Powers), Jan. 22.—It is something of a shock to find two children playing with medicine bottles, but the developments are funny. Their two elderly patients have a good scare, believing themselves to be poisoned. Their efforts to obtain an antidote are amusing.

“THE RIOT” (Nestor), Jan. 20.—A film in which the mine owner is chained without food or water until a child, who had gone hungry because the mine closed down, takes pity on him. A labor story with a new angle to it.

“THE GALLOP OF DEATH” (Eclair), Jan. 21.—Despite the misleading title, the heroine, who starts to ride blindfolded over a cliff, is rescued by her lover. Her sight is restored and all ends happily. The tiger and its Indian keeper furnish something new in the way of a thrill. Somewhat melodramatic, but holds the attention.

“THE TAXIDERMIST” (Nestor), Jan. 20.—A light, half-reel offering, well pictured and with a fairly amusing plot.

“IN PEACEFUL HOLLOW” (Nestor), Jan. 20.—This, on the same reel with above, shows the experiences of a summer boarder seeking rest at Si Holcomb's place. Even though he tries to find sleep in a haystack he is disturbed. The love affairs of the country couple are diverting.

“THE SCAPEGOAT” (Gem), Jan. 21.—This will scarcely answer as a desirable film, for the reason that its plot is unsatisfactory and hardly worth while.

“THE GENIUS OF FORT LAPAWAI” (Bison), Jan. 21.—The hero plants an electrical mine outside of the fort and blows up the attacking redskins. This is the climax of the film. It is hardly convincing, as it was necessary to bunch the savages just outside the fort in full range of its defenders. As a one-reel picture this would have been stronger, as all of the preliminaries leading up to the main incident were somewhat conventional and lacked novelty. The incantations of the medicine man and the ambush from the tree tops were well devised.

“A GAMBLER'S LAST TRICK” (Bison), Jan. 25.—A very melodramatic offering in a Western setting, following the career of Frisco Frank from the time he deserts his family, until he is finally foiled in his villainy and shot by his abandoned wife. A prospector and his two daughters figure in the story. A good offering of the distinctly melodramatic type.

“LOVE'S LOTTERY TICKET” (Imp), Jan. 20.—Showing, in an amusing manner, the adventures of lottery ticket No. 018416, which wins the $25,000 prize. The scheming old gentleman marries an old maid and adopts two young people into his family to get in on the prize money, but even then fails to do so. Good comedy.

“THE DEATH TRAIL” (Champion), Jan. 20.—The locale of this picture is the Hudson Bay country, and it portrays the troubles of a young fur trader who competes with the fur company combination. In the latter part of the film he is seen in a hand to hand conflict with a bear in the woods. An Indian attempts to kill him, but his sweetheart intervenes by shooting the redskin. The picture does not show us what became of the bear. Photographically this is very good.

“ON BURNING SANDS” (Powers), Jan. 24.—The character work is excellent in this two-reel offering, particularly that of Edwin August as Smiling Joe and Farrell McDonald as the bad man. The situations in the first part are splendidly pictured, but struck us as a little too deliberate to keep the suspense just right. The lighting effects were good here. In the second reel comes the sand storm and the plot interest grips the observer more strongly.

“THE OPEN ROAD” (Reliance), Jan. 22.—A good story with dramatic suspense and what is most delightful in such a story, unforced and spontaneous humor. It makes a first-class two-part feature offering, and is certainly among Producer Oscar Apfel's best work. The script is by Forrest Halsey, who has given a number of fine stories to Reliance releases. One of the good points in the story is that while the main thread on which the dramatic quality of the picture hangs is straight and clear, the episodes that are strung upon it are as unexpected and as freshly interesting as unexplored country. The characterization is clear-cut and natural, giving several commendable pictures of real people. Gertrude Robinson and Irving Cummings taking the two leads, with Ralph Lewis, as the latter's father, a fine old gentleman. Others too deserve commendation. It surely is a picture that will be liked and remembered. The camera work is fine; that first dream picture when the tramp pictures “the open road” is a happy stroke of genius.

“FIXING THE FLIRTS” (Imp), Jan. 25.—A comedy with a chase, which is not overstrong.

“THE HERO OF THE HOUR” (Imp), Jan. 25.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this comedy which will make laughs.

“THE SPECTRE BRIDEGROOM” (Eclair), Jan. 23.—In these two reels there are many pretty pictures of pretty girls and fine settings. The photography at times is not up to Eclair's standard. The illusion of the Revolutionary period is maintained throughout. The picture shows good direction. One especially striking scene is where the “little spectres” dance around the Baron. Another is of firelights effects about the old-fashioned fireplace. Alec Francis has the role of the Baron; his portrayal is even, finished and entertaining throughout. There is a good cast. “The Spectre Bridegroom” should not be missed.

“AFTER THE SHIPWRECK” (Eclair), Jan. 26.—This picture, made by the Paris company, while well done, both from a standpoint of acting and direction, is unpleasant. The only relief from the depressing atmosphere comes in the last few feet of the film, when the yachtsman who had lured the girl from home and abandoned her, again takes her to his arms. He had been shipwrecked and saved by the sister of the girl he had wronged.

“HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER” (Nestor), Jan. 24.—A story of an adventuress who after causing the downfall of one man is in a fair way to accomplish the ruin of another. Her first victim is the means of frustrating her plans. The work of the ex-convict and of the mother is well done.

“BECKY BECKY” (Rex), Jan. 26.—This play, adapted by Helen Gardner from an old novel, makes an interesting release. Miss Gardner herself takes the lead, and it is her work, together with that of the man who portrays the baron, which makes the picture. The photography is excellent. The best scene is the last. It is here that the witchery of the leading woman has full play. It is probable that the film was made last summer.

“RAGS AND RICHES” (Imp), Jan. 23.—In this strong picture, produced by Herbert Brenon, Frank Smith takes the honors. There is a little girl in the cast who not only displays marked talent, but also shows evidences of careful training. The cast throughout is good, and so is the photography.

“THE SYMPHONY” (Rex), Jan. 23.—Houses which like the old-time melodramatic “ten-twenty-thirty” stuff will probably take to this picture, the leads in which are taken by players more familiar in Nestor casts.

“CALL OF THE BLOOD” (Kinemacolor).—A settler with a sick wife sets out for camp to obtain the services of a physician. His wagon is attacked by Indians. The settler is killed. The wife lives just long enough to bring into the world a daughter, who is adopted by the redskins. A young son, who is overlooked by the savages, is adopted by an army officer. It is the meeting in later life of these two and their falling in love that forms the chief thread of the story. Their relationship is established by the same old locket. There is an Indian lover who is discarded. The picture will interest.

“ANIMATED MAP OF THE BALKANS” (Kinemacolor).—Here is something unique in trick photography and highly educational. By means of color waves there is shown the political changes in the Balkan States and in Turkey in Europe from 1360 to the present time.

“ENTERTAINING AUNTIE” (Kinemacolor).A farce comedy of college life and of a young man who spent too much money to suit auntie. It will mildly amuse.

“LIFE OR DEATH” (Gaumont), Jan. 28.—A picture marked by fine views of an ocean storm. Mme. Renee Carll has the lead. There are some strong dramatic moments.

“THE COMING OF SUNBEAM” (Solax), Jan. 22.—There is a charming little girl in this picture, and she does much to make it a success. Darwin Karr has the role of a grandfather and does well. The photography is good, and there are some excellent firelight effects.

“A DOUBLE LIFE” (Gaumont), Jan. 23.—Excellent comedy. The feature is the fine timing of the scenes in the double exposures, which are marvelously well done.

“FRENCH ALPINE MANEUVERS” (Gaumont), Jan. 23.—On the same reel as the foregoing are these exceptional views of soldiers climbing over snow and ice, covered mountain sides and dragging mountain guns with them. One of the scenes was of the Alpine Chasseurs at a height of 12,000 feet. An unusual picture.

“IN THE CLAWS OF THE LEOPARD” (Gaumont).—In this two-reel subject there are thrilling moments when a woman is attacked by a leopard and the beast and woman struggle all over the floor. How is it done? will be the question uppermost in the minds of many. The story is one of intrigue, the prize being a valuable concession in Rhodesia. The picture will interest the majority. The telling of the story, however, depends more on letters and long titles than on the action.

POWER'S NO. 6-A INSTALLED AT WEST POINT.

The United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., Detachment of Engineers, Capt. G. A. Youngberg, Corps of Engineers commanding, has just installed a new Power's Cameragraph No. 6A for the entertainment of the cadets and their friends. This machine will also be used for the purpose of instruction in military tactics, etc. Power's machines have also been installed in the State University of Minnesota and the Cokato Opera House, Cokato, Minn.

"Salome"

A Pretentious Production of the Much Mooted Biblical Story Done in Three Parts By the Savoia Company of Italy.

Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman.

As a whole, this production of Salome is a splendidly adequate piece of work. It is handled in the big way that many of the European producers attempt such stories, and bears every evidence of thorough calculation from start to finish. Photographically it is without fault. There are some large ensemble scenes that are splendid in every way. In these large groups each minor character seems to be an actor, without the slightest suggestion of being a super—a point that has considerable bearing on the success or failure of mob scenes.

One of the best bits of motion picture technique in the picture is the manner in which the characters are introduced at the beginning. This idea has often been used in pictures by showing the enlarged features of a character which is labeled in some fashion. But usually there is no indication, in this simple method, of the bearing of the character upon the piece. In this Salome picture, as the characters are introduced, each one indicates by facial expression his or her nature, and by this means the audience can instantly grasp the relation of that character to all the others. For instance, the face of Herodias first makes its appearance through a divided curtain, and by the proper facial expression she immediately conveys the impression that she is a sly, designing and treacherous woman. Salome, thus introduced, gives the true impression of a vain and self-indulgent creature.

Scene from "Salome."

The story of Salome, as it relates to John the Baptist and Herod, contains an abundance of fundamental dramatic material. The succession of events, as they are summed up in a few brief verses of the Bible, form one of the truest of dramatic plots, from a constructive point of view, of any part of the book. As a photoplay it could not have been better if the writer of the Book of Matthew had written it for screen purposes. The first dramatic element is the clandestine love affair of Herodias and Herod. The next step is the riddance by these two of King Philip, husband of Herodias. The third step is the proclamation of Herod as Tetrarch in the place of his brother Philip. Step number four is their desire to be rid of John the Baptist, who has knowledge of their treachery. The fifth step introduces Salome, daughter of Herodias and Philip, with her love for John the Baptist, which is complicated by the spurning of her love by John. Further complications materialize in the sixth step through the infatuation of Herod with Salome while witnessing her dance. The next step brings about the climax wherein the two women find their revenge in the death of John the Baptist. The last step shows the retribution which overtakes them.

THANHOUSER STOCK COMPANY ALL BUSY.

Mr. C. J. Hite, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, desires to correct the newspaper statements that the members of the Thanhouser stock company would be distributed among other companies under his control. Mr. Hite says that the Thanhouser stock company is not to be broken up, but will continue working as before, and that it is in no way affected by the recent destruction of the Thanhouser plant at New Rochelle by fire.

"Adrienne Lecouvreur."

An Actress's Romance Under Louis XV, in Three Parts.

This is a distinctly French production, based on incidents, which are supposed to have occurred in the life of Mme. Adrienne Lecouvreur, a noted and talented actress, very prominent on the French stage of the early part of the eighteenth century. It is said that Madame Sarah Bernhardt has adapted the story for moving picture representation. She herself plays the titular part. The distinguished artist, according to reports regards her role in Adrienne Lecouvreur as one of her favorites. The story as told in the films is quite complicated, though at the same time full of life and action. Interesting historical personages such as Regent Philip, Louis XV, Marechal de Saxe, and Voltaire, are introduced and their parts very happily rendered. The Duchess of Bouillon and Adrienne Lecouvreur are rivals for the affections of Marechal de Saxe, whose heart in the main seems to be true to Adrienne. Intrigues, plots, counterplots, treasons and stratagems just follow one another in most rapid succession. Of course the name of Bernhardt makes the production attractive to the public, many of whom no doubt saw her in this role on one of her tours through this country.

Madame Sarah Bernhardt at Home. Two Parts.

These films show the greatest of modern tragediennes in the intimacy of her home, Belle-Isle, a rockbound island along the coast of Bretagne. The reels are replete with interest. The natural scenery is superbly beautiful. What the public no doubt will like best are the intimate glimpses of the gifted woman's home, her energy, her unabated power of observing and enjoying things, her delight in what is harmlessly beautiful, her association with youth and beauty and her love of gayety. To the simple fishermen who inhabit Belle-Isle and the neighboring coast the famous actress is something in the nature of a divinity, not merely by reason of her extraordinary talents, but rather by reason of her good-hearted interest in their welfare. When not long ago the wonted supply of fish failed to arrive along the coast and the failure threatened the fisher-folk with famine the divine Sarah came to their rescue promptly and substantially.

The worshipful interest and sympathy of the natives for Madame Bernhardt and her hearty simple way of appreciating these tributes are shown forth with rare fidelity to life. The great actress is fond of outdoor sports and of al fresco lunches en famille in the open air. She is a great friend of animals, a dainty little "pom" and a magnificent greyhound seem to be her prime favorites. She loves to feed the chickens and ducks and geese and pigs with her own hands. Fishing is her favorite sport. She is a tireless worker and player at the same time and we see her start out at the hour of six a. m. to look after her lobster pots. She fishes in the pools of her own fine estate and varies it with fishing excursions on the deep sea. Whatever the calendars may say, this woman in the films is most aggressively young. She climbs up to her abode on the rocky heights almost trippingly, while the She is entitled to the Nobel prize for superexcellence in the gentle art of "savoir vivre"—the knowledge of how to live. ladies and gentlemen of her volunteer retinue, led by her son Maurice, are panting and wiping the sweat from their brows.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

LAST week the Evening World published a detailed report of an inspection of the motion picture houses in Manhattan, Brooklyn and the Bronx made by women members of the Practical Mothers' Association, and a woman member of the National Board of Censorship. It is the first sane and truthful statement the paper has made of conditions as they actually exist with one exception. The paper would take credit for having brought about a great reform in the management of the houses by its "vigorous hammering," as it terms its policy of the past. The benefit of a doubt may be given the paper with regard to managers of houses giving better attention to the law applying to the admission of children, but claim to any more credit is absolutely without foundation. Had the Evening World's work in the past been made in good faith its claim to credit might receive some consideration. With strange frankness it states that the last one was an "impartial investigation." Surely the paper does wish to be given credit for giving the public a statement of facts based upon impartiality, and on the same line of argument it is deserving of the severest censure for the character of reports it has previously published. In its last article the paper pleads guilty to the very thing the motion picture people have repeatedly charged against it in the following admission: "The Evening World was needed to bring up to the mark those shows for the sins of which the entire moving picture industry has been harshly criticised." In other words, the paper did not take the time heretofore to make an impartial, truthful and discriminating investigation. The result is that the report it now presents makes the investigators it had on previous occasions a bunch of prevaricators.

As to sanitary and fire regulations reported upon by the last investigators, the newspaper can claim absolutely no credit for the reason that the changes it claims to have brought about could not have been made in the time intervening between the paper's sensational and untruthful reports and the one just submitted. One is bound to believe that the conditions in these respects as previously reported by the paper's investigators never existed.

But, after all, it is better to exercise a spirit of justice and forgiveness toward the transgressing newspaper and give it some credit for finally recognizing and publishing the truth. It is a step towards making amends. Now what are the chief points brought out in the report framed upon impartiality as between the people and the motion picture houses? One of the investigators says ninety per cent. of the moving picture shows are safe and well managed. Mark the percentage—90! and all those houses were traduced for the shortcomings of the insignificant ten per cent! Let us hope that this will not be repeated by an agency to which the people look for truth and justice.

Detailed reports are made by each investigator on every house visited and an adverse report is not made by any of them either as to the nature of films or posters shown, the management of the houses, or with respect to the building, fire or health laws. One of the investigators says she has visited 600 of the 750 moving picture houses in Greater New York. Where under the sun did the World's other investigators dig up hundreds of disease breeding, contaminating pest holes, licentious exhibitors, moral depravity, fire traps, etc., etc.? The exhibitors who protested that a few such places may have existed and pleaded for a discriminating and impartial investigation in behalf of the great majority who were respecting the laws feel that it is tardy justice to be handed the truth after every effort has been made to arouse the public against them.

Let us see what else the impartial investigators say. A few quotations from the report will suffice: "Entirely suitable films and courteous management, should ask nothing better for my children," "complying perfectly with the fire and sanitary regulations," "bound to develop the artistic sense of any child interested in music," "high class films and the general conditions good," "all O. K., would take my children there," "airy, roomy and clean. Good enough place of amusement for any family," "posters splendid and truthful; show good, no bad or immoral films whatever. General conditions could not be better." (And this last report is made on a Chatham Square, Manhattan, theater!) In the face of this what have the Rev. Immaculate, Prof. Superior, Superintendent Morality and scores of others to say? In shouting themselves hoarse before various bodies in condemnation of motion pictures shows they have repeatedly declared their inability to cite a redeeming feature. The issue is put squarely before these people by one of the investigators who says of one motion picture house: "Better than environment outside as to sanitation." Let them take the hint and leave the persecuted exhibitor alone for a while. There is more work for them elsewhere.

A feature of the report is the part that sustains the frequent contentions of the exhibitors that they have not been responsible for violations of the law regarding admission of children. Every investigator states that at almost all the places crowds of children were outside the houses accosting strangers to take them in. In one instance a man taking seven children became very indignant because a manager intimated that they were not his. In many cases when a manager asked a woman if a child she was taking in was her own he was told "None of your business." At one place a door tender with a rattan in his hand was trying to drive away children unaccompanied by guardians. We will admit that the reform movement may have brought about an improvement in the observance of the law in this respect and at the same time urge it as a strong argument for very careful investigation before condemning an exhibitor when a violation is charged.

Many of the so-called reformers have cited as one of their strongest points that aside from the large picture houses the patrons are mainly children. The impartial investigators show that, at least in part, the statement is not correct. In a small house on Park Row ninety-five per cent. of the audience consisted of men; in one on Third Avenue, 75 per cent.; on Fourteenth Street 95 per cent. men, the balance women, no children. Facts like these have never been referred to by the so-called reformers. Grant that the conditions now are due to a crusade, the fact remains that the situation has always been covered by law and those responsible for its enforcement were responsible for any infractions that were made. Had those who have been persecuting the exhibitors been as active in urging the proper officials to do their duty there would be no occasion for such upheavals of sensationalism as there have been in the past.

One of the investigators cites an interesting case with reference to the child law. She found a woman who had been in the habit of putting her children in a picture show when she wanted to go shopping, as she had no one in the house to leave them with and was afraid to leave them alone for fear they might play with matches and start a fire. Since the enforcement of the law she has been obliged to lock the children in a room when she must go out. Another woman declared motion pictures are the "finest things ever invented," as they keep her husband out of the back room of the saloon on Sundays and evenings and he takes herself and the children to see the pictures. All of which corroborates a statement frequently made by exhibitors that among the most aggressive, under-cover supporters of movements started against them are the saloonkeepers. And yet one of the most prominent of the so-called reformers recently declared that the statement was a mere subterfuge.

On the whole the report of the impartial investigators sustains every contention and plea the motion picture exhibitors have been making since that form of amusement became established. It is the strongest document in their behalf ever offered, in that it comes strongly endorsed through a source that has heretofore been one of attacks which it now practically admits were not based upon careful and personal investigation. Now let all the exhibitors do their full duty—obey the laws at all times.

Jean, the famous Vitagraph dog, is the proud mother of a litter of six puppies and they are the pride of the studio staff. With the exception of one, the cute little things have almost exact coat markings of the famed canine actress and, though but a month old, all of them display an inheritance of her intelligence and sagacity. Director Larry Trimble takes great care of the mother. She is fed at 7 and 10 a. m. and 1 and 4 p. m. Just before retiring she gets two raw eggs beaten in a pint of milk. Some Jean, eh?

Music for the Picture

BY CLARENCE E. SINN

THE Selig Polyscope Company are re-issuing a picture made famous by them some years ago. You remember it, of course—The Cowboy Millionaire." It has been remade entirely on a much more elaborate scale than before, and is now in two reels, the first one being taken up mostly with spirited pictures of cowboy sports. The accompanying music should be of a spirited nature likewise. Some suggestions are offered:

"The Cowboy Millionaire."

Part First.

1. "Zephyr" ("The West Wind," from suite by Trinkaus, published by Witmark & Sons). Watch for pistol shots; continue music until donkeys are seen.
2. "Wild West" (by Percy Wenrich) until title: "Bud Gets a Surprise."
3. Lively music until Bud reads telegram; as they rush into saloon:
4. Chorus of "One Drink More" until change of scene.
5. (Railroad scene.) Back to same lively for one scene.
6. "Starlight Sioux" (Intermezzo by Aubrey Stauffer) until Bud sits in office and looks at stenographer.
7. "I Want You, Dearie, 'Deed I do" (By Remick) until change of scene. (Any similar song chorus will answer, such as "I've Got My Eyes on You," or "I Always Knew the Girl I'd Love Would Be a Girl Like You.")
8. Any lively music until title: "Getting an Outfit."
9. Waltz until Bud sits at table with girl:
10. "Won't You Be My Sweetheart?" (song chorus) until end of reel.

Part Second.

1. Waltz (two scenes) until title: "The Same Old Club."
2. "The Mouse and the Clock" (Whitney) until change of scene.
3. Waltz again until title: "The Diamond S Boys Arrive."
4. "Kick-a-poo" (Harry Von Tilzer), long number—p. and f., according to alternate scenes; play until title: "Bud Takes the Boys to See a Melodrama."
5. Waltz until stage is seen.
6. "Hearts and Flowers" until villain seizes leading lady.
7. Short hurry until change.
8. "Sailing, Sailing" (any sea song); in second scene change to "How Dry I Am" until title: "A Bucking Broncho," etc.
9. "Stein Song" (or any drinking song). They get seasick; can follow the action. When Bud enters apartment change to:
10. "Broncho Nell" (Gardner Publishing Co.); begin piano, increase and decrease with action until title: "Bud's Resolve—Never Again."
11. "Never, Never No More" (old song), or any lively music until finish.

"The Mexican Spy" (Lubin).

W. E. King's orchestra at the Orpheum Theater, Chicago, accompanied Lubin's two-reel film, "The Mexican Spy," as follows:

Part First.

1. Waltz, "Espana," until title: "The Forged Letter Secures," etc.
2. "La Paloma" (the introduction plays through one scene); the balance of the number until title: "The Major's Son and the Paymaster's Daughter."
3. Novelette until: "Tom Unable to Pay."
4. Mysterious (bass solo); subdue at alternate changes, until Tom enters office.
5. "Pizzicato" until girl enters office.
6. Novelette until: "Having Accidentally Knocked the Receiver," etc.
7. Agitato p. and f. until Tom exits; a few bars neutral until change.
8. "Reconciliation" (Bendix suite) until end of reel.

Part Second.

1. "Heart's Ease" (Moret) until recruiting office. (N. B.) Increase quasi agitato when she comes on scene to the two men.
2. "Under the Harvest Moon" (Published by Witmark) until: "One Year Later."
3. Novelette until ambulance seen in foreground.
4. Hurry; start softly and work up to forte; at shots
5. Change to heavier hurry for battle; play until: "He Will Live."
6. Plaintive for one scene.
7. Novelette to end of reel.

Miss Maude Waters Dittmar (Marvel Theater, Frederick, Md.), gives us another of her welcome letters. She says: "For our comedies the numberless amount of songs as well as "rags" work out well as shown by Mr. Bruce's program (Moving Picture World, January 18th). I have found the operettas very valuable and suggest some selections I am using: "Red Mill, Madame Sherry, Three Twins, Siren, Singing Girl, Kiss Waltz, Red Widow, Pink Lady, Little Miss Fixit, Dr. DeLuxe, Enchantress, Balkan Princess, Hans the Flute Player, Quaker Girl, Jacinta, Naughty Marietta, Chocolate Soldier, Gypsy Love, Baron Trenk, Three Romeos, Woman Haters, Dollar Princess, Golden Butterfly, Mikado, Pinafore, Robin Hood, Sorcerer, and Eva." Of course you must use judgment if you wish to suit the picture. We are running Warner's features together with one Universal program. For the "Sphinx" I used Baron Trenk, using some detail work, of course, and closing with Schumana "The Two Grenadiers." For the first reel of "The Glass Coffin" the slow movement from the selection "Stradella," for the other two reels the selection from "Aida." It fitted beautifully. The "Bohemian Girl" works out fine, for you can make the selection fit exactly. I have used fifteen of these grand opera selections published by Schirmer to great advantage. Enclosed find program for:

"Redemption."

First Reel.

1. "Moonlight Dance" (Finck).
2. Valse from "Siren."

First movement "Sango de Maurice" (Hein).
"Trauermarsch" (Mendelssohn).
"Humoreske" (Dvorak).

Second Reel.

Waltz, "Phantom Isle," first movement.

For dance, "Tarantella," Gillette (Presser). This was splendid. Finish above waltz.

Agitato until "Sent to Prison," then plaintive. (I used "Valse Dolores," by Waldteufel.)

Close with chorus from Faust "Whilst This Blest Sign."

Third Reel.

Inflammatus from Stabat Mater.
Intermezzo from "Rusticana."
Largo (Handel).
Closing chorus from Faust: "Holy Angel in Heaven Blest."

---

"The Resurrection" (Masko).

The music given to this four-reel feature was arranged by Mr. Milt. E. Schwarzwald, the leader of the Bijou Dream Orchestra, Chicago. This house is now running a feature film, with changes once a week, and is making its music a prominent part of the show. Mr. Schwarzwald kindly gave me a copy of numbers as selected and played by his orchestra:

First Reel.

1. Russian waltz suite (pub. by Ditson), "The Fawn," "Bluette" and "The Orchid" in the order as given; keep last number ("The Orchid") until title: "Death Takes Katusha's Baby From Her."

Then plaintive music for one scene.
"The Orchid" again through one scene, then:
"The Rosary" until end of reel.

Second Reel.

1. "Puzta Maiden" waltz (by Chas. Roberts). The introduction is characteristic and will fill first scene; No. 1 waltz begins at 2nd scene, rather slowly and softly until: "The Life Without Care or Hope."

2. Russian Dance until dance is over.
3. Same waltz until: "Russian Dancers."
4. "Russian Kossack" (dance pub. by Emil Ascher) until dance ended.
5. Same waltz (short) until he drinks poisoned wine.
6. Agitato pp. until dancers.
7. "Russian Kossacks" again (short) until change, then back to
8. Same agitato as No. 6 until: "Maslova Is Accused."
9. Plaintive until end of reel.

Third Reel.

1. "Melody in F," once through.
2. "To a Star" (by Leonard) until letter is shown.
3. "Salut d'Amour" (Elgar), until end of reel.

Fourth Reel.

1. Plaintive until title: "The Condemned Start for Siberia."
2. Pilgrims Chorus (from Tannhauser) until title: "The Prison Hospital," etc.
3. "The Melody of Peace" until end of reel.

THOUGHTS FOR THE PIANIST.

By Kenneth Aiken.

THE pianist who aspires to be an artist at accompanying pictures will surround each picture with a musical atmosphere of its own. He will think of the general trend of the story, its manner of starting off and ending and its climax. He will notice who the leading actors are in the cast, for by this he may judge somewhat of the intensity of the performance. If the picture is serious drama and is done by the best stars he may need one or two of what might be called his reserve pieces, pieces of considerable difficulty carrying the utmost emotional appeal.

What are some of these pieces? One of the strongest pieces emotionally that I know of is Liszt's third Liebestraum. The first two pages are quiet and serene with an extremely simple melody, yet though simple it has a depth and strength such as can be found only in great music. For those of slight technical ability these first two pages alone should be invaluable. A cadenza follows and then the same strain is taken up in the key of B, after which it modulates in E, where the whole piano seems to be brought into action. The finale is soft and tender.

It would be folly to bring out a piece of this description for the ordinary run of pictures. There are sometimes pictures, however, which in character of plot and production show the artistic finish of a poem. Such a one was "The Painted Lady." Miss Sweet's acting in the role of the mad girl deserved a musician's best efforts. How to respond to her loneliness, her first glimmerings of love, her despair at finding she had shot her lover, and her sweet but insane sorrow! Nothing like rag time now, nothing that is the "latest out"; the music must mirror deep emotion. For this we have Puccini's "Madame Butterfly" and his "La Boheme," the Liebesträume (three of them), by Liszt, also his Consolation and such well-known songs as D'Hardelot's "Because," Bartlett's "A Dream," Metcalf's "Absent," Roger's "At Parting," Grieg's "Ich Liebe Dich" and Nevin's "Rosary." These last should be paraphrased to get the best piano effects.

The great need to-day is far more seriousness on the musical side. The picture companies do not hesitate—heavy dramatic subjects are coming out all the time and the public does not weary of them either, only the whole thing lacks artistic success because of crude music. Wrong ideas have contributed to bring about the present condition. Picture playing does not consist, as some suppose, in fitting song titles to the action in the picture. This is not exactly a bad thing in itself, but it amounts to no more in picture playing than tooting the whistle does in running an engine. Proper accompaniments for pictures are those which reflect their peculiar atmosphere, their tone of sadness or joy or their dramatic movement. Anything short of this is just quack.

All is impossible, however, without the proper music, so the buying of music becomes a very important matter. The pianist should select his music with special purposes in view. He will pick out "The Dance of the Hours" (Gioconda) for light gay action in say a society drama; "Valse Triste" (Sibelius) will serve for dark, sombre effects; "Heart's Ease" (Macbeth) for any romance; "Pomp and Circumstance March" (Elgar) for those splendid pageants in Pathe's Weekly; "Nita Gitana" (De Koven) for Mexican love scenes; "Gondoliera" (Moskowski) for boat scenes; "Autumn" (Chaminade) for any simple sadness; "Summer" (Chaminade) for freshness and life.

Recently the Russian Symphony Orchestra did this entire industry an honor by accompanying the Pilgrim's Progress pictures with a special program prepared by the conductor. Some day, perhaps, one of our great pianists will favor us in a similar manner. In the meantime every exhibitor can help things along by keeping the piano well tuned. Those who have really seen the light will shelve the old upright and put in a modern grand.

FILM SUPPLY OFFERINGS.

The marked signs of activity, the burning of midnight oil, the hustle and bustle about the offices of the Film Supply Company of America for the past few weeks, seem to have all pointed in one direction. The plan and future policy of the company is made clear and it appears that a tremendous program and proposition has been launched for the big State rights buyer, the exchange man and the exhibitor. The Film Supply Company has undoubtedly struck a popular strain and its attractiveness cannot be denied. The company has gotten together a wonderful combination of feature productions and are supplementing this extraordinary offering by their usual program of regular releases, added to which are several new brands which have been selected with an aim toward the consumer's satisfaction.

Work on the long promised "All Star" brand of films has been progressing quietly for some months past, and it is announced that the first of these productions is now ready and takes its place amongst the feature release offerings. The initial feature is none other than the divine and incomparable Sarah Bernhardt in a tremendous and beautiful three reel production, "An Actress' Romance," which is Mme. Bernhardt's own adaptation of her own most favored and successful play, "Adrienne Lecouvreur." This production has been reserved by Sarah Bernhardt for her final and supreme effort before the camera, and the result has evidenced her desire to make it her masterpiece in photoplays. In this production she is supported by her entire and original company from the Theatre Sarah Bernhardt, Paris.

The All Star film will next offer the eminent tragedian and character actor, M. Mounet-Sully, in the world-famed tragedy, "Oedipus Rex," a four-reel production which is the rage of all Europe. This picture has been pronounced by critics as unquestionably the greatest film of tragedy ever produced, and has created a storm of approval.

The third release of the All Star will be Sarah Bernhardt at home, at rest and at play, two reels of a most unusual and unique film. These pictures were taken for Mme. Bernhardt for the purpose of posterity preservation and form a favored part of her home library.

The balance of the feature offerings of the Film Supply Company are all of exceptional attractiveness and unusual character.

The Gaumont Company offers two massive two-reel subjects in "The Human Vulture" and "The Bridge of Sorrow." and two impressive three-reel subjects, "The White Glove Band" and "In the Grip of the Vampire." Itala adds the masterpiece film, "In the Palace of Flames," the film which has turned both America and Europe wild with enthusiasm with its three reels of fire spectacle and the eminent Italian tragedian Zacconi in the title role. "Beasts of the Jungle," the American feature presented by the Solax Company in three reels, a marvelous wild animal picture, is another offering in the group. Great Northern adds a three-reel picture, "Conquered, or the Madcap Princess," a film of the usual Great Northern quality which needs no introduction.

The above mentioned are the present offerings only, it being the plan of the Film Supply Company to offer a new program of features at regular intervals.

A new and novel plan has been announced with reference to the buying of films. The first Friday and Saturday of each month will hereafter be set aside for the display of features and novelties for the benefit of buyers. The spacious and well appointed theater which the Film Supply Company has on its premises will be used for this purpose. Here the out of town and local buyer may spend his time and have the entire list of features as well as regular releases shown.

Of the regular releases forming the Film Supply Company's program, Ammex starts on Thursday, January 23rd, with a Western drama, "Love and Circumstance," and will release one a week thereafter. Ramo begins on February 19th, and the date of the initial Oilot release will be given within the coming two weeks.

The plans adopted by the Film Supply Company are most commendable and should meet with popular favor.

NEW THEATER BUILDING AT WEST TORONTO.

W. L. Joy, manager of the Wonderland Theater, 1756 Dundas Street, West Toronto, Ontario, Canada, is building another vaudeville and picture house in that city which will seat 1,200 persons. The site is 55 feet by 172 feet. The front of the house will be 42 feet high and will be done in English terra cotta, and the interior will be of elaborate design. The operating booth is to be of reinforced concrete. No expense is being spared to make the theater one of the best locally.

The Building of the Great Aqueduct at Los Angeles, in Pictures, by the American Film Manufacturing Company.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

AMONG the greatest of modern engineering feats may well be placed the building of the new aqueduct by the city of Los Angeles, which will furnish sufficient water, when completed, for a population of over a million people. This aqueduct will have a length of 223 miles, from the head waters in Owen Valley. The course is through an arid, volcanic region and an alkali laden soil, which have presented many serious problems to prevent the pollution of the water.

There are 140 tunnels, of varying lengths, in the great water course. The longest of these is the Elizabeth, which measures 26,860 feet, or over five miles. The size of this tunnel is sufficient to permit the passage of a large automobile. Its capacity is such that the flow of water will be 400 cubic feet per second, or 258,000,000 gallons per day. The highest point of the aqueduct is at Soda Springs, which is 3,500 feet above sea level.

The aqueduct is built of steel and concrete, and the city erected its own cement plant, with a capacity of 1,200 barrels per day, for the work. Over 4,000 men are at work along the course, and the commissary department maintains fifty stations, at which 12,000 meals per day are prepared. Great steel siphons are used at certain points to conduct the water. The sections of some of these huge siphons weigh thirteen tons each, and the pictures show two of them being transported across the Mojave Desert by a team of fifty-two mules.

The cost of the aqueduct, when finished, will be $30,000,000. The official census of 1910 gave the population of Los Angeles as 319,198, and a comparison of the population with the cost of the aqueduct speaks volumes for the enterprise of California's great southern city. The estimated cost of the Manhattan City Aqueduct, including the Catskill and other subsidiary sections, was $176,000,000.

The pictures have been taken with great care and will have, doubtless, considerable educational interest for those who view them. The opening scene shows the Owen Valley, with Mt. Whitney in the distance, and from this point, until the section nearest Los Angeles is reached, the views include all the operations along the course and afford a valuable study of the tremendous difficulties encountered. The film affords fine views of a wild and desolate section of country, and some of them reveal remarkable perspectives.

The release date is January 30th.

MRS. W. C. TOOMEY DEAD.

Mrs. W. C. Toomey, the wife of the vice-president of the Mutual Film Corporation, passed away on Sunday, Jan. 19, after an illness of a few days from ptomaine poisoning. Mrs. Toomey was a noted musician and composer, formerly Gertrude San Souci, and played the big organs at the Buffalo, Chicago and St. Louis expositions. Born in Connecticut, she moved to St. Paul when a girl. She showed an aptitude for the organ and after studying in St. Paul went to Berlin, where she was tutored by Moskowski. Returning to St. Paul she was engaged as organist in the Cathedral there, and Archbishop Ireland often complimented her on her exquisite playing.

She was the author of more than twenty-five songs, and her compositions had the distinction of being the first songs written by an American woman to attain an international distinction. Mrs. Toomey leaves a child, Mary Ruth, two and one-half years old.

Funeral services were held at St. Augustine's Roman Catholic Church, in Weehawken, N. J., and the remains were placed in a receiving vault to be later interred in St. Paul, Minnesota.

A NEW FEATURE FILM COMPANY.

Mr. August Slivenski has secured the sole rights to take moving pictures of the National Ski Jumping Tournament, to be held at Ironwood, Mich., February 15, 16 and 17, 1913. Many amateur and professional ski jumpers will compete. A peculiarly hazardous course has been constructed and, weather conditions permitting, an effort will be made to break the world's ski jumping record of 154 feet. Mr. Slivenski has made arrangement with the Monarch Film Company to take these pictures and expects to secure about 3,000 feet of highly instructive film, which will be offered later to state rights buyers.

PICTURE PERSONALITIES.

The accompanying cut is a very good likeness of Winnifred Greenwood, one of the cleverest dramatic women now attracting attention in motion pictures.

Miss Greenwood is at present, and has been since her debut in the picture business, one of the leading women in the Chicago studio of the Selig Polyscope Company.

Miss Winnifred Greenwood.

Having inherited her fondness for the profession, the art of posing for the amusement of the general public is by no means new to Miss Greenwood, and though still a young woman in her twenties, she possesses an enviable experience of fifteen years, both in traveling shows and stock. Prior to her connections with the Selig forces she managed her own stock company in Fort Wayne, Ind., for two years.

Miss Greenwood's quick rise to prominence and popularity has been little short of marvelous. After watching her work in such productions as "The Last Dance," "Bell Boyd," "Pauline Cushman," "The Millionaire Cowboy," "The Daughter of an Actress," "The Sands of Time," etc., the strong personality and artistic ability of this versatile artist of the silent drama is to be appreciated.

MUNDSTOCK GETS "PALACE OF FLAMES."

Mr. D. Mundstock, of the M. & F. Feature Film Company, Chicago, has secured the exclusive rights for the State of Illinois for Itala's feature subject, "The Palace of Flames," a synopsis of which will be found among the film stories in this issue of the Moving Picture World. Mr. Mundstock has also secured the rights for the Itala's subject, "The Great Aeroplane Disaster." These are two feature subjects of unusual excellence and Mr. Mundstock is to be congratulated upon securing them.

FIFTY OPERATORS WANTED.

The Kinemacolor Company of America, as will be seen by reference to its advertisement, is in need of fifty expert operators. Qualified electricians, it is announced, who can show unquestioned character references, will receive permanent and high-class positions.

"The Open Road" (Reliance)

The newest Reliance release, "The Open Road," gives us all kinds of delightful pictures (drama, romance and comedy) in two wholly interesting reels. The variety of its interest, its unexpected turns and openings and its engagingly human characters make it, when we consider the fact that it is all skillfully woven into one artistic whole, a picture that we take special pleasure in commending as an offering to a public looking for light-hearted, but substantial entertainment.

Its very name will appeal. Most young people are potential vagabonds. When spring comes we are apt to feel more or less emphatically the call that moves the birds. We also want to go forth free-footed and light-hearted; but the world is the world and we have to take things as we find them and so we can only wander in stories. It isn't pleasant to be a tramp, or even a gypsy; but the wandering, wagon stock company—surely, there are good times with it. Cold and hunger? Those things don't come in stories, only the fun and the excitement.

Our young hero, played by Irving Cummings, has got into trouble in the city. He has married an actress, a very pretty woman (played by Nancy Avril) and his father (Ralph Lewis), a fine old gentleman, has sent him packing; it makes a good, well-handled scene. The venial actress also disposes of him, and in short order as soon as she finds that he has been disinherited. At this point, a tramp, in a perfect double exposure vision, tells him of the joys of the open road, and the two start out together. But a tramp's life isn't wholly to the boy's taste; he is anxious to work and this disgusts his new companion, so they part at the wood pile where he is earning his first nickel and a sandwich.

Scene from "The Open Road" (Reliance).

In all these scenes there is much freshness and all are done with taste and discrimination. They are very interesting; but, perhaps, the second reel, which gives the boy's experiences after he has joined a traveling wagon show will be enjoyed more. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is the trump card with these itinerant thespians and the boy is employed to make the snow; he does it well. And the proverbial result follows the good work at snow-making; he gets promoted to be Eliza. The real Eliza is hurt; some of the scenery falls down on her or something of the kind. Someone has to take her place and the boy is the available one, and is chosen. He doesn't want to at first, but the charming ingenue persuades him and for her he would do anything, so he plays the part, though not with entire success. No one in that company was extraordinarily competent as an actor and the night of his premiere, the fruit flies pretty fast. Himself, the girl (Gertrude Robinson), the heavy (George Siegmann), and Ben Tibbett, owner of the Show (E. P. Sullivan), all are pelted off the stage and the show denounced as "bum." It is far enough from being "bum" to be a scream. The company, the play and all concerned, are pictured so delightfully that we suspect some one in the Reliance forces has had experience with just such an outfit and knows all about it. We have never seen such a company; but feel sure that it could not be otherwise. At any rate, it is very human and very amusing.

The melodramatic climax will please, we feel sure. It seems to us particularly fitting to have some such incident in a story like this. The denouement we don't like so well; it is the weakest part of the whole. The son is reconciled with his father by his filial willingness to sacrifice some of his life blood to save the old man's life and this gives a transfusion of blood scene. The ending is a reconciliation in which, since the former marriage has been found illegal and no marriage at all, and the young man has married the ingenue, the father accepts both son and wife back to his paternal roof and care. It is a picture people will like.

O. HENRY STORIES FOR ECLAIR.

While living, O. Henry was generally acknowledged to be one of America's cleverest and most entertaining short story writers. His death seemed a personal loss to most of the American public, since his stories had been read almost universally. He had the knack of putting a peculiar twist into his tales, which gave them unusual power.

O. Henry.

The Eclair Company announce this week that they have secured the exclusive rights to the use of the best of O. Henry's works. This is a fine thing for Eclair, which has already produced such classics as Edgar Allan Poe's "The Raven," Longfellow's "The Old Clock On the Stairs" and Washington Irving's "Spectre Bridegroom." "Robin Hood" was also produced by the American Eclair Company.

PILOT FILMS CORPORATION.

The big "Pilot" plant at Yonkers is at last completed and already has six good one-reel negatives to its credit, with a large stock company working every day turning out more. In conversation with the general manager, Mr. George A. Magie, we learn that the policy of this company is to specialize on dramas and comedies. For the present the plant will only release one a week continuing the early part of February, following soon after with two a week.

The policy of the company will be to turn out pictures of a classic nature. As an illustration of this, their first releases will include one based on a poem by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, called "The Two Glasses," and another is suggested by a poem by Frank Olive, called "The Blacksmith's Story."

It will be remembered that while the Pilot Films Corporation is a new company the people connected with it are not in any sense new to the business. The general manager of the company, Mr. George A. Magie, who has been associated with the Solax Company from its inception, has been for the last three months completing the Pilot plant and gradually forming an organization of some of the best people in the business. This will assure for the new company good high class quality of film without first overcoming the difficulties experienced by the novice. We understand Mr. Magie is leaving in a very few days for an extended trip to the different exchanges to show them the advance copies.

HERE'S THE RYNO FILM COMPANY.

A brand new picture company has been organized by Clarkson P Ryttenberg and Jack Noble under the title Ryno Film Company, with studio and offices at City Island, N. Y. Sadie Weston, formerly leading lady of the Gem Company, has been engaged for leads with the new company. Educational and feature pictures will be the specialty of the new company, interspersed with one-reel dramatic and comedy pictures. Arrangements for the release of "Ryno" pictures has not been announced.

The Continental Film Company, of Seattle, has been incorporated with a capital of $80,000. The incorporators are Edward Curtis, Willis B. Herr and Frank S. Bayley.

Flickers.

THEY talk about London and its fog, but you have to show me, if it has anything on Chicago these dark days. I am in receipt of an invitation extended by Messrs. Eagle and Johnstone, directors of the Selig Polyscope Company, to visit the Selig plant and enjoy the taking of some (what they term) the most spectacular scenes ever taken indoors. One setting includes a full size stage, orchestra and main floor of a theater, which will necessitate using a company of a hundred and fifty or more people. But what's the use of talking about it? The sun has refused to shine in Chicago for the past week, so I have missed the treat.

S. Von Ronkel, of the American Slide & Poster Company, Chicago, is wearing "the smile that won't come off" these days, as a result of the large demand for his new film announcement slide, which he claims to be the best article on the market to-day for advertising releases.

V. R. Day, general manager of the Essanay Company, has memorized the following poem, which he likes to recite:

When the streets are covered with snow,
And your car is broken down,
You are invited to the show,
And must needs walk into town.

Day knows it better than I do, so ask him for a full synopsis. By the way, he is almost entirely recovered from his broken leg, and can now walk around the billiard table without the aid of his stout hickory.

On account of the greatly increased volume of business being handled daily in the offices of the M. & F. Feature Film Company, Chicago, Mr. D. Mundstock, president of the concern, has leased larger and more sumptuous quarters on the first floor of the same building in which he has always been located, 167 W. Washington Street.

The M. & F. company is considered one of the largest and busiest firms dealing in Feature films in Chicago, and have recently acquired the rights for all Gaumont features, including the great sensational film, "The International Conspiracy." Through the columns of this paper, Mr. Mundstock extends a cordial invitation to the trade to visit him in his new home, where you can always enjoy a good picture and a cigar.

O. C. Raeder, of the Imperial Feature Film Company, Indianapolis, arrived in Chicago last week and called at the offices of the Moving Picture World. Mr. Raeder prophesies a very prosperous new year for the Feature film business.

I don't know Joe Hopp's politics, but he is one of the best "progressives" I ever knew. It is a very difficult thing to see Joe about his office in the Standard Film Exchange, on account of his always "trying to do something." He may soon tire of taking his new cane out walking, and then we can see him during business hours.

Phil Soloman, Chicago representative for Warner's Features, walked in to say how do to me, and acquainted us with the fact that the old offices were entirely too small, and in order to handle their increased business, it was necessary to move to larger quarters in the same building. Mr. Soloman claims Warner's "Tracked by Wireless" to be doing a capacity business.

I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. I. Von Ronkel, general manager of the American branch of the General Film Company, Chicago, and after a visit to the different departments of the exchange, we enjoyed a chat and a smoke. When I left I felt as though I had made a good friend.

Mr. Pyle, president of the new Satex Film Company, Texas, which is shortly to release one, three-reel feature per week through Warner's Feature Film Company, is leaving Chicago for Texas and expects the new company to begin operations immediately upon his arrival in Austin.

Mr. Watkins, manager of the DuBrock Feature Film Company, was a caller at the Chicago office of the World, and acquainted us with the fact that Mr. W. C. DuBrock, president of the company, has sold the negative of the three-reel feature, "Boys of the Lost River Basin," to the Foster Features. It is the intention of the DuBrock company to release one feature per week very shortly. MAC.

SCREEN CLUB BALL APRIL 19th.

The Screen Club ball will be held on Saturday evening, April 19th, at Terrace Garden, Fifty-eighth Street and Lexington Avenue. In the place of the usual motion picture entertainment, the club will give a white-face minstrel performance in which the leading stars and players of the photoplay world will take part. William Robert Daly is in charge of this entertainment and will receive suggestions from members of the club. The program is in charge of Charles Abrams, who has already contracted with many of the leading manufacturers for space in the booklet.

Jules Bernstein has charge of the sale of the boxes, which are $50 each.

Tickets to the entertainment and ball will be sold at $2.00, admitting a couple; extra women's tickets cost $1.00 each.

The ball should be the most successful affair of its kind in the history of the motion picture world, and it is anticipated that several thousand dollars will be realized. This fund will lay the foundation for the building of a permanent club house.

Any communication regarding the ball may be addressed to the corresponding secretary, Calder Johnstone, and will receive immediate attention.

JOHN BUNNY IN VAUDEVILLE.

On Monday, Jan. 20, Mr. John Bunny, principal comedian of the Vitagraph Company, began a week's vaudeville engagement at Hammerstein's Victoria Theater, New York City. Although Mr. Bunny has been an actor for thirty years, this is his first appearance as a vaudevillian. As a headliner he is drawing capacity audiences and entertaining them immensely with anecdotes drawn from his experiences in America and Europe as a moving picture actor.

On the opening night a large part of the audience was composed of Mr. Bunny's friends and well-wishers, and at the conclusion of his monologue an enormous floral horseshoe, six feet in height, was carried down the aisle to the stage. It was the gift of the members of the Screen Club, of which Mr. Bunny is the vice-president. This appearance of the Vitagraph's star comedian was brought about by special arrangement between Mr. Wm. Hammerstein and the Vitagraph Company and it is said that Mr. Bunny is to receive $1,000 for his services for the week, and for as many more weeks as he chooses to continue in vaudeville. Each appearance of the rotund fun-maker is a signal for an uproarious ovation, and his act throughout is punctuated with roars of laughter such as only John Bunny is capable of producing.

FROM OHIO TO BEIRUT.

Mr. Charles A. Nassr and Mr. Jack Conant, of the Starline Motion Picture Feature Company of Toledo, Ohio, have recently been in New York City to look over possible features for Ohio and neighboring States. They visited a number of feature concerns in the film districts. Mr. Nassr, whose home office is the Orpheum Theater Building on Superior Street, Toledo, intends in the near future to make a business trip to Asia Minor. Mr. Nassr has been through the big centers of population in this historical country before and is convinced that there is a great future for kinematography in general and progressive American exhibitors in particular. He brought with him on his last trip from Beirut the program of a moving picture theater in that ancient city. The program bears the Turkish tax stamp and is printed in French and in Arabic.

The program is such as might be offered in any American theater and is composed of comic, scenic and dramatic films. One of the pictures shows the famous waterfalls of Elfkarleo in Sweden, proving once more the truly international character of the kinematograph.

BOSTON OFFICE FOR KINEMACOLOR.

The Kinemacolor Company of America has opened a Boston office. This is the second of the branch offices of this company to be established, an office in Cincinnati having been opened several weeks ago. The Boston office is in charge of W. E. Atkinson, and is temporarily located at 162 Tremont Street. It will carry a duplicate stock of the entire output of the Kinemacolor Company of America, as well as all the features from the foreign Kinemacolor producing companies, and will serve all of the New England territory.

The new censorship measure introduced in the Kansas City Council vests the power of supervision in a board composed of one exhibitor and two other members to be suggested to the Mayor by the board of public welfare.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"THE GIRL OF SUNSET PASS" (Lubin).

"The Girl of Sunset Pass" is one of the most pathetic Western stories the Lubin company have made this season. The characters are true to the locality and the atmosphere is typical of Mr. Francis Grandon's favorite work. His pictures are always interesting, truthfully portraying the erratic and daring life of the men who have made the great West.

Widow Brown and her little daughter Ruth go to the little town of Sunset Pass. The widow plays the piano in a dance hall. She has consumption, but bravely works on and never complains of her sickness. She dies at her post and the little girl is left alone. The day that the mother is buried, Ruth plays "Nearer My God to Thee." Big Bill, the owner of the dance hall, is about to eject her for playing the hymn when Jack Keen, the squarest gambler in Sunset Pass informed all present that in the future Ruth would be his adopted daughter and demanded respect. Jack sent Ruth to school at Sacramento where she met Ned Burton, the minister's son. They were sweethearts for a while and when Ned proposed, Ruth said "Yes." But at the wedding ceremony her thoughts were of Uncle Jack and she broke away and hurried back to the man who really had her heart.

GAUMONT TO ISSUE WEEKLY GRAPHIC.

With a view to serving exhibitors better, the Gaumont Company, beginning Tuesday, January 28, will publish weekly the Gaumont Graphic in an enlarged form. In its present state it is a semi-monthly paper. Its present limitations of space forbids giving information the exhibitor wants. The paper will contain synopses and pages containing pictures and outlines of film stories, which can be detached and used for lobby display. The Graphic will also have a large page which will give the contents of the Gaumont Weekly, which also may be detached and hung outside theaters to attract business.

While not attempting to compete with the trade journals in matters of general news, the editors of the Graphic will try to give to its pages sprightliness not attempted in contemporary publications of its class. The paper will be issued free to any and all exhibitors. The editor will be glad to receive literary contributions, it being understood that they are gratis.

This paper will be edited by John B. Clymer, manager of sale and advertising. Contributing editors will be Frank E. Holliday, managing editor of the Gaumont Weekly, and Carl Holliday, director of the Gaumont educational department.

"MAX JOINS THE GIANTS" (C. G. P. C.).

Max Linder is still in pursuit of his ideal girl. This time the adventure is entitled "Max Joins the Giants." It is produced by C. G. P. C. with the customary excellent photography and will be released on January 28th.

Max, who has had to contend only with the difficulty of overcoming father's dislike, now finds that the girl of his dreams objects to him because of his small stature. To increase his heighth he tries walking upon stilts, but the experiment proves damaging to his bones and to the furniture in the room in which he practices. And so he discards the stilts and falls to reading a newspaper in which his eye is attracted by the claims of Professor Builder, who has a machine by the use of which people are lengthened or fattened according to their needs or their tastes. Max buys one of the machines, which has a throttle which is to be used one way to increase the heighth and another way for increasing the breadth. The professor moves the handle and Max's heighth doubles. He is pleased, buys the machine and gains admittance to the home of his beloved. To prove that he can grow taller at will he offers to demonstrate the working of the new machine to his prospective father-in-law. This is agreeable, for father is a short man himself. Max, in the excitement moves the handle the wrong way. Father notices that the floor seems to have moved up nearer to him, and enraged, he chases Max around the room, both of them looking very much like dwarfs and the situation is uproariously funny. It will be released on January 28th and our advice is to book it.

Scene from "Max Joins the Giants" (C. G. P. C.).

MAJESTIC IN ST. PAUL HAS NEW MANAGER.

Mr. Basil S. Courtney, a recent visitor to New York, has been appointed manager of the Majestic Theater in St. Paul, Minn., and has entered upon his new duties. Mr. Courtney is one of the best known film men in the Northwest and has piloted many feature attractions through that section and through the greater part of Canada.

ECONOMIZERS IN YONKERS, N. Y.

J. H. Hallberg reports that he has sold to A. E. Hamilton, Yonkers, N. Y., two of his large 60 amp. a. c. to d. c. Economizers. These are so constructed that they can be operated together, and where it is desired to have a specially powerful light, as for kinemacolor work, up to 120 amperes d. c. at the arc is bad. When operated separately each Economizer gives anywhere up to 60 amperes. These are special built devices, made under Mr. Hallberg's own specifications.

CINES AND ECLIPSE RELEASES.

"The Bulgarian Army in the Balkans" is the title of the Eclipse-Kleine release for January 29, 1913. It shows the Bulgarian forces near the town of Jardzello at the time of the beginning of hostilities with Turkey. Many inspiring views of the troops in their preparations for war are depicted, including the forward movement of the infantry and cavalry, mounted and dismounted target practice, a charge of the cavalry, the regiment fording a river and a splendid review of the troops by Tsar Ferdinand. The whole world has been astounded at the fighting ability displayed by these armies of the Balkan states in their encounters with the Turkish forces; how they have beaten time and again the "Terrible Turk," who has been considered almost invincible upon the battlefield. Judging from the fearless riding and the wonderful precision with which their drills and marches are executed as is shown in this film, the Bulgarian soldiers have few superiors, if any. Now that negotiations for peace have been declared off and the war is about to begin again in earnest, this film will prove of added topical interest.

The Bulgarian Army in the Balkans.

On the same reel is a screaming comedy entitled "Hubby Does the Cooking." As the story goes, hubby gets disgusted with the bill of fare at home, and decides to fire the cook, and prepare the meals himself. He sails in with great gusto, but after spoiling every dish he attempts, smashing a large quantity of crockery, and upsetting the contents of the frying pan upon himself, he is forced to call upon his wife for assistance and promises never to venture into the kitchen again. The action in this subject is fast and furious and should be followed by peals of laughter from the audiences.

For the Tuesday Cines, Kleine's release, "A Lesson from the Past," is a tender story of an old aunt's love and devotion to her niece in her time of trouble. Aunt Betty is a charming old lady, who having tasted the bitterness of disappointed love, does not wish to see others suffer in the same manner. She heartily sympathizes with Margaret, her niece, who comes to her tearfully relating that the father of her fiance refuses to sanction their engagement. The dear old lady gets busy immediately and skillfully arranges a reconciliation. The acting of all the characters, especially that of Miss Ida Talli, who takes the part of Aunt Betty, is extremely effective and shows much delicate shading. This is one of the best Cines subjects of the kind ever produced.

For the Saturday Cines, "The Doctor's Love Affair" tells of an army surgeon who for a long time is unsuccessful in his suit for the love of Louise, a neighbor's daughter. His gentleness and quiet resignation when he sees that his cause is almost hopeless is very effective and when love does finally come into his life, we are most willing to rejoice with him in his happiness. The part of the doctor is very well taken by Mr. G. Serena, one of the leading Cines actors.

On the same reel is "The Beautiful Falls of Marmore," situated in Central Italy. We are shown the soul-inspiring views of the tranquil Lake Piediluco and the exquisite beauty of the Falls of Marmore, with its foaming waters surging at the foot of the green canyon walls.

THANHOUSER PLAYERS GO WEST.

James Cruze, Miss Marguerite Snow, Thomas A. Heffron and Miss Victory Bateman have left New York for the Pacific Coast, to join one of the Thanhouser companies working in California.

"IN THE CLAWS OF THE LEOPARD" (Gaumont).

In this two-reel subject Gaumont gives us one of the most thrilling of personal combats with wild animals that has been shown on the screen. The leopard we here see appears to be ferocious. There is nothing in its manner which indicates gentleness in even remote degree. The woman who plays the role of Mrs. Warest, the widow who is the object of the wrath of the conspirators trying to deprive her of her inheritance, unquestionably has more acquaintance with animals than with the camera, but she seems to fear neither.

Warest, a prospector, is struck down by fever just after he has become convinced of the existence of a vein of gold in a concession he holds in Rhodesia. After his death two men try to obtain possession of his holding. They offer the widow £1,000 for the property. Mrs. Warest, after consideration, decides that she will have a survey of the property made by an expert, and holds the offer in abeyance. Accompanied by an old friend of her husband, she sets out for the property. Prior to their arrival word is received in camp that some wild animal has carried off its second victim. Measures are taken to prevent further raids at night. The presence of the marauder gives the two conspirators an idea. They plan to leave open a window in the mine house and then entice the widow there at night, on the plea that she will learn something to her advantage by so doing, as a conspiracy is on foot. Accordingly a letter is conveyed to Mrs. Warest on her arrival. A bait is arranged in the mine house to attract the devouring beast. The conspirators engage Jack in a card game so that they may the better watch him.

Late at night Mrs. Warest mounts a horse and rides the three miles to the mine house and stealthily enters. She looks warily through the rooms in her search for the evidence that her expert is about to betray her interests. The panther is shown stealing around the house and then leaping to the roof. He enters through the window and comes upon Mrs. Warest. There is a fierce struggle as the two roll about the floor.

Back in camp, Jack becomes suspicious that all is not well with the widow of his old friend. He leaves his two companions, after an altercation, and goes to the quarters of Mrs. Warest. He finds on the floor the decoy letter, and immediately set out for the mine house. When he arrives there he hears the sound of combat on the inside and draws his pistol. He enters and shoots the leopard. The woman's garments are badly torn and she is badly hurt. After a day's nursing the victim of the leopard is able to return to camp. There Jack accuses the conspirators. He shoots one. The other escapes, and Jack pursues him. A stirring horseback chase follows. The second conspirator is shot out of his saddle.

BUFFALO JONES' FAREWELL APPEARANCE.

Those who have never had the pleasure of hearing the thrilling lecture of Col. Charles J. (Buffalo) Jones, in conjunction with his extraordinary set of motion pictures on the subject of "Lassoing Wild Animals in Africa," will do well to avail themselves of what will be the last opportunity to do so. In response to many requests, the J. B. Pond Lyceum Bureau, of New York, has induced Col. Jones to come East from his ranch in New Mexico and fulfill an engagement of two evenings only. The lectures will be given in Carnegie Hall, New York City; the first one on Monday evening, January 27, and the second on the evening of Wednesday, January 29.

Col. Jones has definitely decided to retire from the lecture field and devote his time to his business interests. With his retirement from the platform will pass one of the greatest visual proofs of human bravery that the world has ever seen. His deeds of daring have far outdone the vivid imaginations of Wild-West fiction writers, and his cinematographic records of them have caused spectators in every stratum of society to hang on to their seats and hold their breath.

RAVER STAYS WITH FILM SUPPLY.

Rumor has had it for some few weeks past that Secretary and General Manager Harry R. Raver, of the Film Supply Company, was entertaining a proposition to ally himself with one of the Film Supply Company's opposition.

A number of attractive propositions have been laid before Mr. Raver, but in each case he has declined to entertain them, and he sets at rest all rumor by his emphatic denial of any contemplated change of association by him.

Mr. Raver will continue in his present capacity as secretary and general manager of the Film Supply Company of America.

"THE BEASTS OF THE JUNGLE" (Solax).

This latest Solax release depends for its reputation upon the fact that so many wild animals are used. There is no doubt that this introduces many new features which are deserving of commendation and encouragement. Great geographical license is also shown in that the scenes are laid in both India and Africa. An American engineer residing in India, the country of the elephant, allows his daughter to be taken for a ride on the back of one of these intelligent animals, which carries her into the jungle, where she dismounts and, after wandering for a little while, enters a rude but in which a tiger had been trapped. The situation seems a terrible one until it is realized that the girl successfully controls so wild a beast, even to the extent of making a pet of it, so that when she is discovered by her distracted parents the tiger is taken home and becomes a family pet.

Scene from "Beasts of the Jungle" (Solax).

In the African Transvaal, where the engineer has been commissioned to build a railroad, the family again find themselves surrounded by other denizens of the forest. The disappearance of one or two laboring natives suggests the prowling visits of a man-eating lion. After a period of watching, the king of beasts makes his appearance when they are totally unprepared for him; the pet tiger serves as a messenger, carrying a note attached to his collar, and thus secures help. A thrilling scene is now the climax of this picture. Having only blank cartridges, they only succeed in keeping the infuriated beast at bay while they escape from room to room ere he breaks down the door and enters the house; the family, escaping by the rear window, are now able to barricade the door from the outside, thus imprisoning the lion, and, being without weapons with which to kill him, they set fire to the building as the only means of destroying the monster and securing their escape. Now, apparently freed from all danger, the family again lives in peace, the little girl continuing to fondle the tiger as a family pet.

The whole subject is well treated, and many difficult situations caused by the animals are creditably handled. The Solax company have done well in their endeavor to break the monotony of the common picture by introducing these animal performers, which gives a new touch of interest, which without doubt will be well received.

RECRUITS FOR KINEMACOLOR COMPANY.

E. S. MacDonald and E. R. Powell are two recent additions to the executive staff of the Kinemacolor Company of America. Mr. MacDonald, formerly credit man for Spencer Kellogg & Sons, is working out the details of certain improvements in the routine work of the Kinemacolor Company of America, especially in the shipping department, the great increase in the volume of business being done rendering this systematization necessary. Mr. Powell, who was formerly in the banking business in Buffalo, where he gained much reputation as a system man, will have charge of the film service department of the Kinemacolor Company of America.

---

Word comes from Arizona that the Selig Company, which has been working in Colorado, has moved to Prescott, Ariz., where it will get the real Indian atmosphere and scenery.

A NOTABLE WESTERN PICTURE.

The Cheyenne Feature Film Company, a new firm in the motion picture field under the general management of Mr. Frank J. Carroll, with New York offices at 1482 Broadway, is offering a realistic presentation of life on a cattle ranch under the title of "The Curse of the Southwest." This picture deals graphically with the cattle rustler and his methods, together with the means adopted by the victims of his depredations to discourage that peculiar form of acquiring other people's property. An interesting story has been woven into the incidents of the chase and capture of the cattle rustlers, which enhances the value of the picture. There is lots of excitement, plenty of good scenic effects and good photography combined to make this a picture that is worth while. A synopsis of this subject will be found among the film stories.

Scene from "The Curse of the Southwest" (Cheyenne).

"SAVED BY AIRSHIP" (Reliance).

On Wednesday, January 29th, the Reliance will release a sensational drama of more than ordinary interest, entitled "Saved by Airship." It is without doubt the first play ever staged in the history of the drama in which the stage director and all the actors, including the leading lady, Miss Marion Ferel, actually made flights in aeroplanes during the action of the story.

The experienced airmen, Harry Bingham Brown and Leo Stevens, assisted the director, Eustace Hale Ball, and did the actual operating of the aeroplanes, taking the different members of the company as passengers.

As a climax a launch was blown up with gunpowder, Miss Rosanna Forbes of the Reliance company diving over the side of the boat and remaining in the water until rescued by the dare-devil thrill-maker, Rodman Law, who hung by his hands from the skids of an aeroplane making sixty miles an hour and jumped into the ocean, saving the girl by swimming with her dress held firmly between his teeth.

"Saved by Airship" is intensely dramatic from curtain to curtain and is of interest from a story as well as a spectacular standpoint.

NOTES FROM THE STUDIOS.

Thomas H. Ince, director of the Kay-Bee Company, now located at Los Angeles, Cal., is reputed to be one of the highest salaried producers, receiving $500 a week and a percentage of the receipts of the Kay-Bee Company.

Manager Aubrey M. Kennedy, of the Western Universal, has been quite sick.

Mr. F. E. Randolph, who has gone to the Hawaiian Islands to take charge of the Universal Company there, was one of the scenario writers at Universal ranch.

The Sioux Indians employed in the Kay-Bee and Broncho companies receive from $7 to $10 per week and their expenses, while the chiefs, one for each five, are responsible for their various bands, and are paid from $10 to $12 per week.

In "His Ideal of Power," Director MacDonald, of the Powers Company, is putting out a powerful picture. There are one or two scenes on the stock exchange which are impelling in their intensity. Edwin August has a splendid part in this production and one that suits him down to the ground.

"THE PRISONER OF ZENDA" IS COMPLETED.

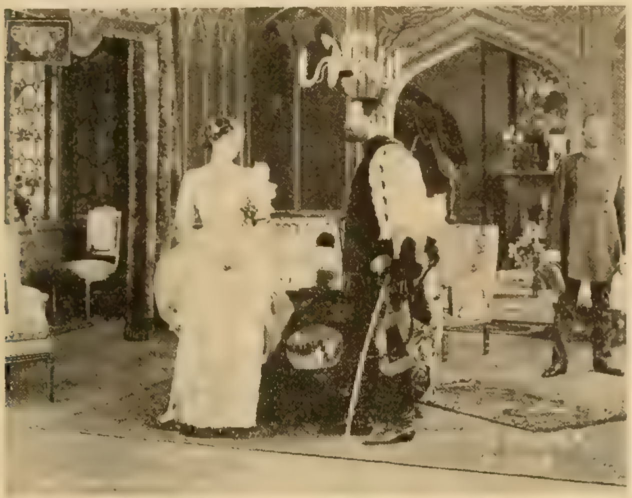
The filming of "The Prisoner of Zenda" is finished, and the picture is now being shown to buyers. James K. Hackett, who played the dual role of Rudolph Rassendyl and of the King of Ruritania, is much pleased with the production; in fact, he is so enthusiastic that he says he considers the screen version in many respects superior to that of the stage. Daniel Frohman, the managing director of the Famous Players, also admits that to him there is a greater appeal in the picture than in the "legitimate" production. Mr. Hackett admits that he has learned much that will be of future value to him through seeing himself "as ithers see him," and is convinced that his experience in moving pictures will result in wider understanding of stage technique.



Scene from "The Prisoner of Zenda."

Joseph Carl Briel, author of "The Climax" and the composer of the music for the Bernhardt "Queen Elizabeth" picture, is now writing music for "The Prisoner of Zenda."

Ethel Barrymore will occupy the stage of the Famous Players' studio in Twenty-sixth Street directly after the close of her present engagement. Mr. Frohman took a trip to Philadelphia last week to talk over with Miss Barrymore plans for her forthcoming appearance before the camera.

For "The Prisoner of Zenda" there is an elaborate line of paper. There are nine styles, ranging from a half sheet up to a twenty-four. In quality these are said to excel the "Elizabeth" lithographs.

PICTURE AND STAGE REALISM.

A dozen years ago when Thomas A. Edison said the time would come when an audience would sit through an evening and see a play in pictures, there were very few who believed they would see the day. But that day is now at hand. There have been several productions—such as Dante's Inferno, The Odyssey and African hunts and Polar hardships—that have required an evening in which to be shown, but these were not dramas. They were also made in foreign lands. It has remain for America to make the first real drama in motion pictures. Although the play is a motion picture adaptation of Victorien Sardou's tragedy of Cleopatra, and the entire production was photographed upon a platform in the wilds of New Jersey, the settings are so well conceived that a perfect illusion is created, and the spectator would believe he is looking upon photographs made in literal Egypt. It would be impracticable if not impossible for a regular stage production to stimulate so well this Egyptian realism.

Miss Helen Gardner, a young actress who has become well known to the whole world through her characterization in motion pictures, is the brave pioneer who undertook and so successfully carried out this great piece of work. The story was adapted and directed by Charles L. Gaskill. It requires one hour and forty minutes to project the picture on a screen. The picture is divided into five parts, corresponding to the old fashioned dramaturgy which required a tragedy to be told in five acts. The dramatic and sequential interest of the pictured play is so intense that audiences sit through the whole period of projection without going out between the acts. Such a thing has been said to be impossible of achievement in motion pictures. There is no wait between the parts, immediately after the interscriptive announces the end of one part another interscriptive is flashed upon the screen announcing the part following.

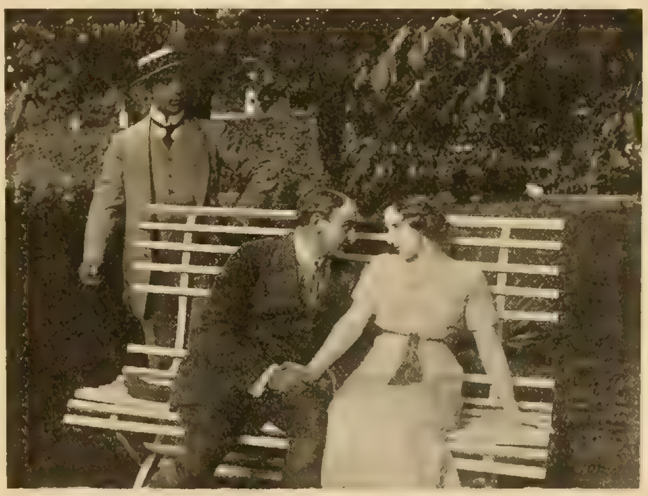
It is a significant fact that motion picture realism is greater than any stage realism could be made, undoubtedly owing to the fact that the photographs in the motion picture disclose absolutely none of the craftsmanship of the stage carpenter and scene painter, and are therefore accepted as photographs of the actual scene. Given actors who can lose themselves in their parts, and costumes that do not betray the time and environment, the illusion of the picture is greater than the illusion of the stage play.

Perhaps it is here lies the real power of the motion picture. Irving carried stage realism as far as it is possible to go, but nevertheless there was the proscenium, there was the breathing actor stepping into the scene from the wing, there were the artificial lights, and even the orchestra was a part of it all. Only by the most powerful artistry of the actor could the audience be made to forget for brief moments the artificiality of it all. The motion picture, on the contrary, is a section of what appears to be the actual place.

"AN AVIATOR'S GENEROSITY" (Great Northern).

This is an exciting and interesting story which carries the spectator skyward as the plot is being evolved. There are real aeroplanes in action, and the race for the championship is said to be one of the most realistic ever presented in motion pictures.

Vidart, an aviator, and his sister are the only occupants of the old family estate, but the brother becomes involved in debt and has recourse to a professional money lender. The day for payment arrives and young Vidart finds that he has not sufficient money to meet his note. He has recourse to his guardian, but as his yearly allowance already has been overdrawn he is refused any further money. In the meantime he has entered into an agreement to compete with Aubert, another celebrated birdman, for a prize of $2,500 and the championship. The aviators are close friends, and Aubert is introduced to Elsa, the sister of Vidart. It is a case of love at first sight, and they have frequent meetings. Before the great race, however, Vidart discovers that Aubert has another sweetheart, and thereupon compels his sister to send a letter renouncing him. Vidart accuses Aubert of bad faith, and the two part on bad terms. Before the race the former is granted an extension of time on his note, with the understanding that should he win the money lender is to be reimbursed at once. His sister learns of this and hastens to Aubert, with the request that he lose the race for her sake. At first he is inclined to be resentful, but upon seeing that Elsa still wears a locket that he had given her he consents to be content with second prize.



Scene from "An Aviator's Generosity" (Great Northern).

Then comes the exciting race in midair between the two rival birdmen. The machines are plainly visible, and one scene is taken from another aeroplane. Below the spectators are all excitement, with field glasses pointed skyward, and in the end Vidart reaches the ground first and is proclaimed the winner. His sister is in company with Aubert in the hangar when her brother enters with the prize money and the medal. She takes the latter from him and pins it on the breast of the man she loves, with the explanation of how he had sacrificed the race. A reconciliation follows, and Aubert and Elsa become engaged.

CORRESPONDENCE

NEW ENGLAND.

THE Silver Theater, Waterville, Me., is doing a most pleasing business, and it has found it unnecessary to provide any vaudeville to secure trade. The pictures are very well selected by the management.

Charles Gorman reports that his new theater at Roslindale, Mass., has been doing very nicely since its opening on Saturday, December 28th. The house, which is called the Roslindale Theater, is a neat, cozy house, and should do well.

W. H. Wolffe, of the Scenic Temple Theater, Paragon Park, started the building of his new theater at Allerton, Hull, Mass., when he broke ground on January 5th. Mr. Wolffe is erecting a thoroughly modern and up-to-date theater, to seat 700. Every one knowing Mr. Wolffe's methods of doing things expects to see a winner at Hull. The theater should be open on Decoration Day.

Kincaid's Theater, Quincy, Mass., has been finding business very good since its recent opening, and this house should prove a money-maker. The theater has switched from Association to Mutual service.

Frank Vine, who severed his connection with the General Film Company's Boston offices some time ago, has returned to his former position.

New Bedford, Mass., lost a good picture theater on January 6th, when the Orpheum changed its policy from photoplays and vaudeville to stock company attractions. This theater is the finest in New Bedford and will probably revert to pictures before very long.

The Scenic Temple, Chelsea, Mass., opened again on January 6th, under the management of Elbridge Campbell, a brother of Harry F. Campbell, one of New England's most widely known picture men. The Scenic Temple has not scored a pronounced success thus far—in fact, it has been a consistent loser. Under the new management it is believed that a far different showing will be made. The policy is pictures and songs. Elbridge Campbell was formerly assistant manager of the big Shawmut Theater, Roxbury.

Manager Toomey knows how to take a loser and make a money-maker out of it, and he proved his undoubted ability in this direction last September, when he acquired Keith's Theater, Brockton, Mass., in the Campello district. This house is now playing to full houses to Mr. Toomey's picture programs, while the reels were formerly exhibited to empty seats.

The happiest manager in this section seems to be John Levey, of the Superb Theater, Jamaica Plain, Mass. Why? Mrs. Levey has returned home, after a seven weeks' visit to Wilkes-Barre and Buffalo.

James E. Moore's theater at Biddeford, Me., finds that vaudeville did not add much of anything to his business, and the theater is now on a straight picture policy.

Manager Cuddy of the opera house, Augusta, Me., finds business good, and at that the opera house does not present vaudeville.

A new incorporation is the Mitchell H. Mark Realty Corporation of Albany, N. Y. Mitchell H. Mark, Moe Mark and E. L. Falk, of Buffalo, N. Y., are the promoters. Moe Mark is the owner of the Theater Comique, Lynn, Mass. "Mitch" Mark is very widely known to the New England trade, as being the first man to build a really representative photoplay house in this section—the Comique Theater, Scollay Square, Boston.

S. Z. Poli's new Theater De Luxe, devoted to vaudeville and pictures, opened in Bridgeport, Conn., December 23rd, to a capacity audience. This theater represents an investment of nearly a million dollars and is probably the finest house on the Poli chain. S. Z. Poli occupied a box with some members of his family, and many city and state officials were also present. After the performance a dinner of appreciation was tendered Mr. Poli at the Hotel Stratfield. The new theater has been entrusted to the able hands of S. J. Breen, one of Mr. Poli's star men. The house will no doubt be a big winner.

Manager Knight of the Bijou Theater is making a most pleasing show, and this Springfield, Mass., photoplay house is one of the most popular in the city. Mr. Knight recently entertained 300 members of the Boys' Club at the Bijou, where an especially fine bill of pictures was given.

The National Theater, Boston, announces that Edward Healy, a pupil of the John A. Andrew school, South Boston, has been awarded the pony and cart for winning the Grammar School Popularity Contest, held during the past three months by the theater.

Manager James H. Donovan has engaged the services of Prof. Hammond as lecturer for his Central Square Theater, Lynn, Mass. Prof. Hammond is a well-known picture talker and has had years of experience in this line. Manager Donovan reports excellent business with pictures and songs, which was not the case when vaudeville was given last year.

The employes of the Nickel Theater, Lawrence, Mass., presented J. Fred Lovett with a French clock on Christmas morning. On that day Manager Lovett gave a free entertainment to the inmates of the county jail, which was greatly appreciated by the unfortunate prisoners.

J. F. Boylen is having some trouble with the new theater he is building at Taunton, Mass., and it is not expected to be completely finished before February 1st.

Fred Mardo, the well-known vaudeville agent, booking acts into many New England photoplay houses, is now recovering from a severe illness.

The first convention of I. A. T. S. E. was held at Worcester, Mass., December 29th, 1912. Practically every New England local was represented.

Manager Jack Levey of the Superb Theater, Jamaica Plain, Mass., held a charity entertainment for the Jewish Orphans' Home last Sunday.

The Lyric Theater, Beverly, Mass., is playing to good business, and changed ownership the first of the year.

There is a movement on foot to rebuild White's Opera House, Concord, N. H., and to make of it a fine modern and fireproof theater, to hold about 1,500. Manager Adams is looking into this matter very carefully.

Manager McIntyre of the Pavilion Theater, Barre, Vt., sends word that his business is booming on a policy of vaudeville and pictures.

On Wednesday, January 1st, the Broadway Theater, Everett, Mass., ran a special program, starting at 10:30 P. M. Admission was by invitation only, to the Mayor of Everett, the Aldermen and Councilmen. A specially prepared program of vaudeville and pictures was given, accompanied by real Havana cigars. The officials voted they had had a most enjoyable time. Manager "Nate" Brown finds business very satisfactory, with bills of vaudeville and pictures. Mr. Brown is considered one of the ablest managers in New England.

George Appleby, representative of the Boston offices of the Mutual Corporation, jumped to Bellows Falls, Vt., recently and closed contracts with several houses that are to be supplied with Mutual service.

There is a rumor about that both William Fox and Marcus Loew are more than willing to give Bridgeport, Conn., a new theater to be devoted to vaudeville and pictures, provided a suitable location is available. Representatives of both men were in Bridgeport looking the ground over.

The old S. Z. Poli theater, Bridgeport, Conn., is now known as the Plaza, and on Monday, January 6th, changed its policy to vaudeville and pictures. This house had formerly been running to a straight bill of vaudeville, giving only two shows daily.

S. Z. Poli frequently finds it necessary to switch his house managers about, due to the fact that he has opened several new theaters this fall. M. Vanni was in charge of the Poli Theater, New Haven, Conn., as Edward Shields had resigned, but now Matt Saunders has succeeded Mr. Vanni. S. J. Breen is handling Poli's new theater at Bridgeport, having been transferred from Springfield. The old Poli Theater at Bridgeport, now called the Plaza, is in charge of W. I. Dillenbeck, formerly manager of the Nelson Theater, Springfield.

Toronto, Canada, is to have a new theater to be devoted to vaudeville and pictures, according to a Boston report. It is stated that the Miles Company of New York, together with Lawrence Solman, is about to erect a theater on the site now occupied by the Ontario Veterinary College. The work will be started next July, and will cost a quarter of a million dollars, if the rumor is correct.

The new Shrine Theater, Rutland, Vt., built by local Masons, is nearly ready for its opening. This theater is thoroughly modern and seats about 1,200, all on the ground floor.

W. Edward Seybel, representing the General Film Company, of 200 Fifth Avenue, New York, spent last week in Boston. Mr. Seybel visited many of the moving picture houses in the interests of his concern, and hopes to land some houses for the Boston offices of the company.

On Tuesday, January 7, at 2 P. M., the regular monthly meeting of the Massachusetts branch of the Exhibitors' League of America was held at Boston. About forty members were present, and Charles Buckley presided, as President Joseph Mack was called away on business relative to the Association. A bill will be introduced into the present session of the Legislature relative to the "twenty minute law." This law reads that no Massachusetts theater may project motion pictures for more than twenty minutes, without having five minutes of some other form of entertainment. The new bill, sanctioned by the League, has an amendment, calling for "one hour" to be inserted where "twenty minutes" now appears. A member of the League voted to introduce a bill asking that photoplay houses be allowed to use scenery. This idea was voted down by the members, as it was deemed most advisable to introduce one bill only at this session. The local union of the moving picture operators is perfectly willing that the twenty minute bill be repealed, and the League secured this O. K. before entering the bill.

Charles Gorman, formerly with the Mutual Film Corporation, has opened an office for the promotion of amusement enterprises. His first move was the opening of the new Roslindale Theater, Roslindale, Mass., on Monday, December 28. Since its opening, this cozy, up-to-date theater has been playing to excellent business. Mr. Gorman is well known in these parts, and, while with the Mutual folks, landed some good houses for them, chief among them being B. F. Keith's National Theater, Boston, the largest theater in the world devoted to vaudeville and pictures.

As was stated recently in these columns, the General Film Company, Mutual Film Corporation, and the New England Universal exchange, were forced to look for other quarters in Boston, owing to a law regarding the keeping of large quantities of films in the business district. The General Film Exchange has now fitted up new offices at 218 Commercial street. This location is distinctly out of the way for the licensed exhibitor, but the new law must be blamed for this. The Universal folks have found temporary headquarters in Park Square, and have leased the old Pekin Theater, Castle Square, which will eventually become the permanent home of Universal films as soon as the needed alterations are made at the Pekin. The Mutual Corporation is still at its old headquarters at 32 Boylston street.

The Boston offices of the General Film Company evidently desire to do whatever they can to promote the interests of their clients. At the meeting of the Massachusetts Exhibitors' League, a letter was read stating that the General Film folks had installed a private telephone booth, with an operator, for the sole use of licensed exhibitors.

The new Empire Theater, Chelsea, Mass., threw open its doors on Saturday, January 4. This house may easily be called a truly representative theater, built for the exploitation of vaudeville and pictures. It is thoroughly modern in construction and strictly fireproof, and with a splendid location on the Main street, in the heart of the business district, should prove a winner. N. M. Johnson, a most capable manager, has charge of the Empire.

There is a well-founded rumor about that the Beacon Theater Company, Jacob Lowrie, general manager and president, has secured the Shawmut Theater, Roxbury, Mass. According to report, a deal was made and agreed to, and then the owners of the Shawmut decided they would not care to sell. This rumor has not been verified.

David B. Matthews, chairman of a committee appointed to investigate the character and morality of moving picture theaters at Brockton, Mass., has made his report. Mr. Matthews has found that moving pictures generally being presented deal too frequently with drinking and bar-rooms, and with revolvers, shooting affairs and holdups. This defect was the only adverse feature embodied in Mr. Matthews' report, as the gentleman states that the shows in Brockton compare very favorably with those being presented in other cities. "It would be hard to find a city where the general character of the pictures averaged higher than they do here," says Mr. Matthews. Moving pictures are doing an infinite amount of good, is the belief of the investigating committee. Mr. Matthews is well pleased with the results of the National Board of Censorship, but cannot understand why they allow so many pictures to pass where shooting and drinking seem to be featured. A resolution was adopted unanimously to the effect that Mayor Hickey be asked to appoint a local board of censorship. Mr. Matthews, in his report, made many admirable statements about motography, that our space does not permit us to quote. However, here are samples of the esteem in which motion pictures are held by Mr. Matthews: "After a careful consideration and investigation of moving pictures, I have now come to the conclusion, against my previous conceptions, that there is nothing that can be used to greater advantage in the education of our children than the pictures. I have no hesitancy in saying that I believe that if they were used in the public schools to teach certain subjects, they would be of great value in the reduction of the school period. Economic and sociological reforms will be accomplished much more quickly if they are presented to the eye, instead of to the ear. The words 'against my previous conception,' are of great interest, proving, as they do, that the picture shows its worth every time, provided the matter is looked into. The trouble is that many reformers simply proceed, guided by their previous and ignorant prejudice, without giving motography a chance to prove its right to praise."

H. C. Frank was re-elected business agent of the Moving Picture Operators' Union, Boston Local. M. Goodman is elected president; James F. Burke, vice-president; Harry Danto, financial secretary; J. C. Mandeville, corresponding secretary; T. C. Barrows, treasurer. The executive board is now composed of the following: M. Goodman, J. F. Burke, J. C. Mandeville, S. Asher, H. C. Frank and Harry Danto. Mr. Burke, the newly elected vice-president, and Business Agent Frank, were elected delegates to the convention of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees at Seattle, Washington, next July. W. Benoit, William Wheeler and H. Gilbert were elected delegates to the Boston C. L. U.

Joseph Mack, manager of the Hub Theater, has put over a good one by securing Peter J. McNally as lecturer on the pictures. Mr. McNally is undoubtedly gifted as a lecturer, and to make it even better, is well known in Boston.

These columns have told of the plan on foot to secure later train service out of Boston, in order to accommodate the theater-goers. The result of the meeting held some time ago is that the extra train service has been secured.

A law in St. John, N. B., Canada, to the effect that no child under ten could attend moving picture theaters at matinee performances, unless accompanied by adults, raised strong protests to the government by both parents and managers of moving picture theaters. The government has amended this law, so that children under ten may attend the photoplay theaters if accompanied by older children. St. John has a moving picture censorship board all its own, which entered upon its duties January 1, 1913.

The news filters down to Boston from Toronto, Canada, that the police commissioners have no longer anything at all to do with the theatrical business of that city. William Banks, a newspaper man, has been appointed as censor on a good salary.

The Bijou theater, Lawrence, is closed at present, but it is soon to be reopened, according to report.

George H. Rogers, an employee of the Empire theater, Boston, and thirty-five years old, shot and killed himself on January 2. Rogers had been employed at the Empire for about two months, and had given satisfaction. The cause of the suicide is unknown.

The Majestic theater, Burlington, Vermont, reports excellent business, on a straight picture program; the vaudeville acts formerly used, having been eliminated. The Majestic is a first-class house, and rated as one of the best in that state.

Pawtucket, R. I., seems to be a strong "independent" town, as there are four houses using that service, as against one licensed house, B. F. Keith's theater.

Manager Hiram Abrams, of the Portland theater, Portland, Me., gave a long and instructive entertainment, consisting of moving pictures, to the pupils of the State School, that city, on January 2. A vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Abrams for his generosity.

Manager James Donovan, of the Central Square, Lynn, Mass., is about to add some vaudeville to his good picture programs, according to report.

Loew's South End theater, Boston, has inaugurated an extensive advertising campaign in the Boston dailies, in the interests of its vaudeville and picture programs at five and ten cents admission.

The Massachusetts Optical Society held a meeting in Boston this week, at which W. W. Harmon stated as his belief that moving pictures will soon be obliged to discover some method of giving color in the films or "give up their business as conducted along present lines." Mr. Harmon, who is called an expert in astigmatism, feels that the present "crude light vibrations are certainly productive of nervous headaches." The whole cause of these nervous disorders lies in the fact that "the rays of light producing the moving pictures are totally lacking in color." Mr. Harmon is a devotee of Kinemacolor pictures, as he remarks that "it has been found that the eye, wearied by the glare and flicker of black and white subjects, experiences a sense of relief whenever Kinemacolor pictures are witnessed." The whole of Mr. Harmon's remarks may not be quoted here, due to lack of space, but they are extremely technical. At all events, the idea of Mr. Harmon's is a new one, and, if something must be said against motography, we had rather see something along these lines, rather than the old-time song that the pictures are immoral and indecent!

Boston held another meeting this week that took cinematography as the chief topic of conversation. The Associated Charities of Boston published a long article relative to conditions in moving picture theaters. The results of this particular investigation seemed to show that "conditions were far less discouraging than we expected to find." The committee found the theaters well constructed for the most part—well heated and ventilated. The fire protection was also well up to the mark. In the character of the performances themselves the investigators were most agreeably surprised. The only cerommendation was to the effect that the managers should help to make a good thing even better, by introducing educational, historical and geographical subjects. Which matter should be taken up with the film makers, by the way.

The Child Welfare League, in connection with the Associated Charities of Boston, is now looking into the photoplay houses of Roxbury, and will report shortly. It is enjoyable to read of so many societies finding much good to be said of an industry that only a short while ago was compelled to undergo any amount of unjust abuse.

The Boston daily papers credit the following statement to President Bolles of Tufts College: "Within fifty years a college faculty will comprise a president, a janitor and a moving picture man." And, forsooth, there may be more truth than poetry in that remark! HENRY.

IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

THE seven moving picture theaters of Springfield, Ohio, the Hippodrome, the New Princess, Fairyland, Dreamland, Columbia, Pastime and Lyric, aided in raising the tuberculosis fund of that city by giving a percentage of their receipts during the holidays.

The Illinois Central Railroad has begun the use of moving pictures to teach its employees economy in the use of fuel. The machine is a part of the equipment of a demonstration car which is sent over all the lines. The employees at Champaign, Ill., a large division point, were very much interested in the pictures, which showed how to feed the fire properly.

Harry E. Danner, a former newspaper man and schoolteacher, of Davenport, Iowa, believes that moving pictures will prove an effective aid in the work of the Friendly House in that city, which is akin to settlement work. The institution home is located in an old hall which has a large auditorium. The work lies among the poor people of that section of the city, which includes many foreigners and many poor children. Beginning January 3, moving picture shows were commenced and will continue each Friday and Saturday night. The regular five cent admission fee will be charged and the receipts from these two shows will be utilized to pay the expenses of a free performance for the children of the community each Saturday afternoon.

The Bible class of the Central Christian Church at Peoria, Ill., makes much headway in religious work by giving a three-reel picture show, a program by a twenty-five piece orchestra and a luncheon all for a nickel. The performances are open to the public and children under ten years are admitted free.

The Saturday morning picture shows for the youths of the Universalist Sunday School at Joliet, Ill., which are conducted at the Colonial theater by the pastor, Rev. Walter MacPherson, continue to be popular. A recent program included a film showing the Orient before and after the missionary work, a comedy especially appealing to boys and an educational microscopic picture.

Never has the moving picture played so important a part in the holiday festivities in the middle west as it did this year, due to the spirit of Christmas, which prevailed among managers. Among the philanthropic photoplay proprietors who played the part of "Good Fellows" were Gayet & Stevenor and Atkinson & Prosser, of St. David, Ill., George Gaskill of the Gem at Lewistown, Ill., manager Cocoran of the Aero at Charleston, Ill., Manager Day, of the Majestic, at Streator, Ill., R. J. Rusk, of the Princess, at Elkhart, Ind., Ralph Kretzer, of the Lyric, at Springfield, Ohio, Harry Daley, of the Daley, at Centerville, Ill. Other pictures were used in the programs for children given by the Y. M. C. A. of Springfield, Ill., the Y. M. C. A. of Moline, Ill, and the Rotary Club of Davenport, Iowa. The Pathe "Passion Play" was shown in the huge armory at Springfield, Ill., to 4,000 persons as an adjunct of the annual Christmas dinner to the poor by the Salvation Army.

The Illinois State Register of Springfield, Ill., has at last recognized the moving picture and runs the daily programs at the local houses.

The Colonial, at Charleston, Ill., was recently closed by an action of the city council because it was charged the place refused to pay the license fee.

The Star theater at Elg , Ill., which was recently leased for seven and a half years by John Bodkin, head of the B. K. circuit, has been placed under the management of L. H. Williams, former manager of the Pastime theater on Madison street, Chicago. The theater was redecorated, new scenery was painted and a $5,000 unit orchestra, declared to be the equivalent of twenty musical pieces was installed. A program of four reels, with a musical number, was arranged.

L. C. Casey has gone from Marshall, Ill., to take charge of the American theater at Terre Haute, Ind. He retains control of the Princess at Marshall, and will continue to make his home in that city.

W. H. Marple, who formerly owned a half interest in the Palace Theater at Aurora, Ill., and his associates, are reported to be negotiating for a lease on the Egerman Building, at Fox and Water Streets in that city, to be used as a theater.

J. D. King of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, has purchased the East Main street theater at Galesburg, Ill.

W. E. Busha of Elgin, Ill., is reported to be meeting with success in operating the Star theater at Belvidere, Ill. His pianist, Miss Marion Lewis, is the author of the Kalem "A Treacherous Shot," which was released January 3.

Employees of the Colonial Amusement Company, which has a monopoly on picture shows and vaudeville houses in Harrisburg, Ill., controlling the Colonial, Star and Orpheum theaters, were given a banquet Christmas night by Manager Tim Turner and his associates. Manager Turner was presented with a handsome meerschaum pipe by his employes. The guests at the affair were: Mr. and Mrs. Richard Davenport, Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Nesler. Colonial theater—Orlie Turner, Edith Knawl, Edna Stricklin, "Judge" Butler, T. Bruce and Leo Abney. Star theater—Billy Braddick, Mary Lindenmuth, Glodys Hetherington, Jessie Dove and Phillip Upchurch. Orpheum theater—Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Stuff, Gertrude Hetherington, Will Tate, Earl Estes, Eddie Rogan and Jessie Stunston. Orchestra—Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Cook, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Miller, Lucile Audre, Will White, Corum Wanson and Ernie Johnson. Officers—Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Murphy, Mr. and Mrs. George O. Davenport, W. P. Oliver and Miss Stella Short.

H. Hoskins, a negro, has filed suit in the United States District Court at Fort Madison, Iowa, against the Orpheum Company of Fairfield, Iowa, for $2,000 damages. He alleges that on account of his color, he was prevented from sitting on the main floor of the picture house and later forcibly ejected.

A new white marble and stucco front is being placed for the new Princess theater on Main street, at Galesburg, Ill. A balcony is also being installed.

The Barrymore theater at Moline, Ill., has been reopened with moving pictures predominating in the program. Three reels are given for five cents. Matinees are offered Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday. A four-piece orchestra is furnishing the music.

The Middle Western Lyceum Association of Chicago, has leased the George B. Norton opera house at Lockport, Ill., which opened January 15 as a moving picture house. This is a departure in middle west amusements and entertainments, and the substitution of high class literary, musical and educational numbers for vaudeville will be watched with interest. It is said that if the plan is successful, the Lockport house may become one of a chain which will appeal to the better class of patronage in a number of Mississippi Valley cities. The house has been undergoing extensive repairs and has been refitted and redecorated.

The furnishings of the Majestic theater in Rock Island, Ill., were sold at a mortgage sale to Joseph Hopps, a lessee of the place, for $830, and the place will be opened as a moving picture house.

C. M. Eckhart and B. Vaughan have leased the Greenup opera house at Greenup, Ill.

Thomas Walsh will erect a new $120,000 vaudeville theater at Third and Ripley streets in Davenport, Iowa. When completed, the building will be taken over by an operating company, headed by Richard Lane, Reed Lane and Harry Blanchard.

P. J. Hanson will retire from the picture show business, having sold the Bijou at Rhinelander, Wis., to Paul R. Philleo, of Tomahawk.

The Cosmopolitan Securities Company of Chicago, Ill., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $30,000, to operate a theater and dance hall. The incorporators are: Abraham Dick, Lewis F. Jacobson and William M. Tannenbaum.

The Gem theater at Macomb, Ill., has switched to the Mutual Film Service.

Apropos of the appearance of the Vitagraph feature, "The Mills of the Gods," an Illinois editor, who has been bothered by speeding reels, hopes that the operator "will grind slowly and preserve the eternal fitness of things."

The Kankakee Amusement Company of Kankakee, Ill., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $1,000, to do a general theatrical business. The incorporators are: Frank C. Smith, Vausie L. Smith and Joseph H. Kelly.

Clarence Kleckner of Kent, Ill., has purchased the opera house building at Stockton, Ill., from Lingford & McCarty. He has leased it to Peter Wales, to be used as a moving picture show.

The Wayne Film Corporation of Warsaw, Ind., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $20,100. The directors are: Addison D. Whitman, Orion W. and William P. Clemen and Walter Brubaker.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Des Moines, Iowa, has purchased a moving picture machine and is giving a performance every Saturday night, free to members of the association. Non-members are charged admission.

The Alfred Theater Company of Chicago, Ill., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $2,500, to do a general amusement business, also a manufacturing and mercantile business. The incorporators are: B. Blumenthal, E. S. Hartman and J. Schwartz.

The State Board of Control of Iowa has purchased moving picture machines for nearly all its insane hospitals and other charitable institutions.

A novelty in connection with the exploitation of local moving pictures is credited to Manager Vance of the Dawn theater at Streator, Ill. He secured a number of photographs of cities in their pioneer days and showed them as a contrast to the reels which pictured a modern city.

Warner Judy of Hoopeston, Ill., has sold the Derthick opera house at Belvidere, Ill., to Charles W. Fruehling of Fort Madison, Ia. Dysart & Loop have a lease on the house. The new owner is not a showman.

The Middle West Film and Exchange Company of Indianapolis, Ind., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000, to deal in motion picture films, etc. The incorporators are: J. B. Davidson, Muncie, Ind., R. Kilmere and A. McCormick.

The Opera House Picture Show at Pittsfield, Ill., will be closed for three weeks while the interior is being redecorated.

George Densmore, who recently opened a skating rink at Defiance, Iowa, is reported to be contemplating opening a picture show at that place.

Leon Shumway has purchased the Rex theater at Eau Claire, Wis., and will run pictures six days each week.

J. M. Hobbs of McLeanshoror, Ill., has opened a new picture show in Eldorado, Ill.

The Dreamland Theater Company of Spooner, Wis., has been incorporated with capital stock of $1,000. The incorporators are: H. A. Bresee, E. A. Bixby, C. L. Appleman, J. A. Brechlo, E. M. Elliott and A. E. Wittek. FRANK H. MADISON.

LOUISVILLE.

DESPITE the walkout or "lockout" of union operators by members of the Louisville Photoplay Association, attendance at the eighteen theaters in the organization is suffering to no extent. The association has decided to continue its policy of showing high grade films, ignoring the subject of the strike. Despite the efforts of the union operators and musicians to keep the subject alive, the public is fast forgetting that a strike is in progress, and the situation is regaining its former status. The new operators are filling the gap satisfactorily, and no damage is being sustained from poor work in the booths. The exhibitors expect the strike to die a natural death in the near future. The operators and musicians recently shot their last bolt when they issued several thousand cards and distributed them among the crowds on Fourth Street. "The Avenue is the only picture theater on Fourth Avenue employing Union musicians and operators," read the placards. The public was evidently too busy to listen to the strikers' woes, as was attested by a huge pile of the cards which were thrown in the gutter at Fourth and Green Streets.

The Union Feature Company has established a branch office in Louisville, Irvin Simon being manager of the establishment. The deal was arranged during a recent visit of J. D. Tinnets, manager of that company. Offices of the Union branch are in the Tyler building.

Charles Olson, connected with the Central Film Service Company, of Indianapolis, is also a wrestler of note. Mr. Olson's prowess was recently demonstrated in Louisville, when he met John Perry, of Boston, at the Buckingham Theater. Olson was altogether too much for the Eastern man, and the bout was a poor one from the standpoint of the spectators. Mr. Olson won the first fall in nine minutes and the second in 55 seconds. The wrestler, besides having a good income from his ability in that regard, is an officer of the Central Film Service Company, and controls the Lyric Theater, Indianapolis.

The Sun Theater, controlled by H. B. Strube, has decided to use Universal service in the future. The program will be provided by A. F. Mayer, Louisville manager of the Central.

Judge W. Allen Kinney, of the Princess Amusement Company, has returned to Louisville after spending New Year's in Chicago. Judge Kinney watched the demise of 1912 from a point of vantage at Rector's, finding the spectacle an exhilarating one.

The Inter-Southern Booking Exchange has been opened by Arthur V. Sheckler, formerly Louisville representative of the Gomes Theatrical Exchange, of Cincinnati. Mr. Sheckler has opened offices on the twentieth floor of the new Inter-Southern building. He will book independently, and will use his acts almost entirely in moving picture theaters in Kentucky and adjacent states.

Kinemacolor, effectively exploited by the Majestic Theater, is proving a great attraction to patrons of that house. "Romeo and Juliet" was a presentation which attracted much favorable comment from devotees of the animated picture.

The Lincoln Theater, which recently opened at Winchester, Ky., for the benefit of colored patrons, was inspected by the Commercial Club of that town recently. The house was found to be sanitary and well-conducted, and the endorsement of the Commercial organization was extended to it.

Receipts of the Princess and Rex theaters, of Hopkinsville, Ky., on Christmas Eve were donated to the Western Kentucky Orphans' Home by the management. The beneficence of the owners of the two houses proved a splendid Christmas gift to the orphanage, at the same time securing the good-will of Hopkinsville residents for the two animated picture houses.

A paper devoted to insurance has recently discussed the proposition of advertising by means of slides in moving picture theaters. It is conceded that the animated picture house offers an effective means of reaching the public. Exhibitors who go after slides will probably find members of the insurance business profitable patrons, provided such service may be sold without interfering with the offerings of the exhibitor himself.

Manager Russell, of the Washington Theater, of Maysville, Ky., gave the receipts of a designated day to the City Mission of that place recently. The attendants at the theater donated their services, while the public helped out by patronizing the house liberally.

The Columbia Theater, of Paris, Ky., will use the Mutual program exclusively in the future, it is announced. The Columbia recently presented the Thanhouser offering, "The Star of Bethlehem," special singing and music being provided for the occasion. The clergy of Paris recommended the picture warmly, indicating further that the animated pictures are adding to their patrons steadily through intelligent work on the part of exhibitors and manufacturers.

The Crescent Amusement Company, of Nashville, Tenn., remembered its employees substantially Christmas. Tony Sudekum, president of the company, presented each attache of the Princess, Bonita, Alhambra and Elite theaters with a $.50 gold piece. The employees in turn remembered their president, presenting him with a handsome hand-beaten brass desk set as a mark of their appreciation.

A two-dollar bill was the contribution of the Colonial Amusement Company, of Lexington, Ky., to each employee of the Colonial and Star theaters at Christmas.

Morton Shaw, manager of the Avenue Theater, Louisville, entertained friends and employees at a New Year's dinner held at the theater. An orchestra provided music and the banquet was the occasion of general joyousness.

Architect Anthony Kunz, of Cincinnati, Ohio, has been awarded completed plans for the new Belvidere Theater, to be erected on the east side of Belvidere, north of Hatch, in that city. Work wil begin on the motion picture house in the near future.

A modern moving picture theater is to be erected by the Park Amusement Company, recently formed in Cincinnati. The structure will go up on the west side of Hamilton Avenue, opposite Lingo Street. Ground will be broken at once.

ST. LOUIS.

ME. NEFF, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was recently entertained here by the St. Louis Branch, No. 3 during his stay in St. Louis along with local delegates who attended the State Convention of Motion Picture Operators, held at Kansas City. The reception given Mr. Neff and the delegates was held at the Shenandoah theater, Grand and Shenandoah avenues.

Pictures showing the International balloon races held in Germany were part of an evening's entertainment given by Albert Von Hoffmann, a local aeronaught at the La Salle theater, to members of the Million Population Club and the Ad. Men's League of St. Louis.

The property of the Colonial Amusement Company on the north side of Delmar avenue, west of Bayard avenue, has been sold to the Monarch Amusement Co., a corporation of St. Louis people. The property is valued at $75,000.

Frank Talbot has sold his interests in the Gem theater at 6th and Market streets, to a syndicate, headed by S. Jones, retiring prosecuting attorney of the City of St. Louis.

Pictures showing "Nick Carter solving the $100,000 Jewel Robbery" a film manufactured by the Atlas Manufacturing Co. of St. Louis, were put on in the United States Court of Appeals in a suit by the Street and Smith Co., Publishers of New York City, who sued on an infringement of the copyright act. The case which was up on an appeal of Orland T. Crawford, proprietor of the Atlas Mfg. Co., created considerable excitement. The Atlas people claim that a real Nick Carter existed in actual life and that their pictures are based on the fact that the said Nick Carter existed in France. The pictures were taken in St. Louis. Suits for an accounting and $100,000 damages are envolved in the case.

PITTSBURGH.

THE new councilmanic ordinance revising the list of fees for amusement licenses has been passed by the sub-financial committee, and will now be brought to the council for enactment into law. The new bill is expected to increase the revenues of the city about $300,000 a year. License fees are regulated by the proposed law under a seating capacity ratio, and nearly all the public amusement places will have their annual license fee raised. In applying to moving picture theaters, the ordinance provides for a license fee of $10 a month for those theaters having a seating capacity of 200 or less, a monthly fee of $15 for those having less than 300 seats, and for those theaters with more than 300 seating capacity the license fee is to be $25 per month. All these provisions apply to moving picture theaters in which the admission fee is ten cents or less. Those charging more than ten cents are required to pay a fee of $35 per month, the seating capacity not being taken into consideration. The local picture houses protested strongly against the new ordinance, but the efforts of an attorney, retained for the purpose of protesting the bill, went for nothing, and the bill will now be presented for final passage by council.

Pittsburgh moving picture theaters recently began their part in the work in the campaign for a mothers' pension law in this State. Recognizing the powerful value of the moving picture screens as a means of reaching a large majority of the people of the city, the legislative committee of the Young Ladies' Relief Society has had prepared a series of slides which are projected on the screens of the various moving picture houses in the city calling attention to the movement in behalf of destitute mothers and orphans. At the same time pictures from other cities where the pension law is in effect are shown in an effort to draw the comparison between children's condition in their own homes and those who are obliged to grow up in public institutions. The slides and pictures will be shown in more than 150 theaters in the filmland of Allegheny county, the proprietors of picture theaters joining heartily in co-operation in the campaign. It is estimated that 100,000 persons will have the question of the pension law brought before them by means of the moving picture houses before the end of January.

An extract from Governor Tener's message to the Pennsylvania State Legislature at its convening recently, read as follows: "The last session of the General Assembly inadvertently omitted to make an appropriation to carry into effect the act of June 19, 1911, which provides for the appointment of a State Board of Censors for the examination and approval of moving picture films and reels and stereopticon views, and for the regulation of moving picture and stereopticon exhibitions. There is a general demand for the enforcement of this act. I recommend that the necessary appropriation be made at an early date, in order that the Board of Censors may be appointed and the provisions of the act put into operation without delay."

At a recent meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pittsburgh, a resolution was adopted condemning the use of cigarette and mercantile coupons for redemption as admission tickets to moving picture theaters. A letter was sent out to each member warning them to discontinue the use of these coupons under penalty of suspension, with a reasonable time given for the disposing of any contracts. The resolution, as adopted, read: "We, the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Pittsburgh Local No. 1, wish to go on record as against any scheme inaugurated for the purpose of degrading the moving picture industry, and earnestly request every exhibitor, whether a member of our Leagne or otherwise, to voice his disapproval of such practices and refrain from being a party to such methods of advertising of commodities, which are inimical to the best interests of the League and its objects."

F. X. Bushman, formerly of the Essanay Company, has been in Pittsburgh for several days, and is planning to remain here a few more weeks. A banquet was tendered Mr. Bushman by the local moving picture men. The dinner was held at the Fort Pitt Hotel and was a well attended and enjoyable affair. Mr. Bushman, at the last meeting of the Exhibitors' League, was made an honorary member of that body, as was also Miss Alberta Claire.

PHILADELPHIA.

IMPROVEMENTS which greatly improve the comfort of the patrons and the appearance of the Bijou Dream theater at 1205 Market Street, have just been completed. New storm doors and a new system of heating have been placed along with several other modern improvements, which places this theater among the most well operated of any in the country. Mr. Frank Buhler, the efficient manager of the house, is awake to every feature of the business, and believes in giving his patrons all that is possible for a nickle.

The Interstate Film Company is having plans prepared for a new theater to be built at Twenty-fifth and Cambria Streets, which will be one of the most model places of its kind in that section of the city.

Theater managers must keep the aisles of their houses clear of all obstructions, and Director Porter has issued a notice to all policemen to enforce the order which he has issued to that effect. In some of the theaters the manager allows the people to crowd into the aisles until it would be almost impossible for them to get out in case of fire. Managers should give this order attention so as to avoid any trouble with the police department.

Joseph Sweeny, who had just bought out a moving picture establishment at Broad Street and Ontario Street, was giving directions to his employees regarding the exhibitions for the day and evening shows, when Detectives Pinkerton and Townsend gave him a disagreeable surprise by placing him under arrest. They produced a warrant sworn out by his adopted father, Patrick Sweeney of Hazleton, Pa., charging him with larceny and embezzlement of $1,215.92. The defendant informed the detectives that the money was his own, and that he had withdrawn it from a bank in Hazleton where he had deposited it with the intention of buying out the moving picture place. Mr. Sweeny said that his adopted father had simply trumped up the charge against him because of jealousy of his success, and that he was confident that he could clear himself. After being taken to the City Hall, Sweeny had a conference with his manager and cashier and gave directions to go on with the shows.

Alfred Butt, manager of the Palace theater on Market Street, recently returned from a very pleasant trip to Europe. Mr. Butt arrived in New York on the "Carmania," and immediately came to Philadelphia to look after the interests of the Palace theater, which is running a splendid line of vaudeville, and showing first-release pictures.

Two moving picture show owners were arrested a few days ago on the charge of having failed to pay the required rate of state tax on one of their houses. These arrests will be followed by a number of similar prosecutions, it is said, of "men who have evaded the payment of a regular theater tax by reducing the seating capacity of their houses when the inspectors visit them." The defendants, arrested on warrants sworn out by Joseph Bartoon, an inspector of the Board of Mercantile Appraisers, were arraigned before Magistrate Harris and held under $600 bail for court. The defendants are Henry Berman and Charles Segal. Every exhibitor knows the law regarding the taxation of a moving picture house and what the penalty is for violation, yet some of them will persist in trying to do the State out of the tax money, and in almost every case they are caught and it makes it all the harder for them to get along.

The old church building of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has recently been bought by Lewis S. Hayden, who will have erected a modern theater upon the site of the church. The location is in a section of the city that is fast growing, and a good patronage is expected for the new house.

The work of completing the Orpheum theater, in Chelten Avenue, east of Germantown Avenue, will be begun at once. Plans for the completed structure, which will cost $125,000, were filed last week with the bureau of building inspection.

Another new moving picture theater will be built at the corner of Ridge Avenue and Oxford Street by Chas. Roth. This theater will be a little out of the ordinary as to style, as the owners wish to put up a building that will be more than unique in its appearance.

The city photographer of Atlantic City, has had a few busy days during the past few weeks, getting together the pictures of the licensed operators in that city. A picture of the operator must be on his license, while a duplicate must be held by the city government for identification.

Frank Buhler, the enterprising manager of the Bijou Dream theater, is advocating a new movement in the picture line. In his opinion it would be a very excellent idea if the manufacturers of moving pictures would have a written score of music to accompany each film sent out. The Bijou Dream theater has had a large number of return dates on special features, and has been showing to crowded houses.

Ed. J. Bowlby and N. F. Power have opened a very attractive theater in Doyleston, Pa., which is only a short distance from Philadelphia. The new theater is a fine one in every sense of the word, and already has found much favor with the population of that thriving little city. The new theater is called the Princess, and five and ten cents is the admission charged.

The Police street sergeants, who were ordered by Superintendent Robinson to make daily visits, after January 1, to all places of amusement in this city, including every moving picture house, have so far failed to report any that were not keeping their aisles open. The inspection also covers all sanitation and other things that would make a theater unfit for public patronage.

William Freihofer has taken title from Howard Snowden to the theater located at No. 5123 Germantown avenue, for a nominal consideration of $22,500. The total assessed value of the property, which includes a small store, is $29,000.

Carr & Shad, of the Empire theater of Reading, have erected one of the most attractive electric signals ever seen in that section of the country. It consists of 900 two and four candle power lights, forming a fountain rising 85 feet, breaking and flowing back in a continuous stream forming "Empire."

Opposition in the vaudeville field on North Eighth Street was lessened a few weeks ago when Forepaugh's shifted from vaudevile to pictures. Jules Mastbaum has taken over I. Kaufman's holdings in the lease and will operate the house with W. W. Miller. Jules Anderson will have charge of the theater from now on.

Moving pictures were used to instruct the teachers of the Gloucester County Teacher's Institute. They were very interesting. It was fully demonstrated that the value of moving pictures in education was an essential part.

The United States is the world's largest producer of moving picture films, and during the past year 11,000 miles of pictures were exported, or enough to stretch from Philadelphia to Manila.

Two additional moving picture theaters are contemplated for the northern section of the city. One of the show houses is to be built on a plot of ground at the northwest corner of Fifth and Olney streets. Title to the land has been taken by Frank Hess who will build the theater. At No. 2243 North Thirteenth street, the other theater will be built by a syndicate.

Irwin & Leighton are taking plans and estimates for the theater to be built at 60th and Locust streets for the Garden Amusement Company.

C. H. CONGDON

GRAND RAPIDS.

HENRI KELLAR has resigned from the management of the Idle Hour, and his place is taken by Dennis McCarty who is well and favorably know in picture circles.

The new Superba is certainly a most beautiful little house, and it is a decided credit to Nichols Bros. who have spared no pains or expense in opening up one of the most modern of picture houses. The elaborate front of decorated staff, the marble entrance, interior decorating, seating, and, in fact, all the details are complete.

Mr. Gillingham managed to get over from Detroit for a few days twixt holidays, and states that Detroit photoplay business couldnt be better. They are installing some very fine automatic electric signs on the Columbia, and Mr. Gillingham is inspecting these as well as looking after other of his numerous interests connected with the United Theaters.

Head usher Charles Dalgo is to marry Minnie Bestraan. Mr. Dalgo has been at the Monroe a long time and has a heap of friends.

The Orpheum is about to install a handsome new box office. The office inside the lobby was unhandy, and to handle crowds better the new office will be placed in the center of the lobby and accessible on all sides. It will be of marble and mahogany.

H. K. HARRIS.

PENDLETON.

HARRY PARK and Ralph Smith, managers of the Grand theater, (the pioneer picture and vaudeville house of Pendleton, Oregon) reopened the house on December 12, after three days of darkness. The place has undergone a complete change, a balcony having been added, increasing the seating capacity to about three hundred. The prevailing colors of the interior are brown and green, having two mural paintings on each wall, encased in green wooden frames. The operating room sets at the extreme left of the balcony while a six by seven fire exit opens on the right, there also being a wide stairway opening in the front of the house. The auditorium is well lighted at all times. A new "ad" curtain has been installed besides entirely new sets of scenery. The scenery and decorations were done by J. R. Willis, who has become quite famous for his splendid round-up cartooning and landscaping. The upper portion of the front is latticed affording a sufficient amount of fresh air at all times. The New Grand plays to moving pictures and vaudeville.

The Cosy theater has made a great improvement in that it has raised the floor, giving a good view of the screen from all parts of the house. The theater is called the "House of Independent Features." The five-reel production, "Oliver Twist" was run December 10th-11th. The picture was well liked.

A moving picture club has been organized and has been working secretly for a couple of months. It now looks as if it would be a permanent institution, noting the progress of it. G. H. H.

Among the Exhibitors.

Center, Tex.—J. H. Hudgins sold the Dixie theater to S. W. Grant.

Yoakum, Tex.—J. P. Woolsey bought a half interest in the O K Theater, which will now be conducted under the firm name of the Yoakum Amusement Co.

"THE GALLOP OF DEATH" (Eclair).

A distinctly modern story is this Eclair release, with a villain who existed abundantly in melodramas of a past decade, but who is quite rare in present day playwrighting. He takes us back to the good old melodrama days when every well conducted melodrama contained a handsome brute. In this part we recognize that versatile actor, Mr. Alec B. Francis.

It appears that the evil genius of this story has formerly been married to the heroine, she having divorced him and married a better man. She is happy with her new husband until the appearance of her former husband who manages to make life quite miserable for her by his importunities. The second husband goes to the city on business and leaves the villain free to do as he pleases. He gains access to the house on the pretext of desiring to purchase it and is shown through the premises by a servant. His overtures to his former wife, having failed one by one, his plan is now revenge. If he cannot win her back he is determined that he will spoil her beauty and, with this diabolical purpose in mind, he drops some powerful acid into a sink which has just been prepared for madame's toilet.

Scene from "The Gallop of Death" (Eclair).

The unfortunate woman soon afterwards bathes her face at the basin and immediately her eyesight is destroyed by the poisonous fluid. A Hindoo servant, whom these people have brought with them from India, becomes suspicious of the visitor, and captures him with the aid of a pet tiger and finally lands him in jail.

The blind wife developes a state of melancholia that concerns her dutiful husband considerably. He provides companions to be with her at all times and in various ways makes her life as pleasant as possible under the circumstances. But her melancholia soon turns to despair and she decides to end it all. She induces one of the servants to saddle her favorite horse with the direct determination to ride him over a precipice along which she and her husband have often ridden. She starts away from home at a mad gallop to what seems like certain destruction. Her husband, arriving home a moment later, learns of her solitary ride and immediately mounts a horse and starts in frantic pursuit. He overtakes his wife just at the brink of the precipice and her life is saved. Since her blindness, eminent physicians have been at work on her case, and the story ends with the complete success of their endeavors in the restoration of the lady's sight.

NOTICE TO EXHIBITORS AND EXCHANGES.

You are asked to be on the lookout for Jeremiah Sarsfield, alias J. Matt Dwyer, alias J. Fields, alias J. Barrett, and holder of several other names, wanted for stealing Pathe "Passion Play," the property of H. Davis, Watertown, Wis.

He is about 5 feet 8 inches tall, dark hair, blue eyes, age about 35 years. When last seen wore black suit, black soft hat, carried two black overcoats, one partly fur lined. He has a large head, with very prominent nose. He is a lecturer of some ability, having a very strong, clear voice.

He also carries a subject with him that he has named "The Modern Magdalen," which is in reality "Redemption," no doubt stolen from some exchange Last heard of in Bar Harbor, Me., where he tried to play Christmas Day. He perhaps has gone south from there. There is a warrant for his arrest in Halifax, N. S. Please notify Moving Picture World or Chief of Police, Halifax, N. S., if you have seen or heard of this man. H. LEE CRAIG.

The Lubin players to the number of twenty-five who, under Frank J. Grandon, made pictures during December in the vicinity of Birmingham, Ala., have been ordered to return to Philadelphia. Bad weather seriously handicapped the company.

THE LAST BLOCKHOUSE

A vivid portrayal of Western Frontier days, based upon historical incidents

February 7, 1913 Kalem. Two Reels

A party of western pioneers, while constructing a block house, are guarded by a troop under Captain Steele. Crow, a renegade half-breed, tries to become friendly. He annoys Dot, the wife of Jim, a young settler, and is quickly repulsed.

Crow, infuriated at her scorn, incites the Indians to attack the settlers. The block house is destroyed. Crow captures Dot before the attack and rides off toward the camp.

Jack, the sole survivor, manages to reach the young husband, who is away in the woods, while Jim and Captain Steele recapture Dot from the Indians and in a hand to hand struggle with Crow, Jim avenges the fate of the pioneers.

THE MILLIONAIRE COWBOY

A brilliant comedy which smacks of the clean humor of the Western Plains

February 3, 1913 Selig. Two Reels

During a wonderful exhibition of horsemanship and cowboy skill "Bud," the foreman of the Diamond S Ranch, is handed a telegram summoning him to Chicago to claim a fortune left him by an Uncle.

There he falls in love and marries the stenographer in the office of his attorneys.

After a year he tires of the monotony of the life he leads and wires for the entire outfit to come on to Chicago and wake the town up. They carry out instructions elaborately, much to the embarrassment of Mrs. "Bud." After they leave, "Bud" embraces his wife and to her great relief whispers "Never again."

A Tale of Old Tahiti

Melies. Two Reels.

Teria, the daughter of one of the most influential chiefs of Tahiti, falls desperately in love with a young French Midshipman.

She pleads with her father to secure him for a husband. The French officers laugh at the idea.

The chief orders him taken prisoner. He loves Teria, but loyalty to his country demands his return. He is held captive despite his efforts until an expedition from his vessel comes ashore and tears him away in the very height of his love, with only her last gift—a flower—by which to remember the sweetest experience of his existence.

January 27, 1913.

The Guiding Light

Lubin. Two Reels.

Peter Fife, keeper of the light at Casco Bay, lives alone with his 17-year-old daughter born blind.

Harry, the girl's lover, saves all of his scant salary and gives it to Fife for an operation to restore Marie's sight. Dick Drayton is caught in the act of stealing the money and soundly thrashed. Bent on revenge he extinguishes the light. Marie through her quick wit and fortitude restores the light, thereby saving Harry and his companions, who are in danger of being dashed on the rocks in the darkness.

The brave girl's reward comes in the form of a successful operation and her engagement to Harry.

January 24, 1913.

The Vengeance of Durand

Vitagraph. Two Reels.

or The Two Portraits

Specially Written for the Vitagraph Company by Rex Beach.

The vengeance which he nurtured for another enters his own soul. The weapon which he sharpened with jealousy and hatred and placed in the hand of his daughter is turned against himself. He is cut down in the fury of his wrath.

January 20, 1913.

The Ways of Destiny

Pathe. Two Reels.

Colored Photography.

Horace Blackwell, mortally injured by lightning, discloses to his "adopted" daughter Dorothy the secret of her parentage, giving her the locket which was taken from her neck when she was found on his doorstep. Being dispossessed after her foster father's death, she has difficulty in finding work. Eventually she is employed in a department store and is charged with theft. She tells her story to the manager, shows the locket and finds a home with her father.

January 17, 1913.

The Mexican Spy

Lubin. Two Reels.

Tom loves Mary, daughter of the regiment's paymaster. He steals $5,000 from the paymaster's safe to pay his gambling debts to a Mexican spy, who threatens exposure. Mary pawns her jewels to make up the money. Tom disappears, leaving a note that he will return and redeem himself.

He enlists under assumed name and is desperately wounded in fight on Mexican border, at the same time being promoted to lieutenant for bravery. Mary, now a Red Cross nurse, restores him to health and he claims her for his wife.

January 13, 1913.

The Little Minister

Vitagraph. Three Reels.

A young Scotch minister falls in love with a gypsy girl. The ban of the "Kirk" and the condemnation of the austere town folk intervene as a barrier to their marriage. Unexpected circumstances of a startling nature arise and their prejudice and intolerance are removed. Love conquers. The "Little Minister" and "Babbie" are married.

January 10, 1913.

The Wives of Jamestown

Kalem. Two Reels.

Bryan O'Sullivan, an Irish lad of humble birth, in love with Lady Geraldine, becomes engaged in an altercation with her suitor of noble birth. He sails for America and becomes John Pierce, colonist of Jamestown, Va.

Years later Lady Geraldine, captured by Cromwellians, is sent with others to be sold as wives to the colonists. John Pierce, recognizing her, conceals his identity. Finding him an honest man she offers to becomes his wife. He takes her home and just as she is about to end her life, he shaves off his beard revealing his identity and love claims its own.

CINES.

A STRENUOUS COURTSHIP (Feb. 4).—Bloomer is madly in love with the charming Leah, but before he can gain her parents' consent to the marriage, he is required to prove his bravery. With this purpose in view, the ardent suitor is put through a series of the most trying ordeals, many of which are extremely ludicrous, especially his attempts to roller-skate. However, Bloomer is determined to win the girl and his persistence is finally rewarded in a most unexpected manner.

AN INVINCIBLE SLEUTH (Feb. 4).—A screaming comedy containing a number of clever illusions, showing how a detective, aided by the police, captures a gang of burglars at their work. Just how he does it must be seen to be appreciated. His methods are as ingenious as they are comical.

ESSANAY.

THE RANCHMAN'S BLUNDER (Feb. 4).—Sam Beasley, foreman of the Double X ranch, complains to Jed Mackclay, the owner, that Jack Harrington is in the habit of abusing the live stock. Harrington is reprimanded. That afternoon, Beasley sees Harrington abusing a horse, by jerking the reins and hitting the horse in the face with them. Beasley tells him to quit, this Harrington refuses to do. Beasley hits Harrington a punch in the jaw. These two men are in love with the ranchman's daughter, Mabel. Mackclay has instructed his daughter to have nothing to do with Beasley. That night, Harrington sees Beasley with Mabel. He writes a note to Mackclay and throws it through an open window. Mackclay picks it up and reads that his daughter is with Sam Beasley at the fence, near the big trees. Mackclay goes after him with a shotgun. He discovers that the two have disappeared. In trying to climb a fence his gun is accidentally discharged in his face, wounding him severely. Harrington, hearing the report of the gun, runs to the scene and finds Mackclay in a serious condition. He calls for the cowpunchers. One of them goes for a doctor. Three of them, having been told by Harrington, that Beasley shot Mackclay, scout the surrounding territory for him. The doctor arrives and dresses Mackclay's wounds. Beasley is found in a nearby saloon. He is taken to the home of Mackclay Mackclay tells the doctor and the boys that Beasley did not shoot him, that the gun was accidentally discharged. In the meantime, Harrington, realizing that Mackclay's condition is not as serious as first thought, decides the best thing he can do is to leave. After hearing Mackclay's statement, the boys go after Harrington. He is brought back to the house and is discharged and ordered off the place. Mackclay appoints Beasley foreman of the ranch and tells the cowpunchers, who have gathered around his bed, that Beasley will be his son-in-law.

LOVE AND LAVALLIERES (Feb. 5).—Jack promises Mabel a lavalliere for her birthday. Miss Ohlen, who lives in the apartment above, overhears the conversation. The following day, Miss Ohlen goes shopping and stops in a jewelry store and purchases a beautiful lavalliere. Jack, passing the same jewelry store, sees a lavalliere in the window and decides to buy one. He enters the store just as Miss Ohlen is leaving. He buys one identical to the one she bought. Jack then leaves for his sweetheart's home. Miss Ohlen returns to her room and prepares to surprise her niece with her new and beautiful purchase. Jack, mis- with her new and beautiful purchase. Jack, mistaking Miss Ohlen's apartments for his sweetheart's, enters, and is caught and held by Miss Ohlen and her niece as a suspicious character. Miss Ohlen discovers that the lavalliere she had placed on the table in her room has disappeared. Jack is arrested and thrown into a cell. The jeweler is called into the police station and claims he does not recognize Jack. Mabel, having been notified of Jack's arrest, goes to the police station and denounces him as a thief. In the meantime, Miss Ohlen's niece, Gwendoline, finds the lavalliere that her aunt has bought for her on the floor, where it had fallen from the table, and explains matters to the sergeant of police. Jack's sweetheart forgives him and everything ends pleasantly.

DON'T LIE TO YOUR HUSBAND (Feb. 6).—Sitting at the breakfast table Mrs. Warrington asks her husband Don, for a fur overcoat. She is told she will have to get along without a new coat this winter. Mrs. Warrington decides to draw some money from the bank and purchase a new coat. This she does. She buys a beautiful coat for $125. To replace some of the money she has drawn from the bank, she tells Mr. Warrington that she found a pawn ticket and would like him to redeem the article. He puts it in his pocket among a lot of business papers. That afternoon Warrington meets a friend of his on the street and, pulling out some papers to show him, accidentally drops the ticket. A tramp finds it. This same tramp asks Jim Murehead, a pedestrian, for a match. Murehead gives him the desired phosphorus and discovers the tramp has a pawn ticket in his hand. This he buys. Murehead then goes to the pawn shop and gets the coat. He takes it to his sweetheart, a stenographer in Mr. Warrington's office. She is pleased beyond words. Mr. Warrington returns to his home that evening and explains to his wife that he lost the ticket. She becomes furious. He goes to the office. Mrs. Warrington arrives at the office and is told by the stenographer that she will have to wait if she wants to see her husband. The stenographer leaves the room. During her absence, Mrs. Warrington discovers a box on the table and recognizes it immediately as being one that her coat was in. She opens the box and finds an old winter coat belonging to some one of her sex. Thinking that her husband had redeemed the fur coat, she comes to the conclusion that her husband is entertaining the lady in his private office. The climax comes when the alluring stenographer walks into the office with the fur coat on.

THE BROKEN HEART (Feb. 7).—Mr. and Mrs. Keith and their son, Paul, are seated in the living room of their home, when the maid brings in a letter. Mrs. Keith opens the letter and, reads that her brother is sailing that day from Yokohama, Japan, and are bringing back with them a little Japanese girl, whom they have adopted. Some time later they arrive. Paul is infatuated with O'Saki San, the little Japanese girl, and spends many pleasant minutes with her that evening. He treats her as he would a doll. O'Saki San falls in love with him. Paul caresses her. That evening O'Saki San tells her new mother that she has fallen in love with Paul. Later, Edith Towne, Paul's fiancee, arrives. O'Saki Sa nmeets her. The little Japanese girl is forgotten when Paul sees his beloved one. Paul marries Miss Towne. From a window in her room, the little Jap girl, with her heart overflowing with love for Paul, sobs her little heart out and, prays to her God, that he will have pity on her. Several days later, the little queen of the land of the sun and the cherry blossoms, passes into another land from a broken heart.

BRONCHO BILLY'S LAST DEED (Feb. 8).—Broncho Billy is seen smoking a cigar in a general store in the far west. An Indian enters, who tries to force his attentions on a young girl. The Indian is rejected by Broncho. The Indian swears revenge. That same day, old Cy Jenners and his wife, receive a letter from the bank, stating that their note must be paid at once. Further it states that Jenners' son is a rich man and to get the money from him. Jenners and his wife call on his son, Clarence, and are told by the latter that he will give no assistance whatsoever. They leave their son's home. On the way, they find Broncho Billy lying in the road, suffering from a bullet wound in his chest, inflicted by the Indian. They carry Broncho to their humble home and dress his wound. The following day, Clarence Jenners, calls on his old and feeble parents and, tells them that he has made arrangement for them to go to the poor house. Broncho Billy in the next room overhears the conversation. He gets up from the big chair he has been placed in, and walks to young Jenners' home. He pleads with Jenners to come to the assistance of his aged father. Young Jenners orders Broncho Billy from the house. Broncho returns to Cy Jenners' home. He is about to enter the house, when he is presented with a note. He opens it and reads that should he carry out his threat to shoot young Jenners, the latter would pay a big reward for his capture. Broncho Billy goes to the doctor and is informed that he will not be able to live more than two days. Broncho Billy shoots young Jenners. That afternoon, Broncho sees a reward notice of $5,000 for his capture. He goes to old Cy Jenners' home, tells the former that he must take him to the sheriff's office and claim the reward. This he does. The old man is given the sack of gold and Broncho Billy is thrown into jail.

MELIES.

UNMASKED BY A KANAKA (Feb. 13).—This photoplay was produced in beautiful Tahiti, one of the South Sea Islands, termed "The Garden of the Pacific," because of its wealth of vegetation and of everything that is beautiful and romantic. Here palms grow upon the very streets of the villages and the tall, graceful cocoanut trees may be seen long before one reaches the island. The lives of the natives are romantic and equally so are those of the colonists.

Wilkins, a colonist planter, casts aside his native mistress to propose to Grace, the pretty daughter

The Motor Driven Motiograph Equipment No. 1002=M

APPROVED BY

National Board of Fire Underwriters—Is the Best Projection Machine on Earth

We invite comparison with the heaviest advertised machine—You will find that liberality is a better salesman than paid space in journals.

You get more real and actual value in one $250.00 MOTIOGRAPH than in two machines of that price of another make.

Our quality is not to be compared with those cheap, heavily-advertised, "assembled" machines you have wasted good money on.

The most successful watch factory.

The most successful automobile factory.

The most successful Motion Picture Machine factory is that one which still does, and always did, make every part and screw in one factory and under the personal management of its own officers.

Beware of any "assembled" machine—Buy the machine that invites mechanical comparison, and yet, projects the most perfect picture there is—that "painted on the wall" kind.

of a neighboring planter. When not accepted, he attempts to win her love by fraud, making believe that it was he who saved her life when her boat upturned. Out of gratitude she consents to marry Wilkins, but at the opportune moment a Kanaka (a native), brother of his mistress, reveals the trick; points out the real hero, and Grace's love is then bestowed on the rightful owner.

VITAGRAPH.

CUTEY AND THE TWINS (Feb. 3).—To listen to Cutey's braggadocio, one would believe that he was irresistible among the women. His overthrow, however, comes about in a very singular manner. Two twin sisters, still in their short frocks, come to the conclusion that they will dress themselves in their mother's long dresses, take a walk in the park just like regular grown-up ladies. Cutey, dressed in his afternoon attire, Prince Albert and high hat, is strolling through the park and spies the two girls. After awhile, he managers to become acquainted with them and asks permission to call at their home. They grant it.

On the way home, their own father does not recognize them and mentally notes what a pair of stunning young ladies they are. Later, when he returns home, he finds out about their little escapade, and he and their mother chide them for indulging in such play. Their brother, who is one of Cutey's chums, decides to make the joke a good one by having his friends on hand to see Cutey's humiliation when he calls to see the two young ladies he met in the park.

Cutey calls, presents his card and is ushered into the reception room, where he meets the twin's mother and father. When he tells them he has called to see the girls, he is ushered upstairs to the nursery, where the twins in their short dresses are playing with their dolls. Poor Cutey does not know what to make of it all and when the two children turn around and look at him, he is almost paralyzed with surprise.

CLASSMATE'S FROLIC (Feb. 4).—As a punishment for falling asleep during the Preceptress' lecture, Alice is obliged to remain in her room alone for three days. She becomes restless and seeing some of her schoolmates outside on the campus, gets the janitor to take a note inviting them to come to her room at four o'clock, and have a jolly good time. The four girls, avoiding the vigilance of the Preceptress, appear on time, with smiling faces and "eats." They hear an organ-grinder playing outside; one of the girls darts out of the room and soon returns with the musician. He starts them going with a lively waltz. They are in the midst of the dance when they hear footsteps approaching. They push the organ-grinder into a closet and the girls creep under the bed. The Preceptress appears, finds everything quiet. The organ-grinder accidentally gives a turn or two of the handle of his instrument which the principal hears and she rushes out for help. In the meantime, the organ-grinder comes out of the closet. The janitor puts in an appearance and they soon explain matters to him and help the organist out of the window just as the Preceptress returns with a policeman, to whom she points out the closet.

He opens the door and finds nothing there. Completely puzzled, the Head of the School cannot explain matters and she withdraws haughtily, followed by the officer, who slyly winks at the girls, as they peer from beneath the bed. Alice, and her chums acknowledge their appreciation of the janitor's services, in helping them, have their little frolic, by kissing him upon the top of his bald head.

ELEPHANT'S TOILET (Feb. 4).—To look at an elephant, you would never believe he was so particular about his personal appearance. Elephants are very fastidious, as we can plainly see when we follow them in this picture; taking their baths, having their hides scrubbed and massaged, finishing with all the manicure accessories of a gentleman or lady of classy pretentions. They are the Beau Brummels of the Animal Kingdom and seem to be to the manner born when it comes to the delicate touches of an up-to-date make-up.

THE SKULL (Feb. 5).—Just as the head clerk and his assistants are closing up the jewelry store for the day, a package containing a very costly necklace arrives by special messenger. The large safe deposit ault has been closed for the night and the time clock set. The head clerk is fearful to leave the necklace in the store and so decides to take it home. His actions have been closely watched by one of the junior clerks, with sinister and stealthy glances. As soon as the head clerk has gone, his young assistant hastily leaves the store and meets one of his pals, whom he tells about the necklace. It does not need a second glance to learn that his pal is a professional burglar and his interest in the necklace is very keen.

Jordan, the head clerk, when he reaches home, puts the necklace in a small house safe. He has an engagement that evening, and is obliged to leave his wife alone. Later she decides to retire, and has no sooner done so than she hears a noise in the room below. She goes down stairs and on entering the room is met by the young clerk and his companion burglar. They seize her and she falls in a faint, continuing their work upon the safe, they have just succeeded in opening it when some medical college students who are on a lark, pass the house and seeing the open window, throw a skull which they are carrying, through the window into the room. It falls directly in front of the burglars who are so startled and frightened at the gruesome sight they hastily retire from the room. Mrs. Jordan, who has recovered, hastily opens the safe, takes out the necklace from the case in the safe and hides it in the hollow of the skull and resumes her position upon the floor. The burglars return, open the door of the safe, take out the case and are so surprised and disgusted on seeing nothing in it they hurriedly take their departure from the house. They have no sooner left, when her husband returns and finds her lying upon the floor. He picks her up. She smiles and then bursts into a laugh and picking up the skull, she quickly extracts the necklace from it. In his happiness at her safety and her cleverness in outwitting the burglars, he can only give her a kiss of appreciation.

The next morning, Mrs. Jordan comes to the store with him, and while there, she recognizes the young clerk as one of the burglars of the night before. Police headquarters is notified by telephone and on the arrival of the police, the young fellow is taken into custody and through him, his pal is arrested.

STENOGRAPHER TROUBLES (Feb. 6).—The boss is more or less of a grouch, and very much objects when he detects his pretty stenographer flirting with his young clerks. He comes to the conclusion that he will engage a woman of maturer years. He advertises for such a one and he has many applicants. Finally, he selects a scrawny old maid, to whom he gives the job. The next morning, she is ready for service, and while he is dictating to her, she looks sweetly into his face, removes stray ravelings from his coat and occasionally gives him a flirtatious tap and beams lovingly into his face. He is distressed and irritated, but she still goes on as cheerfully as before.

The boys enjoy his discomfiture and have hard work suppressing their laughter. The next day she brings a box of candies which she eats all the while he is dictating. When he shows his displeasure, she very coyly tries to place a candy in his mouth. During this session, the boss's wife comes into the office and seeing the antique typist's familiarity, makes her presence known by giving the giddy old flirt a piece of her mind, and discharging her upon the spot. She is now keyed up to the proper point of attack upon her husband, seizing him by the ear, she marches him out of the office with her, leaving the clerks full scope, to give vent to their glee in laughter unconfined.

THE WHISPERED WORD (Feb. 7).—Without work or money, Jim Dexter becomes discouraged and desperate. Concealing his intentions from his wife, lying sick in bed, Dexter makes a mask, goes out and robs a stage coach. By a roundabout way, he gets back into town before the stage arrives there. The news of the robbery reaches the hamlet and jim is one of the first to ride away with the sheriff, in pursuit of the robber. The posse returns to the saloon empty-handed. Jim is invited to take a hand in a game of cards. In pulling his money from his pocket, he accidentally pulls out the mask, which he used in the hold-up, and it falls upon the table. It is seen by the sheriff and his men, but before they can act, Dexter is upon his feet with ready revolver, covering the crowd as he backed slowly to the door.

The doctor, who has been attending Jim's wife, enters the salon and seeing the situation, he whispers a few significant words to Dexter, who lowers his gun and stands with bowed head. The sheriff quickly draws his gun and commands Jim to surrender. The doctor steps to the sheriff and whispers in his ear and the sheriff starts, glances at the doctor, lowers his revolver and whispers something to the men at the table. They sink back into their chairs and look at each other meaningly. The sheriff then addresses a few words to Dexter who advances and tosses his revolver upon the table, placing his plunder beside it, and with bowed head, turns and walks from the saloon back to his shack, where he is met at the door by an old lady of the town, who whispers something to him. Dexter enters his home and kneels beside his wife and bows his head upon the bed. She smoothes his hair, and as he lifts his head, and turning down the blankets Dexter looks upon the face of his first-born.

THE JOKE WASN'T ON BEN BOLT (Feb. 8).—Captain Bowser, who is made an unwilling purchaser of the personal and professional effects of Madame de Risque, who recently died, makes use of them to play a practical joke on his old friend, Ben Bolt. He masquerades as Madame de Risque, having previously induced Ben to consent to attend a sitting. Ben is ushered into the mystic parlor where the pretended clairvoyant, after startling maneuers, goes into a trance, and writes a message to Ben, the purport of which is that Ben will soon find a great treasure.

Ben is skeptical, but he is willing to be convinced. Bowser takes two of Ben's chums into his confidence and the three prepare to hand Ben a lemon. Bowser fakes a Captain Kydd message, puts it in a bottle, surreptitiously plants it on the sea-shore where Ben will find it. Ben bites good and hard. He is strolling along the beach and comes across the bottle, studies the Kydd chart and sets out to dig for the treasure. Bowser and his fellow conspirators watch Ben, observe his preparations, and follow him to the spot where he is to be allowed to dig until they can come from their hiding place and give him the grand laugh for his pains.

Ben follows literally the instructions of the "Kydd" chart, the conspirators in the meantime enjoying hugely the success of the joke. To their amazement, Ben locates a real treasure. Ben digs and turns up an iron-bound box, which he breaks open. He begins throwing out useless articles, to the inexpressible joy of the jokers. Ben in disgust, turns over the box and smashes it with his shovel. A false bottom falls out and a dozen leather bags roll out. Ben cuts one open. It is filled with gold coins. He takes his treasure home and is counting his wealth, when Bowser and his companions come in. Ben is explaining the occult powers of Madame de Risque and the Kydd business, when Bowser sheepishly discloses the truth. The four old cronies have a hearty laugh, Ben gives them each a generous portion of unexpected wealth, and "Bottoms-up" they drink to the health of Captain Kydd.

KALEM.

THE PROSECUTING ATTORNEY (Feb. 3).—The prosecuting attorney's impassioned address clinches the conviction of the criminal who, breaking away from his guard, viciously assaults the prosecutor but is finally quieted. At home, the attorney's wife reads a newspaper account of the affair and is greatly disturbed.

Next morning the attorney purchases a box of tools for his little son Bobby and as they pass along the street the criminal, being conducted to jail, again breaks away from his guard and assaults the prosecutor. Bobby, coming from school, tells the mother and adds to her worries.

It happens that the prison conveyance is delayed and the desperate criminal succeeds in escaping. He makes his way to the attorney's house and bides his time, that he may be revenged.

That night as the attorney sits alone in his library, the criminal creeps in and confronts him with a revolver. A battle of wits takes place as the attorney endeavors to call the butler, but is frustrated. Toying with his victim, the desperate man sits in a chair and covers the attorney with his gun, taunting him. Bobby, earlier in the day, has tried the new tools and sawed the leg of the chair in which the criminal is seated and when the latter makes a sudden move, it gives way. Quick as a flash the attorney is master of the situation and summons help.

IN THE POWER OF BLACKLEGS (Feb. 5).—Lucy, secretary to the owner of a department store, is flattered by the attentions of her employer's son, Tom. The latter, pressed for funds to meet a gambling debt, induces Lucy to open the safe and allow him to borrow sums of money which he promises to return next day, but he does not state that his only hope of doing so is by winning at cards. However, he wins and returns the money. Regretting her indiscretion, Lucy tells Tom she will have nothing more to do with him.

Later, Tom is again in desperate need of money and appeals to Lucy, but is refused. He remembers the combination of the safe, opens the door and forces from Lucy the key to the inner door, which enables him to secure the cash box. Rosa, a little cash girl, who is very fond of Lucy, enters during the struggle for the key and being too frightened to render assistance, she leaves, unobserved by Lucy and Tom.

The next day Lucy is accused and having promised to shield Tom she refuses to give an explanation. Blair, the manager of the store, who has been an ardent suitor for Lucy's hand, declares that he is guilty. Lucy pleads with Tom to confess and vindicate her lover, but the young coward refuses. The owner of the store enters and is about to order the arrest of Blair when Rosa, the cash girl, who has heard the altercation, enters the room and tells her story. Heartbroken, the owner of the store takes his son home. He starts to reprimand but concludes that it is hopeless. Tom comes to a sudden realization of his worthlessness and renounces his former associates who have been responsible for his downfall. We see that he keeps his word and Lucy finds happiness with the faithful Blair.

THREE SUITORS AND A DOG (Feb. 7).—When Ethel's three suitors call and find that her pet dog, Fifi, is receiving most of the young lady's attentions, they enter into a conspiracy and hire a newsboy to appropriate the pet. Then each of the young men conceives the idea of "double-crossing" his companions and each secures a dog to replace Fifi.

Percy, Harold and Clarence call, respectively, bringing a new pet for Ethel, who readily sees that something is wrong but keeps her peace. She keeps the young men separated so that each is unmindful of the presence of the other. Finally she brings them together and states that each is a hero. "But," she inquires, "each of you claim to have restored my dog. Now which one of these is Fifi?" Before the boys can summon a reply, the newsboy enters carrying the real Fifi and throws a bomb into the parlor when he announces "Dese guys paid me to swipe your dog, but me mudder made me bring it back!"

THE MATRIMONIAL VENTURE OF THE BAR X HANDS (Feb. 7).—The ranch hands read in the paper that six handsome young women are on their way West from Boston, escorted by a chaperon. The paper makes the comment that inasmuch as women are scarce in the vicinity of Red Butte, no doubt the lonely ranchmen will extend a cordial welcome. Foremost in making preparations is Jim, who feels that the most sedate of the Eastern ladies cannot resist him. Fearing that Jim will "cut them out," the boys bend their energies toward frustrating him and the result is that they lose out entirely. The ladies depart in disgust—all save the chaperon, who decides to cast her lot with Jim.

LADY PEGGY'S ESCAPE (Feb. 8).—A party of Queen Bess's marauding soldiers take possession of the Fitzgerald Castle and expel the rightful owners. The invaders begin to make merry while the evicted family seeks shelter in a hermit's cave. Lady Peggy, however, is not permitted to leave with her family as the rioters insist that she remain and be the subject of their toasts.

The resourceful young woman pretends to be agreeable and sits down to dinner with two of the soldiers, while the others conduct themselves riotously in the wine cellar. At an opportune moment Peggy rushes to her room and locking the door, proceeds to fasten a rope to the bed and throws the end out of the window. She succeeds in making a perilous descent to the ground and rides for help.

The rioters follow in pursuit and locate the evicted family in the cave. Determined to be revenged on Peggy, the soldiers, now in a maudlin stupor from their libations, proceed to smoke out the refugees. Just as the desperate family is about to give up hope, Peggy arrives with assistance, but does not succeed in liberating her people until she has dispatched the heartless leader of the marauders in a duel.

THE LAST BLOCKHOUSE (Special, 2 Reels) (Feb. 7).—A party of western pioneers, while constructing a block-house, are guarded by a troop under Captain Steele. Crow, a renegade half-breed, tries to become friendly. He annoys Dot, the wife of Jim, a young settler, and is quickly repulsed.

Crow, infuriated at her scorn, incites the Indians to attack the settlers. The block-house is destroyed. Crow captures Dod before the attack and rides off toward the camp.

Jack, the sole survivor, manages to reach the young husband, who is away in the woods, while Jim and Captain Steele recapture Dot from the Indians, and in a hand-to-hand struggle with Crow, Jim avenges the fate of the pioneers.

SELIG.

THE GOVERNOR'S DAUGHTER (Feb. 3).—Jim Carey finds an old prospector dying in the desert, and is entrusted with his treasure as a reward for hastening for help. This good act is witnessed by Galvez, who harbors revenge against Carey. He finds his knife, finishes the old man in the desert, and charges Carey with the crime. In his wild ride for the doctor Carey saves the stage from a hold-up and rescues the governor's daughter. In the plea for executive clemency, made by his mother, to save him from the scaffold, she shows his picture to the governor and it is recognized by his daughter, which establishes his alibi, and brings his accuser, Galvez, to justice.

SWEENEY AND THE MILLION (Feb. 4).—Sweeney, a hod carrier, falls heir to a million, and proceeds to rake in all the cash that he and a corps of messenger boys can carry. He sees a taxicab and the chauffeur demands so much an hour. Sweeney buys the machine outright, and throws the ex-owner out. He and his wife race up and down the city and create a sensation by "loud" attire and equally "loud" eating in a swell cafe. They also give a ball that has some extraordinary dancing "stunts" on the part of the Sweeneys. As a finale, he goes to a fashionable "club" and is trimmed of spare cash and all his other property, real and personal, as the result of a rash bet across a revolving card table. He is thrown out and goes back to the hod next morning in his dress suit.

THE THREE WISE MEN (Feb. 5).—A few years ago J. J. Tissot dawned upon the world of art with new views of the Holy Land through modern eyes, that was startlingly realistic. In this charming little miracle play in which a wealthy rounder is transported from the Great White Way to the lonely desert to meditate upon the holy truths of a little pamphlet a Salvation Army lass has thrust in his careless hand, the three wise men come out of the East, on camels as of old, and impress the scornful eye of doubt. The young man follows them under the guiding star of Bethlehem, to their destination, but, is refused admission to the lonely stable until he cleanses his soul. Then he awakens from his dream, sanctified by the lesson of the ages.

HOW IT HAPPENED (Feb. 6).—Honest Dan Ryan is in love with Grace Daniels, the daughter of a drunken saloonist. This unworthy threatens to shoot Dan on sight if he continues his attentions to his daughter. The young woman, intent upon keeping the peace and saving her lover, empties her father's gun, but carelessly throws the cartridges into the stove. When the old man lights the fire he gets a bullet for his pains and the blame is laid at Dan's door. He escapes the avenging posse and eventually marries the girl.

THE ARTIST AND THE BRUTE (Feb. 7).—Alice Atkins, artist, specializes in wild animal painting. She falls in love with Hortez, an intrepid animal trainer. This is resented by Barker, the proprietor of the menagerie, who fails to attract her admiration. While she is painting in an enclosed arena some lions, the diabolical Barker turns into the arena a hungry and ferocious leopard. The efforts of Alice to defend herself brings Hortez unexpectedly on the scene. He kills the leopard, but one of his shots flying wild, ends the life of the would-be assassin Barker.

THE MILLIONAIRE COWBAY (Special 2 Reels) (Feb. 3).—During a wonderful exhibition of horsemanship and cowboy skill. "Bud," the foreman of the Diamond S ranch, is handed a telegram summoning him to Chicago to claim a fortune left him by an uncle. There he falls in love and marries the stenographer in the office of his attorneys. fter a year he tires of the motony of the life he leads and wires for the entire outfit to come to Chicago and wake the town up. They carry out instructions elaborately much to the embarrassment of Mrs. "Bud." After they leave, "Bud" embraces his wife and to her great relief, whispers 'Never again.'

BIOGRAPH.

BROTHERS (Feb. 3).—His dumb grief was mistaken for indifference at his mother's death-bed, but it was the non-committal lady who learned the truth. The favorite son came to woo and win her. She made fine biscuits. In the end, as is quite apt to be the case, the lady gave up herself and her accomplishments in a way quite unexpected.

OIL AND WATER (Feb. 6).—The dancer, as the saying is, was a "good actress on and off." To the idealist she appeared the living goddess of the dance and as such she entered his home. Then came the moment of illusion. The goddess became the actress longing for the life that was past. Oil and water each found its own and what might have been a fatal mistake was rectified by sacrifice.

LUBIN.

THE LOST NOTE (Feb. 3).—Jennie, a poor girl, and Mrs. Manning, her blind mother, are ignored by the people in the village in which they live, and the mother and daughter are reduced to abject poverty. The girl tries to get food on credit, but is refused. The new minister, who has just arrived in town, tries to help the girl by giving her money, but being proud, she refuses it. After two futile attempts, the minister drops a five-dollar bill purposely where the girl will find it. The girl finds the money and buys food with the rest of the money after the settlement of her bill. The interest heightens when the landlord loses a five-dollar bill near Mrs. Manning's home while calling for rent. The poor girl is arrested for stealing money. She, however, is rescued from the village jail by the minister and his sister. They take Jennie to her home, where the money belonging to the landlord is found by Billy, the town half-wit, who has befriended the girl, and who accompanies her home with the minister and sister. The girl's innocence is proven and the landlord's lost bill is recovered.

A MOTORBOAT PARTY (Feb. 4).—Jerry Jones, an enthusiast on motorboating, asks some friends to go with him in a little party. They decide to go, so Jerry hires a motorboat, and his friends bring the lunch. Jerry tries to start the boat, but never having had experience, only knowledge gained from the guide how to run a motorboat, fails. The man, however, from whom he hired the boat, starts it and off they go. Failing to unfasten the boat, one of the boys goes on the dock and detaches it. As the boat is going he is pulled overboard and compelled to swim ashore.

Lunch is served and everyone eats and drinks heartily. Charley Graft, who has been imbibing too freely, goes to the stern to wash a plate and accidentally falls overboard. One of the boys throws him a life buoy with a rope attached to it, but he too is suddenly drawn into the water. They swim ashore and hail the boat. Jerry steers for the shore and one of the girls throws a line to the boys in the water. Jerry, not knowing how to stop the boat in order to make a turn, throws the girl into the water. Excitement ensues on board, during which Jerry is thrown into the water, leaving the three girls on the boat. Two of them try to stop the boat by hanging to a buoy and are dragged into the water, leaving Carrie Small alone. She tries to stop the boat, which she succeeds in doing, but cannot start it again. On making tn investigation she discovers that the gasoline tank is empty and there is none in the boat. Woman-like, she fills the tank with beer. The boat gets a jag and Carrie, in despair, leaps overboard. The boat goes off on its own account, doing all sorts of stunts in its delirium. Finally it returns to each person, who jumps from the water into the boat and returns home to the dock.

THE MISSING JEWELS (Feb. 4).—Just as James Y. Henry is about to leave home for his office, his wife requests him to place her pearl necklace in the bank safe deposit. She places the bag in his overcoat pocket. Then he remembers that he has forgotten his watch. In her husband's absence, Mrs. Henry receives a 'phone messags to attend a bridge party, and desiring to wear the necklace, takes the bag out of Henry's pocket and forgets to tell him of it.

In the employ of Henry is Miss Violet, a stenographer, Parker, the bookkeeper, and Sam, the shipping clerk. Sam is very fond of Miss Violet and invites her to a dance, which she refuses. Sam is much chagrined and makes an angry exit. Later Henry remembers the bag with the necklace. He finds that it has disappeared and makes inquiry. Still later Sam, through the window, sees Miss Violet place a small bag in her stocking and informs Mr. Henry. The girl is summoned and requested to produce the bag. Parker fights hard far the stenographer, but Sam, feeling sure of his game, telephones for the police. They force Violet to show the bag, which she digs out and displays the contents to be her powder puffs. In the meantime, Mrs. Henry has 'phoned to her husband to inform him that she has won the prize at bridge. He in return tells her of the missing necklace. This explains the mystery and Henry proposes to raise the girl's salary, but she advises that he shall raise Parker's salary instead, as they are about to be married.

KEEPING UP APPEARANCES (Feb. 7).—Bess Baring, a worthy working girl, primps up in her best for a Sunday promenade. Jack Holmes, a modest wage earner, resolves to give the girls a treat, and also primps up. They both select the park as the place of vantage. Jack is fortunate in encountering Bill Smith, who is taking a spin in his automobile. Smith invites Jack to get in, which invitation is cheerfully accepted.

Bess sits down on one of the benches and is watching the promenaders when a drunken hobo sits down by her side and commences to annoy her. The auto comes up just in time and the two boys jump out and spring to the rescue. The "boozer" is chased on his way and Jack gallantly sees the fair one home.

The well-appointed make-ups of each impress the other, and both believe that they have encountered a scion of society. Bess is quite impressed and invites Jack to call and meet mother and have dinner. She borrows from well-disposed friends, some fine dresses, a handsome dinner service and a maid. Jack hires a full dress suit. The deception is carried out admirably and Jack falls in love, but, of course, thinks his case is hopeless with such fine people. Bess encourages, but can hardly hope to win out. Next morning at work they reason to themselves and resolve to end the deception. Each writes to the other, making a clean breast. Going to mail the letters they meet in the corridor, the epistles of confession are exchanged and both are made happy.

THE PRICE OF JEALOUSY (Feb. 7).—Senorita Carmelita Morales, visiting the wife of Major Andrews, U. S. A., is shown much attention by Captain Herbert Richards, with whom she falls in love. Captain Salvada, of the Mexican Army, is a frequent caller at the post. Mildred West also comes to visit Mrs. Andrews, and Herbert at once forgets Carmelita, who is intensely jealous. Salvada attempts to show Mildred attentions, but receives no encouragement, she having taken a strong fancy to Herbert. Herbert catches Salvada cheating at cards and incurs the Mexican's hatred. Salvada leaves the post, swearing vengeance.

A troop goes to the target range camp, the major being in command, with Herbert second. Thinking her guests will enjoy a week of camp life, Mrs. Andrews takes the girls to the camp. Carmelita's jealousy has grown to a passion as she witnesses the love between Herbert and Mildred. She chances to encounter Salvada, and asks him to assist her in breaking up the affair. Salvada readily agrees, and writes a love letter, addressed to Mildred, making an appointment for a secret meeting. This letter, Carmelita arranges, shall fall into the hands of Herbert. Carmelita provides herself with a cloak identical with one worn by Mildred, and contrives that Herbert shall see her slipping away from the camp just before the time named for the meeting. Herbert follows the figure he supposes to be Mildred, and witnesses the meeting with Salvada. Insane with jealous fury, Herbert follows Salvada. Carmelita, fearing that harm will come to Herbert, in turn follows him, and witnesses his capture by Salvada's men. Carmelita overhears Salvada tell Herbert that he will square accounts by having him shot. She pins a note appealing for aid to the bridle of Herbert's horse, and drives the animal toward camp, she herself going to Salvada and appealing that no harm be done to Herbert. Salvada coldly tells her, however, that, having Herbert safely in his hands, he intends to be revenged, and orders that arrangements be made for his execution. Meanwhile, the horse has reached camp, the note has been read and the troop starts in search of Herbert. Herbert is placed before a firing squad. Carmelita throws herself in front of Herbert, shielding his body, and being herself mortally wounded. An instant later the American troop charges in and the Mexicans are killed or put to flight. Salvada is killed. Carmelita dies in Herbert's arms, paying the price of her jealousy.

THE MISER (Feb. 8).—Paul is the only son of John Osborne, a retired merchant. Osborne's life is centered in his son, his wife having been dead for years. He desires that Paul shall make a brilliant marriage. With this object in view, he arranges a match with the daughter of a wealthy acquaintance and notifies Paul of his plans. Paul, unknown to his father, has fallen in love with Alice, the daughter of a foreman in one of the mills. He strenuously objects to the proposed match. Matters are brought to a crisis, however, by the rejected suitor of Alice, who betrays the lovers to Paul's father.

One day the lovers are surprised by John Osborne, who demands that Paul give his sweetheart up. Paul refuses to do so, and, carried away with rage and disappointment, the father tells Paul to choose between him and his sweetheart. Love conquers duty. After their marriage, Paul takes Alice

SOME OF WHICH HAVE ALREADY BEEN PRODUCED BY ECLAIR to his father's house and pleads for a reconciliation, but his father spurns him. Paul secures a position in one of the mills. Two children come to bless the little home. Paul has become a sturdy, skilled worker. The elder Osborne grieves for his son, but his stubbornness will not permit of a reconciliation. He soon comes to be regarded as a miser by the townsmen.

Trouble and misfortune, however, come to darken the home of Paul and Alice. A panic sweeps over the country and one by one the mills are closed. The bank in which their small savings are kept fails. One of the babies falls ill, and Paul tramps the streets in search for work. One day, when he is returning from his fruitless search, he sees his father on the street, and withdraws out of his sight until the old man passes, but he hears the remarks of the bystanders and thinks how well he could use a little of his father's treasure. When he reaches home he finds the baby is failing, professional nursing, change of climate and money are needed to save the little one. Paul thinks of his father and the gossip he has heard. He resolves to rob his father.

That night he enters the familiar grounds for the first time since his marriage. He peers into the window and sees his father in the old chair. He slips into the room, through the window, and secretes himself to await the nocturnal visit to the treasure trove which he is sure his father will pay before retiring. The old man picks up the lamp and slowly climbs the stairs to the attic. Paul follows closely and secretes himself while his father produces an old tin box and places it on the table. The old man is soon lost in contemplation of the contents of the box, and Paul cautiously draws nearer, but when he sees what the box contains, he stands transfixed: a child's shoe, a top, marbles, a ball and mit, and many other relics of his own childhood and boyhood. He blindly turns to go, but in his agitation he strikes against a chair, and his father starts up in alarm. Paul confesses the object of his visit and the necessity which drove him to it, and asks forgiveness. The pride of the old man is at last broken. He sees the trouble and unhappiness it has brought to him and his son, and he begs Paul's forgiveness, and entreats to be taken to Alice, that he may make his peace with her. The little cottage presents a different scene now. John Osborne sits with the little ill grandchild on his knee and tells him of sunny climes and of the grand house where he will live when they return.

EDISON.

THE PRINCESS AND THE MAN (Feb. 1).—The King of Morania, a petty monarchy, is very unpopular. The people are badly governed and send a petition to their ruler, beseeching him for reform. The petition is presented to the king by two leaders of the people, Markowitz and Brand, and he, angry, tears the petition in two and dismisses the two men. As they go Brand's eyes meet those of the Princess Margaret. The look strikes deep in both.

The princess discovers that her maid, Lisette, has been summoned to a meeting of the revolutionary leaders of the people. She makes the maid take her to the meeting and there, hearing herself denounced, lifts her veil and confronts the men assembled. Brand comes to her defense; Markowitz is against her and the argument is heated when a squad of soldiers, who have been sent to arrest the leaders, pound at the door. Markowitz is for threatening the life of the princess to secure their own safety, but Brand urges the men to escape by the window and hasten to arouse the people. All escape over the roofs except Brand, the princess and Lisette, who remain to confront the soldiers. When the door is finally battered down the princess takes Brand's arm and walks out, the soldiers falling back dumbfounded. Brand comes into the presence of the king, whom they find alone in his study. He imploringly asks him to right the people's wrongs, but to no avail. Suddenly a servant rushes in and announces the palace has been entered by a great mob. the king goes to the throne, where they are assembled. The leader of the people begs him to consider their wrongs. He at first refuses. Then the speaker brings examples of his starving population and forgotten veterans before his majesty's gaze. He is dumbfounded and the princess, with an impulsive forward movement, snatches a pining baby from its mother, and holding it up in the presence of the multitude, swears to be a mother to her people and to use her influence with her father for their good. The king is overcome to such an extent that he nods his approval and the crowd cheer him to the echo.

OVER THE BACK FENCE (Feb. 3).—Colonel Crompton, a bachelor, and his nephew, Charles, live in a house adjoining that of Matilda Scraggs, an old maid, whose niece, Nell, is very much in love with the bachelor's nephew. The old folks are neighborly neighbors until one day the colonel's dog bites the old maid's cat and the trouble begins. The colonel declares his nephew must pay no more attention to Nell. The old maid forbids her niece to speak to Charles. The young folks, however, carry on their courtship just the same over the fence which divides the rear courts to their adjoining houses. The elders tear them apart whenever they catch them in conversation, and so persistent are they in their endeavors to separate the young couple that Charles and Nell secretly make an agreement to change their tactics and pretend to quarrel. This has the desired effect on the old people, who are contrary enough to induce the young people to make up again, especially as Charles makes himself quite agreeable to the old maid and Nell captivates the colonel.

The deception of the pretended quarrel is so cleverly carried out by the young couple that the elders become quite discouraged in their vain efforts to reunite them. The old maid hits upon a plan and invites the colonel and his nephew to an afternoon tea in her garden. The colonel, of course, accepts the invitation and attends promptly, accompanied by his nephew. Over their tea and cake the colonel mildly discusses the strange attitude of the young people, and after much advice and good counsel, the elders bring about, as they think, a most satisfactory reconciliation of the young couple.

THE PHANTOM SHIP (Feb. 4).—Allen, a sailor, returns from a long voyage just in time to miss seeing Ellis, a young village merchant, refused by Alice, who is Allen's affianced wife. Ellis' love is an honest one and he takes his refusal most manfully, but still has hopes.

After a lapse of six years, during which time Alice and Allen have married and have a little son, Allen has become a fisherman in order not to be away from his little family, but several bad fishing trips forced him to accept an offer to return to the life of a sailor as mate of a schooner about to sail.

Ellis' love for Alice is still alive and with Allen's departure his hopes again rose. Allen's ship is wrecked on an island in the South Seas, and for many months he and the crew were marooned hundreds of miles out of the course of passing vessels. The ship's only boat was finally sent with volunteers on a forlorn hope to try to bring help, but was never heard from.

Meanwhile Alice had given up hope and poverty had forced her to promise to marry Ellis.

Allen and his two remaining companions had been rescued by a passing ship and he is on his way home. His strong love and continual thoughts of his wife cause her to leave Ellis at the church door so that she may take a last look at the sea before she gives up her husband's name. She has a vision of the returning ship and refuses to marry Ellis. Allen returns after many days and the reunion is very appealing.

HOW THEY OUTWITTED FATHER (Feb. 5).—Annette, the daughter of Jay Forsythe, a wealthy but eccentric old banker, is secretly in love with her father's secretary, George Deal, who is a good-looking chap, but not yet blessed with the world's goods.

Old Forsythe has other views for his daughter, and insists on her marrying Peter Fossil, a rich and short-sighted old gentleman. Annette confides her father's wishes to George, who hatches up a plot to defeat the father's scheme; he proposes to disguise himself as the father, receive the unwelcome suitor, inquire into his past and finally eject him.

That evening George goes to a wig-maker and has himself fixed up in an exact imitation of old Forsythe. He also sends a message calling the banker away from home. When George presents himself before Annette the deception is so perfect she mistakes him for her father until he reveals his identity. Peter Fossil, the despised suitor, arrives promptly on time and proposes to Annette. She listens demurely and refers him to her father. George, disguised, puts old Fossil through the third degree until he is thoroughly discomfited then he peremptorily forbids him the house. Old Fossil is about to depart, never to call again, when suddenly Mr. Forsythe himself appears, indignant at having been called away on a fool's errand. To his surprise he sees his double standing before him; both men engage in comical gestures, as if trying to discover the identity of the other. Annette nestles up to George, claiming him as her father, while Forsythe sinks into a chair, a prey to doubt. He finally calls up the police department, describing George as a dangerous lunatic at large. Meanwhile George, with the aid of a toy pistol, forces Peter Fossil into another room and compels him to don the disguise and thus Fossil is transformed into Forsythe's double. George then brings Fossil before Forsythe, holding him until the police arrive and drag him off to prison. After this display of heroism George finds little difficulty in winning the heart and hand of Annette with her father's consent and best wishes.

SALLY'S ROMANCE (Feb. 7).—Sally is a pretty country girl, who is adored by young Joe from the next farm to her father's. An artist, tramping through the country, comes to Sally's house and asks for lodging while he paints. As he is a splendid looking fellow, Joe is not too happy over the arrangement. Then the artist sees Sally in a pretty light by the window and decides to paint a picture with Sally as the model. Of course this adds to Joe's disquietude. Sally's nature is touched by the young artist's personality though he is quite unconscious of anything save that he has a good model for his picture.

When he comes to go Sally refuses money for the posing and as she has admired a heavy antique ring which he wears, he gives it to her for herself. He returns to New York and Sally looks vainly for a letter from him, At last, however, the picture wins a prize and the artist writes to Sally telling her of its success and saying that if he was in a position to do so he would offer her a permanent engagement. These words to Sally mean an offer of marriage, and she accordingly takes her money from her little bank, packs up a few things and starts to the city to find him.

Joe, who has lost heart but not determination, follows her to the city. When Sally arrives at the studio she looks through the half open door and what she sees makes her drop to her knees in a girlish passion of tears; a reception is taking place inside and the artist and his bride to be are being congratulated by the assembled guests. Joe comes up the stairs and finds the little figure in a heap outside the artist's door, lifts her up and takes her away with him.

On the way home Sally stops, leans on the rail of a little bridge, and slowly drawing off the artist's ring, drops it into the stream below. Then she lays her head on Joe's shoulder and they start for home, wiser and happier.

THE GOVERNESS (Feb. 8).—Jane Black is governess in charge of the children of William Crane, a wealthy widower. Her father is an unreliable old promoter who has lived an unprofitable life, working at shady enterprises which are close to the edge of crime. He is anxious that Jane shall introduce him to her employer and use her influence to his advantage, but she refuses. The old man suspects the truth that Mr. Crane and Jane are becoming fond of each; in any event he calls upon Crane and tries to interest him in some cheap mining stock, and Crane, eager to be good to Jane's father, willingly buys.

It happens that Crane has just finished the drawing of his latest invention. There is only one drawing which he and his secretary have just been looking over and the secretary is advising him to have a second one made when Black is announced. Crane decides to see him and dismisses his secretary. The drawing is left upon the table. Black sees it and realizes its value. He contrives to steal it, takes it home and cunningly hides it and writes to Crane demanding a large sum for its return.

Crane is in a quandary. He loves Jane though he has not yet told her so. He cannot therefore order the arrest of her father as he would an ordinary blackmailer, so he determines to pay the money. Meanwhile Jane has discovered what her father has done. She is in agony; the only thing for her to do is to recover and return the drawing before Crane has paid over the money. She makes a desperate search and at last finds it after a scene full of suspense.

Crane is just about to pay the money to Black when Jane rushes in with the stolen drawing. Black in a blind rage would kill her, but Crane restrains him and the old man realizing how much he has lost and what he must appear in the eyes of his daughter and Crane, leaves crushed and broken. Left alone with Jane, Crane declares his love.

A WHITE ROSE (Feb. 5).—Mabel Barlow, a young widow, to avoid meeting a suitor of her father's choosing, goes to visit her friend, Mrs. Jefferson. The widow gives the bride her opinion of men in general. She dares Mrs. Jefferson to test her husband's faithfulness. Jefferson, the storm center of all this, come shome with Captain Harding, an old and long-lost acquaintance. He finds a letter asking him to meet a lady admirer in the park and to wear a white rose for identification, and shows it to the gay captain. Jefferson being married, Harding leaves to meet the mysterious young lady. Jefferson discovers that the captain has forgotten the white rose, gets one and hurries after him. Mrs. Jefferson sees her husband going out with the white rose and her faith in him collapses. Harding meets the mysterious young lady, who immediately gives him her opinion of a married man who flirts. Perplexed, Harding returns to Jefferson's home. He finds Mrs. Jefferson ready to leave her husband. The situation is cleared, however, when Harding enters, wearing a white rose.

THE BEAR HUNTER (Feb. 6).—Iron Spider, an Indian trapper, loves Red Wing and she accompanies him on many of his hunting trips. On this occasion she meets Eagle Feather, who is searching for a bear which has been seen in the vicinity. Red Wing and Eagle Feather fall in love at first sight, but when Iron Spider returns he orders Eagle Feather away and the latter resumes his hunt for the bear. Eagle Feather is watching for the bear from the brink of a ravine when a figure with an upraised knife lunges at him from behind. Eagle Feather bends low and Iron Spider falls over him and down the steep incline. It is very well done. Red Wing arrives about this time. Eagle Feather tells his story and he and Red Wing descend to the bottom of the ravine where they find Iron Spider, dead.

THE PEACE COUNCIL (Feb. 8).—Alice Carroll, the daughter of a white settler, and Little Blackbird, an Indian Boy, are playmates. Blackbird breaks Alice's doll and both little hearts are filled with sorrow. Blackbird, seeking to make a new doll for Alice, uproots a section of a cornfield, brings the corn to Alice and together they manufacture a doll. A quarrel over the doll ensues, and to patch it up, Blackbird makes a pipe of peace out of an ear of corn. They both smoke the corn husk and become sick. The damage to the cornfield is discovered by Alice's father and his cowboys. Getting their guns, they prepare to wreak vengeance upon the Indians, presuming that they are guilty. As the cowboys and Indians are about to fire upon each other, Alice, with her corn doll, and Blackbird, with his headache, toddle in between the warring factions. The cause of the damaged cornfield is explained and instead of a battle, there is held a peace council.

C. G. P. C.

THE PITCHER PLANT (Feb. 4).—This film is a splendid series of views of a remarkable plant. The pitcher plant grows, as its name suggests, in the form of a pitcher with a lid upon it. It is an unfailing trap for insects, inviting them within its folds and then drowning them in the water it contains. The trapping of flies, bees and other insects is cleverly and clearly demonstrated.

THE SWEDISH SUBMARINE MANEUVRES (Feb. 4).—An absorbingly interesting film. A film permitting a close inspection of a modern submarine, showing the preparations for the plunge, the submarine submerged and the firing of a torpedo.

THE FRENCH ARMY MANEUVERS (Feb. 7).—Regiments of French artillery, infantry, cavalry and an engineering corps, go through a mimic war, being opposed by a force of like strength. After being forced to lay temporary telegraph lines, build pontoon bridges, and transport the cavalry across the river in small boats, the invading army is successful. The fighting men show remarkable ability and the majority of their feats are of the spectacular sort.

THE OPENING BUD (Feb. 7).—The different stages before a flower is fully blown are shown in this film. If one watched a bud constantly for three weeks they would have the satisfaction of observing its gradual growth, and this is exactly what they see here with the original coloring.

JED HOLCOMB'S PRIZE BOX (Feb. 3).—Louise is her daddy's joy and pride. She is the darling of the boys, but she favors bashful Si. Joel proposes to Louise, who very promptly turns an optimist into a misanthrope.

Daddy and the boys dread the plowing and view the many tillable acres with dislike. Joel, having a desire to see some one else humiliated as well as himself, makes a proposition to daddy, who slaps his leg and adopts it.

The next day the boys see a notice posted up, which reads: "The boy who ploughs the most ground by the end of the week will be given my little pet." The boys gasp. He means Louise! They fall over each other to get the plows and the acres are furrowed in the shortest time on record. Si is tickled to death. The others consider a demand for a substantial bonus for faithful service, for Si wins in a plough walk.

The prize giving day arrives and Joel assists dad in putting a little pet goat in a big box. It is covered up and daddy and Joel go to prepare for the presentation ceremony. They have reckoned without their gift, however, for Louise has seen their little plot and sets to work to overthrow their sinister machinations.

She liberates the goat. Louise conceals herself in the box. Si undoes the box, and lo! Louise pops out.

ONE ON AUNTY (Feb. 3).—Jack and Mabel love. The same old tale, but there is a sour old aunty in the case. When Jack loses his patience she calls it impertinence. They decide to elope, and get as far as the waiting auto, but the Aunt arrives in the nick of time and manages to somersault into the tonneau of the auto. She commands them to stop and listen; they will not stop but they have to listen.

Hungry time arrives and the party stop to discuss the contents of the luncheon basket. Two tramps also arrive and discuss the auto and its inhabitants. One of them dons Jack's duster. Jack bribes both the men—one for his impersonation and the other to make himself scarce. He introduces the one as a titled personage to the aunt, who is soon captivated by the interest the stranger takes in her. He is not backward and the young people take one good look and sneak away into the bushes, where they watch the tramp's progress.

All goes well until the tramp discovers the lunch and proceeds to pack it up—within him. This is too much for his watching pal, who demands his share and who eventually tumbles into aunty's lap, when a most undignified struggle ensues. The duster comes apart and the tramp is revealed.

Jack and Habel triumph over poor aunty's chagrin and humiliation, and from thence forth Jack is free to call and to stay as long as he pleases.

FATTY AND THE BANDITS (Feb. 5).—Fatty and Lucy were secretly engaged to be married, but his two rivals, Tom and Dick, were determined to secure Lucy for themselves; so, when they saw the young people together, they promptly told her father, and the girl was taken to the house and told to stay there.

In the meanwhile, the sheriff had offered a big reward for two desperate, masked bandits, and Tom and Dick, thinking to make Fatty ridiculous forever in Lucy's eyes, persuades him to start out to capture the bandits. Fatty was not inclined to undertake the mission, until he heard the boys describing how they would make-up as the bandits, and run Fatty ragged. Changing the revolvers filled with blank cartridges to real ones, Fatty set out, but instead of overtaking the boys, he came upon the real bandits and thinking them the boys, boldly captured them and marched them off, just as they were about to hold up the ranchman.

The boys, in the meanwhile, were captured by the sheriff and his posse, and it was not until Fatty identified them at the ranch, much to his secret terror and astonishment, that Tom and Dick were permitted to go, while the sheriff led off the real article. The ranchman was so delighted with Fatty's bravery and the saving of his gold, that he promptly handed Lucy over to the hero, while his rivals slunk away in disgrace.

THE STRIKE BREAKERS (Feb. 7).—Roy, an easy going young man, is persuaded by Milly to wake up and show his mettle. He is made sheriff, and Milly accepts him. Her father, Mr. Carston, is the manager of some profitable mines, and his foreman, Larsen, has hopes of marrying Milly. He starts to propose to her, but she shows him her ring and tells him she is engaged to Roy. Larsen is embittered and his sullen nature calls for vengeance upon the woman who threw him over.

His chance arrives when Mr. Carston goes to an adjoining town to get the money from the bank for the pay roll. The weather has been bad, and the stream is swollen, and the bridge has been destroyed. Mr. Carston is obliged to fume and fuss.

The miners finish work for the day. They cross the small bridge which spans a chasm, and which leads from the mines to the miners' cabins and the paymaster's office, and go to get their money. They are informed that the pay roll is delayed. Mr. Carston not having returned, and are asked to call back later.

Larsen seizes the opportunity to inflame the miners. He tells them that Carston is trying to beat them out of their wages, and incites them to demand their money at once. Milly overhears this, and sending a messenger to Roy, she rides off to see what has happened to the stage. She rides hard and comes to the opposite side of the stream. She explains the desperate situation, and Mr. Carston throws her the bag across the stream. She gets it and hurries off as the stage driver and passengers start to construct a temporary bridge across the stream.

In the meantime, the men have gotten beyond control. They smash the paymaster's office and disarm and capture two deputies sent ahead by Roy. Roy arrives, and warns the miners to hold off, but as they press forward, he spurs to the bridge, and setting his horse free, he draws his revolvers and tells the men that he will kill the first man who sets fot upon the bridge. He cowes the miners, but one throws a rock, badly injuring Roy, who staggers and supports himself by holding on to the bridge rail. The man follows it up and jumps onto the bridge, and Roy promptly kills him. The crowd surges back as Milly dashes up behind Roy, holding the black bag on high, and crying she has the wages.

The miners are ashamed and vent their feelings upon Larsen, who is rescued by Roy, who will not give in until he has marched his men safely to jail. He then collapses. His reward is the adoration of Milly, and the thanks of her parents.

POWERS.

THEIR MUTUAL FRIEND (Feb 7).—David Rush, a wealthy young clubman, has entrusted his funds to his bosom friend, Phil Stewart, a Wall Street operator. Suffering from ennui, David goes to the Stewart's home for a change. He is warmly welcomed by Mrs. Stewart, with whom David is an old-time friend and favorite. Stewart's great coup has proven to be a failure, and whilst he has saved his own neck to a large extent, he has sacrificed David's money and he is virtually ruined.

David's sister gets the news and wires him. Appalled at the sudden disaster, David asks if the news is true, and Stewart admits it is so. The men quarrel, and goaded to madness David attacks his erstwhile friend. They are separated and David threatens to kill Stewart.

Another coup is successful and, at Mrs. Stewart's solicitation, Stewart recoups David's losses and he visits their family again. The hazardous life Stewart had led has told upon his nerves, and when Mrs. Stewart gives him a list of her liabilities, he flies into a terrible passion and strikes her. He hits her in a vulnerable place and she falls. He is unable to revive her. Shocked out of his reason, Stewart shoots himself.

David finds the bodies, and remembering his threat to kill Stewart and fearing he will be arrested, he leaves but is seen by friends. The bodies are found, suspicion points to David, and he is arrested. He is submitted to the third degree. Unable to stand the strain of the brutal questioning, he succumbs and says he committed the deed. At the trial his senses are deadened and he scarcely listens to the damning evidence. Suddenly an invalid is wheeled into court. He insists upon a hearing. He tells how he sat at his window and saw the Stewart tragedy. He describes the incidents as they happened and explains how he sank back unconscious from the shock. David is freed and returns to his world with his character unsmirched.

A MAN'S WOMAN (Feb. 1).—Jeff Steele has for a partner a trapper named Mason, who is enamoured of Steele's wife, Julia. Mason and Steele return from a gambling house, somewhat intoxicated, and Mason takes advantage of Steele's condition to make love to his wife, but Julia is too wary for him, and drives him from the cabin. In revenge, Mason takes Steele back to the gambling hall and plies him with more liquor, until he becomes stupefied. Then the two accompany "The Swede," who has just broke the bank, to his cabin, and Mason robs the Swede, laying the crime on the stupefied Steele. Steele is arrested for the crime, and is to be tried by the vigilantes. Julia, who is positive of her husband's innocence, believes Mason guilty of the crime, and appeals to the sheriff and others for help, but the evidence seems so clear against Steele that they refuse to do anything. Then the brave little woman by a clever ruse, appearing to have forgotten her husband and to have fallen in love with Mason, secures the evidence with which to convict Mason and free her innocent husband.

THE BRANDED SIX-SHOOTER (Feb. 5).—In the little town of Martinez, N. M., lived two brothers, Buck and Dave Conners, who were unfortunate enough to love the same girl, Ruby Howard, the daughter of a rich rancher. Ruby shows her preference for the elder brother, Buck, which causes jealousy to spring up in the heart of Dave. While in this mood he is accosted by a casual acquaintance, a low-browed Mexican, who takes him over to the village saloon where they meet Jack Saunders, a man of bad repute. Through the influence of Saunders and Pedro, the Mexican, Dave agrees to carry out a little job. He agrees to meet them at a certain time at a spot known as the "hole in the rock." In the meantime, Pedro has had a little trouble with an Indian. The Indian leaves him with revenge in his heart. Dave arrives home. Buck, his brother, who has arrived home previously, takes his mother into the house to partake of their supper. Left alone with his own thoughts, Dave discovers that his brother Buck, has left his six-shooter and holster hanging on the wall. Dave, in his jealous anger, sees his chance to repay his brother for winning Ruby's affections; he steals his brother's gun, which is branded on the handle with his name. He goes to the appointed place to meet Pedro and Saunders, and while they are laying their plans they are overheard by the Indian, who rushes into the village and informs the sheriff of what they intend to do.

The afternoon stage is on its down trip and Dave, with his two evil companions, carry out their plans, Dave leaving his brother's gun purposely on the ground, so that the blame will fall upon his brother. The stage arrives at the postoffice, and Ruby's father and mother tell Ruby what has happened and inform her that her sweetheart, Buck Conners, is guilty of the crime, because his gun was found by the horse's head. She leaves her father and mother and goes to Buck's home, calls his brother at the door and tells him that Buck is arrested for the crime. While Dave is listening to her, he accidentally gives himself away, and she accuses him of doing the job and laying the blame on Buck. She begs and implores with him to save his brother and a good streak of manhood comes to Dave. He leaves Ruby and goes to the spot where the loot is hidden and decides to bring it back to the sheriff. While there, Pedro and Saunders come upon him; he holds them up at the point of the gun and forces them to carry the loot into the village and turns them over to the sheriff, telling him that it was not his brother Buck, who committed the crime, but him. Dave afterwards is released.

HIS SISTER (Feb. 9).—George Halsey associates with evil companions, but manages to keep the knowledge of it from his sister with whom he is living, both being orphans. George commits a theft and is arrested and convicted. The sister, in order to get away from the disgrace, goes to a small country town and becomes a professional nurse. She becomes acquainted with Phillips Moore, a minister while nursing his sister through an illness. Their friendship ripens into love and later, when Phillips proposes marriage, she accepts.

George, on being released from jail, takes up his old life. He comes to the same town where his sister is living, and makes an attempt at robbing the minister's house. He is surprised in his act, but manages to make his escape, but is shot. He evades his pursuers, but the loss of blood from his wound renders him unconscious. He is found by his sister. She takes him into her home. He stays there until he has recovered from his wounds, his presence being kept a secret.

Some gossiping neighbors find out that George is in the house and the tongue of scandal starts wagging. The news reaches the minister's ears and he goes to Lois' house to ascertain the truth. The sister, fearing that if her brother is recognized it would cause his arrest, denies his presence in the house. The minister, knowing that Lois is untruthful, misconstrues her motive. He leaves the house and decides to break off their engagement.

George realizes that his sister has lost the man she loves in order to protect him. His manhood asserts itself. He goes to the minister, makes a confession to him, explaining all to the minister's satisfaction. The minister and Lois are brought together again. The brother leaves them, after vowing to lead a better life.

THE LABYRINTH (Feb. 2).—Polowsky, a Pole of the intellectual class, arrives in America, together with his wife and Rachel, his little girl. He finds it hard to get work and the little family are getting to the hungry stage, when Polowsky gets employment as a railroad laborer; but they are all grieved when they learn that Polowsky must leave them.

Polowsky endeavors to get an advance of wages to send his wife, but the boss will not hear of it. The wife and child are turned out by the landlord, and Mrs. Polowsky, fainting in the street, is picked up by Mr. and Mrs. Weston, who take her to the hospital. She dies, and the Westons adopt Rachel. Polowsky returns, and has a fruitless search for his child.

Years pass. Polowsky becomes a peddler. He calls at the house of George Scott, the Forest Ranger, and whilst showing his goods, Rachel comes up with Cartwright, who is paying his attentions to Rachel, and the Westons. Polowsky sees Rachel make a familiar motion with her hand to her hair. He recognizes the gesture, and asks Scott where the girl lives. Scott gives him the direction, and he arrives at the Weston mansion. He shows his wares, and is ridiculed by Cartwright and the ladies. He is about to go, when Rachel ACCIDENT INSURANCE (Feb. 9).—Pearl White opens an office in Red Dog, Nevada, as an agent of The Quick Pay Accident Insurance Company. She goes out for business and makes herself known to all the miners in town and awaits their applications. The first to call is Chester. He gets insured and a little later accidentally shoots himself in the arm. He collects his insurance money, and tells all the boys of his good fortune. Instantly there is a rush of business and Pearl is swamped with applications. She issues policies to all. Then the men devise schemes to get hurt. One rolls down the mountain side. Another shoots himself in the arm. Still another trifles with a box of dynamite and so on down the line until there is not a man in town who cannot boast of some injury. They anxiously await the money from the main office and are somewhat dismayed when Pearl receives a letter from the main office of the company that it has failed and that they cannot collect. Pearl is in a fair way to being mobbed when Chester, who has taken quite a fancy to her, rescues her and the men have naught to do but to congratulate the pair on their approaching wedding festival.

HER LADY FRIEND (Feb. 9).—Belmont pays attention to Miss Alden. When he calls, she is entertaining her friend Miss Pounds, a man-chasing old maid. She immediately claims Belmont as her own and he cannot shake her. He hits upon a scheme to make his friend Slick, a promoter, the recipient of Miss Pounds' attentions, but Slick is all for Miss Alden. Miss Pounds is informed that her aunt has left her a fortune of $5,000 and Belmont apprises Slick of this fact, telling him that he can get her to invest it in his schemes. Slick, however, fools Belmont by writing a note to Miss Pounds telling her that she has been left $50,000 instead of $5,000, and leaves the letter where Belmont can see it. Belmont immediately rushes to Miss Pounds' home and proposing to her is accepted. Slick, meanwhile, has proposed to Miss Alden and when Belmont and Miss Pounds call on Miss Alden they find Slick there. They explain that they are engaged, as do Slick and Miss Alden, and Belmont cannot understand the hilarious laughter that greets his announcement of his engagement to Miss Pounds, due to Slick's little trick.

PERCY H. BALDWIN, TRIFLER (Feb. 7).—Elsie Norris is the pride of her older sister, Jane. After the death of their mother, Jane has taken the household cares upon her and mothers her young sister. Elsie is cashier in a restaurant. She is admired by her patrons. A young man meets the little cashier.

Percy H. Baldwin, as he signs his name to his famous paintings, lives in luxurious bachelor apartments connected with his studio. He dismisses his model and goes to ask the girl at the restaurant to pose for him. She consents. Her father denounces her. Heart sick and discouraged, Elsie goes to the artist and tells him. He confesses his love for her and asks her to marry him.

In the meantime, Jane and her father hunt for Elsie, and heart-broken, the father dies. Jane accidentally meets Elsie in the street. Elsie learns of her father's death and takes Jane home with her.

Percy is stunned by the beauty of the sister, Jane, and he makes love to her. She, not knowing he is married, is horrified when Elsie walks into the room, sees them and denounces him. With Jane she goes back to her humble home. There her husband follows her, pleading with her to return to him. She refuses. There, in sorrow, he leaves her—not broken in spirit by her refusal, for out of doors he meets an old sweetheart and goes off for a ride in his auto. For Percy H. Baldwin, trifler, soon finds happiness in another's face.

BISON.

MONA OF THE MODOCS (2 reels—Feb. 4).—Lieutenant Carter, with his young wife and one year old baby, arrives at the new settlement, where they are well received. A squaw, Machee Chee, looks with awe at the pretty baby and is allowed to carry it. The young couple go to the store to buy a cradle. The storekeeper laughs and tells them that they have no use for them there. The cowboys overhear this. They get a log and carve out a rough, but comfortable cradle, which they present at a party given on baby's first birthday.

The settlers invade the Modoc lands and their intrusion is fiercly resented by the Indians. The settlers stand by their guns and continue to settle. The Indians set out upon their era of extermination. They attack isolated settlers and massacre them.

At Yreka the settlers welcome the cavalry, and two miners, coming upon the ruins of a wagon train with its victims, ride back to Yreka and give the alarm. Lieut. Carter bids his wife good-bye and leads his troopers and the settlers to the Indian camp, where they propose to punish the red skins.

The Indian scouts are on the alert. One returns to the camp to report the coming of the cavalry and then goes out to meet the cavalry and offers to lead them to the camp. Carter threatens him with death if he plays them false. The Modocs resolve to hide their whereabouts and remove their camp, leaving it sorrowfully. Machee Chee is with them. The Indian scout comes to the brow of a hill, warning the cavalry to wait whilst he goes ahead to reconnoiter. He disappears over the hill, cuts his horse adrift and hides in a hollow tree. Carter soon realizes he has been fooled, and follows. When they have passed by the Indian scout, he cuts through the brush and eventually reaches the new camp and reports to his chief, being rewarded with an eagle feather for his bravery and cunning.

The Modocs are approached by the Shoshones and an alliance against the pale face is formed. The war dance is danced. Machee Chee listens and fears for her white friends. She steals off and warns the settlers. She continues on to Yreka. Her horse 'goes lame. She runs on foot and arrives exhausted, but has fulfilled her mission.

The Indians attack a settler's cabin. One Indian climbs on the roof. The doman within pours feathers on the fire and the Indian staggers and falls from the roof half suffocated. The Indians are interrupted by the coming of the soldiers.

Machee Chee tells Mrs. Carter she must go and help save the cavalry and rides away. She spurs on and from a point of vantage sees the Indians preparing to ambush the cavalry. Machee Chee comes up as the battle is being waged. She sees Carter fall, struck by a bullet. She puts on a dead brave's head dress to disguise herself and drags him away, helps him on a horse and rides to his home.

The soldiers and the settlers rally, turn the tide of battle and rout the red skins. Machee Chee brings Carter to his wife and when his wound is all attended to she goes to the cradle, picks up the baby she is going to remain to nurse, and places it in Carter's arms.

A FRONTIER MYSTERY (Feb. 8).—The Indian chief mourns for and is burying his little child, and his squaw is inconsolable. An Indian goes to a saloon and is plied with the forbidden firewater. Another Indian tries to get him to leave. He refuses and when he finds he is being tricked by a gambler, a fight ensues and the Indian is killed. His companion escapes and tells the chief that his brother has been killed by a pale face.

The chief swears vengeance. He goes to the fort to demand justice, and is told that Red Tape demands a civil and not a military trial. The chief, unable to comprehend and believing that there is no justice where the red skins are concerned, takes an oath over his brother's body to exterminate the pale faces.

The Indians go on the war path. They first attack isolated settlers and in one instance are repulsed by sharp shooters, who pick off several of the red skins from a tree. Prarie schooners, filled with settlers fleeing from the avenging Indians, leave their wagons and ride off on the horses. A party of several wagons is caught and massacred. A woman has her baby torn from her arms by the Indian chief, who is about to kill both when his squaw, with the mother instinct, begs him to save the woman and to let her have the child to fill the void caused by the loss of her own baby. The Indians decamp with the little girl, and when the troopers arrive they find a raving woman, bereft of reason. The squaw cuddles the baby to her bosom and is content.

Fifteen years later the poor mad woman lives in a tree house. It is partially ornamented with scalps—scalps of Indians, for the wild woman has become the scourge of the red man. She hunts amongst the rocks. When the Indians approach she throws a rock at one of them. He falls dead. His superstitious companions flee in terror. The wild woman laughs with glee and adds another scalp to her collection.

The little white child taken by the squaw grows into a beautiful young woman and she lives happily with the Indians and is attached to the squaw.

The authorities at Washington write to the commandant of the fort, requesting that investigation be made of the presence of a wild woman stated to be in the vicinity of the fort. a young lieutenant offers to take it up unofficially, and is granted permission.

The wild woman kills another Indian and the tribe is filled with terror. The young lieutenant, at the head of a detachment, visits the Indians and learns of the terrible scourge. Several of them lead the lieutenant to the scene of the outrages. The wild woman sees the cavalry and hesitates. Then she sees the Indians and savagely kills one with a rock from her three home. An Indian fires, and the lieutenant climbs the tree and finds her desperately wounded on her platform. The cavalry take her, unconscious to the Indian camp where she is laid on a pallet in a tepee. White Dove bathes her head and the woman comes to and looks at her curiously. She suddenly grabs at the locket White Dove is wearing and faints. The lieutenant notes all this and interviews the chief, when he learns how his squaw adopted the child, thinking the mother dead. The lieutenant is much attracted to the beautiful girl. Time passes. The mother recovers her reason and is taken back to civilization.

ECLAIR.

THE AMERICAN NIECE (Feb. 2).—Betty was a typical American hoyden. She liked athletics, and of course she seemed queer to the folk in the little Paris town where she was visiting her uncle to get a French education. A typical "stunt" was the invitation of a little girl organ-grinder and her blind grandfather, to a fine luncheon.

The hundred of extravagances which she insister upon took all her uncle's money, and suddenly she realizes that her kind relatives have been ruined. That shock changed the little lady completely. She immediately hurries to make up for her foolishness, and among other things, get a nice big check from father, which much more than repays her relatives for their wasted savings.

BATHERS IN CEYLON (Feb. 2).—You know they grow tea in Ceylon. But did you know what a beautiful land it is. In the Summer season the natives spend most of their time in the water. In a most interesting travelogue on the same reel as "The American Niece" you see the dusky islanders using the waterfalls for shower baths, and other decidedly unusual views.

FOR THE CHILD'S SAKE (Feb. 4).—When the mother of little Clara died, one year before, they did not tell her the sad truth. Clara had very poor eyes and the best physicians did not know how to help her.

The father was a celebrated lawyer and just about the time when the most acute pain was about over, he happened to have a suit for a beautiful young actress, who had gotten into difficulties with her manager. He won the suit, and the actress who was a very pretty girl, made quite an impression on Mr. Mason, so strong an impression that before Miss Leslie came to pay him her first visit, the young lawyer could not help but hide in his bookcase the picture of little Clara's mother. Mason and Miss Leslie met again and soon were genuinely in love although neither spoke a word of it to the other. But when little Clara had ben operated upon successfully, the crisis came. Bending over the dear child, their hands met and they promised to be——

But more sorrow was ahead. When Clara was told one day that this lady was to become her new mamma, she turned to the wall where the picture of her dead mother formerly hung and cried hysterically. "My mamma. . . . Where is my mamma? I want my mamma."

Mason had to give back to his little girl the hidden picture and he tried in vain to persuade Miss Leslie that "this childish caprice would pass away." It did not pass. Clara cried and cried as if her heart would break. The great specialist was called and he left a note, saying that if the cause of the tears is not stopped at once, total blindness will be the result. Miss Leslie, who had just called, finds this note and at once decides upon her sacrifice. She leaves Mason and he allows her to go. It is terribly hard for them both, but—it must be.

THE LOVE CHASE (2 reels) (Feb 6).—"Cheer up, old man."

"Huh. What for? I've had so much 'cheer' in the last few years that—oh! what's the use."

To a man standing at one side, it sounded like the conversation of a few friends trying to help out one of the great, cruel world's "down and outs," and he turned to his neighbor to inquire what particular business or personal "punch" had put that good-looking but grouchy young chap on the "blue" list.

"Who is this lad, who seems so unwilling to join the boys? Is he having a rough time of it?"

"Who, that fellow? Well, hardly. That is Charlie Forbes, head of one of our best firms in town. His trouble is—he has seen all of what he considers 'life,' and consequently—the blase grouch. But, mark my words, he'll get a shock one of these days. I think a real girl—one with brains and wit—could make him sit up and take notice."

The crowd of good fellows who were gathered about young Forbes, here at the club, had little success in "cheering him up," but the men on the side had true enough outlined the wealthy, handsome young man-of-the-world's fate. Soon a new sensation was to come into his life, and when it came, he lost all that indifference, which had marked him among his fellows for months. And it was a girl who brought about this change.

Charlie's "I've seen it all" attitude worries his doting mother. Thinking she has hit upon the happy solution, Charlie's mother sends for the daughter of her old school friend, Mrs. Wilton, because she has always loved this young lady, and she thinks the charming Miss Wilton can bring Charles to a realization of all the joy this life really contains.

But Charles, when told of Miss Wilton's coming, tells his mother in a tone of disgust, "What! Me marry! Well, not while I have my senses." Well, Miss Wilton overhears that remark, and being a girl of spirit, that means trouble for Mr. Charles. When Charlie's pal suggests a little conspiracy, Miss Wilton agrees with real interest.

With the pal's assistance, the charming visitor enters Charles' office as a stenographer, and the boss comes down with a grouch. He is scolding on all sides when his eyes meet those of the green stenographer and immediately something happens. He feels he is "caught," and gets away to avoid those new, strange, wonderful eyes. At the club, the vision of "that new girl" remains with him, but suddenly, it is gone and he double quicks to the telephone and asks for news from the office. He is told that the "new stenographer" has departed for Niagara.

At Niagara Falls a charming Indian girl seems to have the same eyes that are haunting Charles, and after she has slipped away, he reads on the back of a card she sold him, "You did not recognize her. Meet me at your office in New York."

Then the boss receives a phone call that the stenographer while coming to the city in an auto, has been held up by a wild tiger. In the meantime, an itinerant showman with a lamb-like tiger has been engaged to pose the pet animal in front of the auto.

Charles dashes to the rescue and carries Miss Wilton, who has "fainted," to the house. Meeting his mother, Charles is informed that Miss Wilton, his mother's friend, and the stenographer in his arms, are one and the same. He is angry at first, but how could he help but relent and be happy?

IMP.

A WINNING RUSE (Feb. 1).—Mr. DeForrest runs a boarding house and at the same time keeps a watchful eye over his beautiful daughter. He discovers a flirtation taking place during dinner between his daughter and one of the young men boarders. He takes her to her room and locks her in, to punish her. The young man is angered, leaves the table, goes to his room, and has a talk with his pal over his predicament. During the course of conversation, an idea occurs to him to cut out the mask of the store pipe hole in the wall which connects with the next room, the room occupied by the landlord's daughter. She is much surprised to see the outstretched hand of her sweetheart through the partition. They continue their flirtation, but the father hears the pipe fall on the floor and this arouses his suspicion. He leaves the table and listens at his daughter's door. Hearing the voices he gets his revolver, sneaks in on her, throws her aside and shoots through the hole. The lover and his pal are confused for a moment but quickly devise a scheme for fooling the old man. The lover pretends he has been shot screams and lays down on the floor whereupon the old man nearly goes crazy, as he had only intended to frighten the young people. He and his daughter run around into the boys room and see him lying on the floor. The old man faints and when he comes to they send him for a doctor. Immediately after he has gone, the pal secures the services of a minister, one of the boarders, to perform the ceremony. While they are in the midst of this the father arrives with the doctor, but he remains in the hall seated on a newly varnished chair, while the doctor enters to examine the patient. Just as the doctor realizes the situation the father in the hall hears the minister pronouncing the couple man and wife. He realizes the ruse and starts to spring for the room but the chair sticks to him and blocks his passage through the door. He tugs until his trousers give way and he falls through the door intending to cause trouble, but his attention is attracted to the condition of his trousers, whereupon he is much confused and finally is persuaded to give the children his blessing.

A SPICY TIME (Feb. 3).—Mr. Parsley loves the widow Mrs. Brown. His little boy visits her little girl and they mix a jar of mustard with the pumpkin pie ingredients. A tramp steals the pies and it is blamed upon the children. The widower prepares some flowers for the widow and the children sprinkle red pepper upon them. They are sent to the widow and she is indignant when she gets the full effect of the pepper. The tramp tries one of the pies and suffers from the mustard and leaves the other pie at the widower's with a note saying it came from the widow Brown. The widower eats it and jumps around wildly from the effect of the mustard in the pie. He goes to the widow Brown's house where she abuses him on account of the pepper in the roses and, with much ginger, throws him out of the house where he collides with an officer who arrests him. He is brought before the old judge and all the court get the sneezing habit.

This angers the judge and he has Mr. Parsley locked up. The widow hears of this and, going to court, she explains all and Mr. Parsley is released.

THE MAN OUTSIDE (Feb. 6).—Charles Maddern is prosecuted firmly by District-Attorney Frederick Wrightman, for a crime of which he is guilty. He serves a portion of his sentence and is released. He is met at the gates by his daughter. There is but little food in the house, and Maddern goes to seak work. He fails, but as he is returning to his poor home, he sees a little child picking up her dolly which she has dropped in the street. An automobile is bearing down upon her, and the ex-convict tears her from its wheels, just in time. The child is the daughter of District Attorney Wrightman, but Maddern does not know this, and when a policeman tries to learn the address of the rescuer, he runs down the street and disappears into the crowd.

When he reaches his miserable attic, he finds his daughter ill and hungry. He rushes to find food, and as he passes into the hall, he meets one of his fellow convicts who has also obtained his release. The ex-thief tempts the unhappy father by suggesting to him that they rob the house of the district-attorney. Maddern consents. His daughter, in the other room, overhears this, and rises weakly and calls to her father, but too late. He is gone! She rushes after him, but in her weakened condition, can make little progress. Meanwhile the crook waits outside the window as Maddern enters the house of the district-attorney, and starts to pry open the desk. The crook, on the outside, sees something moving in the shadow of the trees, and leaves the porch for a second. At that moment, the district-attorney comes into his library, turns up the light, and covers Maddern with a revolver. He calls the police, and as they await their arrival, little Edith comes downstairs to get her dolly. She recognizes the man, Maddern, as her rescuer, and the father realizes that he owes this man the life of his child. Meanwhile, Maddern's daughter has been struggling along the streets, and arrives at the porch of the attorney's house just as the crook returning, fears his pal is giving him away to the district-attorney, and slowly raises his revolver to shoot. The daughter stops him, and in the struggle which ensues, the crook is shot. At that moment, the police arrive, and the body of the man outside on the porch seems to explain the district-attorney's reason for calling them. They bear the body away, and the broken man, Maddern, and his daughter, pass out into the world, assisted by the man whose duty it is to prosecute all criminals.

THE MARRIAGE LOTTERY (Feb. 8).—Mr. Jenkins is a miserly old crab, and decides that it will be cheaper for him to marry than to hire a servant to do the housework, so he goes to his neighbor, Brown, to ask his daughter's hand in marriage. On his arrival at Brown's, he asks to see the daughter. The mother and father go to the daughter's room, and find her lying in bed reading, with a tray of food in her lap. When she is told that the old miser, Jenkins, is downstairs, waiting to propose to her, she upsets everything, grabs a lot of dirty clothes, and rushes into the kitchen and starts washing. Old Jenkins, on seeing what a worker she is, motions for the old folks to leave, and proposes to her, and rushes off for a minister. When the miser returns with the minister, the daughter is all dolled, but still at the tubs washing. The marriage is performed, and the miser takes his bride to his home, shows her the kitchen and the piles of dirty dishes to be washed. She turns on him, refuses to clean them, knocks them out of his hands, and makes it rather warm for him. Then she goes into the sitting-room and is disgusted with the tumble-down looking furniture, and goes to a large furniture store and orders a lot of swell furniture.

The furniture men have just arrived with all the furniture as Jenkins is just returning from Brown's, where he has complained of the daughter's laziness. On seeing the furniture he throws a fit, makes the men take the furniture away, and kicks his wife into the house. She goes into the sitting-room, sits by the window and while there, sees the old miser at his treasure, which he has hidden in the garden. When he leaves, she sneaks out and takes some of the money and goes to the furniture store, tells them to return the furniture and this time, when the old miser sees the furniture, he suspects that his wife has discovered the treasure hiding place, and rushes out. He discovers the loss and rushes back to her to demand it back. She hits him over the head with a picture and kicks him out of the room.

Some days later she has given a dinner and invited her folks, the furniture movers, etc., and compelled the old miser to wait on them. He had the nerve to serve the soup in a wash bowl, which so angered his wife that she throws it all over him, the rest of the company driving him back into the kitchen with a shower of plates, which completely wrecks the place, upsetting cans of paint, dishes and an enormous pumpkin on his head. He makes a hurried getaway, by dashing out the window with a chair and making a high dive out.

ANDREW JACKSON (2 reels—Feb. 3).—Jackson's arrival at Nashville, astride a horse, marks the first incident recorded in this series of cinematographic views, illustrating historical occurrances in the life of Jackson from this time until General Packenham surrendered at New Orleans. He took up lodgings at a boarding house of a Mrs. Robarts, who subsequently secured a divorce from her drunken husband and married Jackson. The details of this divorce caused an encounter with one Charles Dickinson, a man enjoying a most enviable reputation as a dead shot. Dickinson, by way of challenge, told Jackson that on the morning following a verbal encounter he would shoot him through the heart, by hitting the button on his coat. Knowing the unfailing aim of his antagonist, Jackson sewed the button a trifle higher, which precaution saved his life.

In May, of 1814, he was commissioned as Major General of militia for the District of Cumberland. Jean Lafite, a noted brigand and pirate, offered his services to Jackson, provided he were promised immunity, but Jackson would not commit himself; whereas, General Packenham not only offered immunity, but a reward of one thousand pounds. Lafite consulted with his men and they decided to support the cause of the United States. Robarts hired himself out to Packenham as a spy, but lost his life in an encounter with Lafite. The various battles of the English with the United States Militia were disastrous for the former and culminated in the surrender of the English to Jackson at New Orleans.

HIS SACRIFICE (Feb. 6).—Ben Rivers, a consumptive, dying, comes to the "Big N" ranch for relief. He falls in love with Mabel, daughter of the sheriff and owner of the ranch. Mabel, while good to him, has given her affections to big Jim Ruther, her father's foreman.

Ed. Wenders, a hand about the place, has made love without success to Mabel. One day in town, Wenders makes fun of the sick man, calling attention to his helplesness. Mabel cut him across the face with her whip. The next day Wenders is determined to teach her more respect for himself. He catches her on the roadside. Meanwhile, the sheriff has gone to town after Jim Ruther to remind him of another purchase. Ben Rivers, the sick man, follows slowly. Thus it happens, Jim Ruthers saw Wenders grab Mabel. He leaps upon him, and a scuffle follows in which Wenders is accidently killed. No one saw it but Ben Rivers, and when the sheriff, heart-sore, but determined to do his duty, arrested Jim. Ben steps forward and acknowledges the deed saying that it was to revenge the insult of Wenders. So dying, Rivers sacrificed himself that the others might live.

CALAMITY ANNE'S VANITY (Feb. 8).—Poor Calamity Anne, with her everlasting mule, strolled through the camp, very forlorn at the spectacle of every fellow with his girl and every girl with her fellow. Hence Calamity brooded at the inequality of things generally, for Calamity had an abundance of money about which she cared little.

"The Stew," swaggering down the street under a load of joy, coveted Anne's pile and made love, much to Calamity's disgust. And then came that Eastern woman in a gorgeous city gown and all the boys deserted their respective girls and followed the new creature in her peacock raiment about town. Calamity hated her and then Calamity found a copy of a woman's paper, saw the picture of a stunning gown and ordered it.

It came and Calamity donned it—a fine, soft shimmering thing of dainty silk, but alas, hiding beneath it and peeping out occasionally were Calamity's muddy boots and a giant six-shooter. Calamity swagered by the hotel and the sensation she created was never before equaled in Death Gulch. Calamity got the laugh—the big hearty laugh that pierced her finer sensibilities and wounded her deeply. Calamity wept bitterly, then hauled up that gossamer-web skirt and got that dangerous six-shooter and Calamity had a rapidly widening circle about her person.

But she was melancholy, awfully sick of it all, so she got her mule and posted the following notice on her door-stip: "I'm goin' away. Give my pile to the orfans. Taint no use. Calamity."

SAVED FROM SIN (Jan. 26).—John Morton, brooding over the death of his wife and child, decides to commit suicide. So that none of his friends may know of it, he dons the attire of a poor workman and goes down into the slums. A poor little girl, unable to purchase milk for the baby, thinks she will rent one of her squalid rooms. Morton, passing, sees the "room for rent" sign and enters to find the child's drunken father who willingly gives him the room and takes a few dollars. A little later, the girl returns and finding the stranger, she understands. "You are my boarder," she says, "Give me the rent please, the baby is hungry." He had given his last cent to the father and he tells her so.

Heartbrokenly she goes into the other room to comfort the starving baby. Morton, alone with his gun, hears the pitiful sobs of the two children in the next room. He cannot commit suicide and leave them there to starve. Unable to bear it any longer, he goes to them and says that, although he has no money, he can pawn his revolver. At this word the little mother grabs the gun, and bidding him watch the baby, she goes off to "hock" it. Alone with the child, Morton takes it into his arms and somehow the little clinging fingers bring memories of the past. The little mother returns and, as Morton helps her with the baby, a policeman enters to tell them that the children's father has been killed in a drunken brawl. Against Morton's wish the children are taken to the society—no one paying any attention to him in his workman's clothes. But the next day, when he arrives at the roms of the society, dressed faultlessly, it is another story. He adopts the children and brings them to his lonely home where he finds happiness and content in their love for him.

WHEN THE LAST LEAF FELL (Jan. 28).—The young American girl believed she had a future in opera, and for some time labored diligently in the chorus, striving all the time for advancement. Her sweetheart urged her to quit the stage and marry him, but the girl declaring that her art came first, goes with the company, having been promised a better position.

The management kept its word with her, but on the night she first appeared as a principal, misfortune came. While singing her solo her voice suddenly failed her, and just at the moment when things appeared the brightest she found her stage career was over. Brokenhearted, she returned to the poor quarters she occupied with a girl friend, and longed for death to free her.

Day by day she grew weaker and soon a strange fancy possessed her. From her bed she could see a vine outside her window. It was autumn and day by day the leaves were falling. The girl was convinced that the vine was a token, and that when the last leaf fluttered to the ground her soul would pass away. Too weak to write herself, she dictated a letter to her fiance telling him of the vine. Her chum who acted as amanuensis went weeping down the hall with the letter, and as she passed the door of the next room a kindhearted old artist, who lived there, heard her and his sympathy won her confidence. Without telling anyone of his plan the artist cabled to the man in America, signing the girl's name and urging him to come at once. Then knowing the influence of mind over matter, he watched the vine daily.

The leaves continued to fall until there was only one left, but that seemed particularly hardy. Wind and snow and sleet had no effect upon it and when the young man arrived it was still there. By this time the girl was still recovering from her morbid fancies and was glad to cling to life. Her fiance looked at the vine and his keen eyes noticed that the last leaf was painted on the wall and the artist confessed that he had drawn it to save the life of a winsome girl.

RELIANCE

SAVED BY AIRSHIP (Jan. 29).—Charles Belmont, a quiet and industrious young man, works in the office of John Burton, a wealthy broker. A fellow clerk, Henry Holloway, like Charles, is enamored of his employer's pretty daughter, Bess. Henry is flashy in his dress and manner, a clever talker and a fine bluffer, and while their employer likes both young men very well, it is apparent that his daughter favors the suit of Henry. Old Burton invites both boys out to his suburban home. The young men arrive at the handsome residence of their host. Henry is all smiles and tries to increase his popularity with the girl and her father.

After dinner Henry, Bess, her father and Charles step out of the house to look at the vista of the harbor. They see an aviator, who is known to the old man, getting his aeroplane ready for a trial flight acros the bay. He invites them to take a ride. The old man shakes his head, but the young girl, fond of excitement, gleefully accepts and steps into the machine in spite of her parents remonstrances. The machine whizzes away and she is seen taking a roundabout ride, while Henry flatters the old man about his daughter's bravery. When they return from the aerial flight, the girl jumps out and offers the others her seat. Charles stoutly refuses saying he is afraid of the trip. Henry roasts him carcastically, while he himself steps into the machine and asks for a ride. While the others are looking away, he slips a bill to the aviator, urging him not to stay up long, but to come right down. The machine takes a little trip through the air and then returns. Henry stumbles out very much relieved to get to the ground again, but still keeping up the bluff as he teases Charles. The latter finally becomes furious and embarrassed, seeing that the girl is making fun of him as well.

Henry asks Bess to elope with him. She laughs and shakes her head, saying there is no way by which they can do so. Finally she spies a launch and she sugests that they use this. She jumps into it. She says they can go straight across the harbor to the city. Henry prepares to start it and unloosens the rope. The girl touches off the engine wrong and the boat whizzes forth without the young man in it. She gives a scream, but loses her presence of mind and is unable to steer the boat. The launch lurches into the direction of the harbor while Henry stands wringing his hands at the wharf.

Charles and the girl's father and mother rush down to the shore near the aeroplane. They see the launch going out from shore with the unhappy girl in it. The old man wrings his hands and his wife sobs. They are all at a loss for a means to rescue her, when suddenly Charles conceives the idea of utilizing the aeroplane. He rushes to the aviator and asks him if he will help him. The aviator says it will be impossible to do anything with the flying machine, but Charles insists, preparing to dive. He kicks off his shoes, flings off his coat and jumps into the machine with the aviator. He throws on speed, and the machine whizzes off over the bay toward the boat. The watchers on shore scream with fright when the launch explodes and the girl is thrown into the water unconscious. The launch is seen at a close view with the girl struggling as best she can, and the smoke coming from the boat. The aeroplane is close at hand and Charles is preparing to drop from it into the water. At last they are seen lowering down toward the drowning girl and calculating his position to a nicety, he lowers himself from the frame work of the aeroplane and drops into the water. Charles rescues the girl and keeps her afloat until she is taken ashore by some boatmen who have come forth to render assistance. On shore the gallant Henry is sobbing like a baby. The girl is brought in safe and sound and is clasped in her father's and mother's arms. The father kisses the girl and the young clerk is certain of the father's favor as well as the girl's.

A WIFE'S BATTLE (Feb. 1).—Walter, a clerk, goes blind and is unable to work. He has a young wife, and a child of four years. Jane, the wife, finds work as a model and supports her little family. Stanton, the head of the concern employing Jane, becomes infatuated with her, and plies her with many attentions which she refuses to accept. She learns that her husband can be cured by an operation which will cost $1,000. This is a ray of hope, but they grow heartsick again, realizing that they can never get that amount together.

The next day at the office, Stanton notes Jane's sad face, asks that he be permitted to make her happy, and also asks what she wants. With set face she answers "One thousand dollars." He smiles quizzically at her and writes her a check.

Next the operation is performed and it is a success, Stanton calls on Jane and sees her tending her husband, with her little girl clinging to her skirt. He understands and turns away bitterly, his thousand lost to him. But the old doctor, who understands then where the check came from, takes it from his pocket and destroys it clearing Jane from the weight of her debt. Jane breaks down, but with a great effort, she pulls herself together and faces her husband who knows nothing of what has transpired and must never know.

THANHOUSER.

THE NEPHEWS FROM LABRADOR (Jan. 26).—A farmer's wife gets word from her brother in Labrador that his sonse are visiting the United States for the first time, and that she should show them every courtesy in her power, as they "had never been out of Labrador." With her husband, the aunt meets the train bearing the boys from the cold country. It is snowing when the train pulls in and the farmer and his wife are warmly clad, but to their dismay their nephews alight from the train in shirt sleeves, with their coats over their arms, and fanning themselves vigorously. Finally, their troubled relatives force them to put on their coats and muffle up warmly. To please the aunt and uncle the boys submit, but just the same they make a mysterious trip out of the house each day and come back all smiles. The aunt decides to ferret out the mystery. She follows them to a neighboring lake where the red ball is up, sees them discard their clothes and don bathing suits and then whirl about on the ice. After this they roll in the snow and then do a dive into the icy water. The aunt is well-nigh attacked by nervous prostration at sight of this, but the boys do not catch pneumonia or anything else dreadful, as she expected and all ends well and—cold.

THE DOVE IN THE EAGLE'S NEST (Jan. 28).—PART ONE.—Count Eberhard von Alderstein was one of the robber barons who flourished in Europe during the Middle Ages. He was cruel and lawless, plundered the merchants who passed his castle, and cared for no one, except his little sister, Ermyntrude. The child fell sick and the Eagle sent a retainer to the valley below to get a nurse to care for the little one. The man returned with Christine, a young village girl, famed alike for her beauty and virtue. She cared for Ermyntrude tenderly, but in vain, and when she returned to her home in the valley the Eagle was desolate, for he had learned to love the nurse. Her gentle influence had caused him to look with abhorrence on his former ways, and the merchants now passed his castle without fear, for the Eagle "soared no more for prey."

The Eagle sought out the village girl in her home and asked her to be his wife, and because Christine had learned to love the baron, she consented gladly, and returned with him to the castle.

PART TWO.—Twin sons blessed the union of Eberhard von Alderstein and Christine, the village maid, and the Eagle spent all of his time about the castle in the happy companionship of his wife and sons.

But at last a summons came from the king, commanding the Eagle to follow him to war. The Eagle complied, and in a skirmish was captured by a baron enemy, and consigned to the galleys as a slave. The victorious baron forced his way into the Eagle's castle, and falsely telling the Dove that her husband was dead, tried to make her marry him. But the Dove, true to her husband, believed that he would return to her and patiently awaited his return.

The Eagle's enemy occupied the castle with his troops, and one day an opportunity presented itself which would have rid the Dove of him forever, if she had cared to avail herself of it. One of her retainers came to her and whispered that as the enemy passed over the oubliette (which was the prison of the castle), he would press a secret lever and the baron would plunge to his death in the room below. The Dove, knowing her pleading could not move her retainer from his purpose, sent her twin sons with the baron, and the Eagle's enemy escaped an awful death, for the retainer could not permit the young nobles to share the fate of their father's enemy. In the end, aided by the retainer, the Eagle made his escape from the galleys and went to the instant relief of his wife and children.

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF FEAR (Jan. 31).—This subject takes up the problem of a sea captain who wishes to cure his ten-year-old son of a fear of the dark. The lad will not go to sleep unless the gas is left burning in his bedroom. In his efforts to stamp out the boy's fear, his father turns out the gas, paying no attention to the lad's screams. In the night a dishonest sailor climbs through the window of the boy's room and picks up some valuables there. The boy awakes and screams for help. The father hearing him, thinks the boy's calls are impelled by his fear of the dark and will not go to his room. The sailor escapes through the window, but in doing so, makes so much noise that the sea captain is aroused and captures him. Going to his son's room the captain finds the lad in a faint. The physician who was called in examines the boy and states: "The boy will recover, but the fear of the dark will be with him always."

The picture then shows the boy grown up and in love. Invited to a party at his sweetheart's home, a game of "Blind Man's Buff" is proposed, and he is selected as the blind man. He is blindfolded, the lights are turned out, and when the bandage about his eyes is removed and he finds himself in the dread dark, he cowers noticeably. The young people jeer at him and the girl, in shame, breaks off the engagement.

Then the girl meets with an accident that threatens her eyesight and she is forced to remain in a darkened room. Her sweetheart forgets her treatment of him and keeps her company in the room, where his patience does much to calm her fears of total blindness. In the end her eyesight is saved. The boy who had feared the dark finds that he has won back his love—through his vigil by her side in the darkened room—won his fight with the Darkness Fear.

KAY-BEE.

THE FAVORITE SON (2 reels) (Feb. 7).—Bill is very much in love with Molly, but his shyness prevents a declaration of his affection. While she has lost her heart to him she is at her wits end as to how to handle her bashful lover, and flirts with his brother Jim. Bill does not understand her actions and believes that his brother is his fortunate rival, and when the war breaks out he enlists. Jim is his mother's favorite son and is a coward at heart, but is stung by the admiration of Molly for his soldier brother and also enlists. The mother of the boys makes Bill promise solemnly to take care of his brother, and the two go to the front.

Sensational scenes of battle are shown, in which Jim shows his colors, and his cowardice is covered cleverly by Bill, who watches over him and cares for him. The brothers are captured and held in prison. A plot is formed for a number to escape, and the men draw lots to see who shall make the dash for liberty. Jim draws a blank, but Bill is more fortunate, and he gives up his chance to his brother. Jim gets away in thrilling scenes and makes his way home, where he is joyfully received. Hoping to win Molly, he tells her Bill died in prison and she finally surrenders to his ardent wooing and promises to marry him.

Bill is finally released through an exchange of prisoners and obtains a furlough. He arrives home on the day of the wedding and as he comes to the village it is being attacked by guerillas. He takes charge of the situation and leads the home folk, armed with a motley collection of weapons, against the guerillas and drives them off in a fierce battle. Jim attempts to hide, but a stray bullet lays him low and he dies.

WHEN LIFE FADES (2 reels) (Feb. 6).—The Southern army endeavors to carry out carefully planned manoeuvres and meets with crushing defeat each time, showing that the enemy has had advance information of the movements. The spy, securing the information is Lieut. Lamar, who is on the staff of the Southern provost marshal. A Confederate secret service man comes upon the ground and tries to discover who the traitor is. Lamar has won the love of Virginia, the provost marshal's daughter, and is not suspected. The messenger whom he has been using is caught and is sentenced to be shot as a spy, and asks for a priest. An officer puts on a priest's cassock and goes to the doomed man, hoping to secure a confession. The bogus priest is discovered, however, and the spy suddenly leaps upon him and throttles him and, hastily donning the priest's disguise, makes his escape. Virginia innocently writes a note to Lamar telling him of the plan and he is panic-stricken, thinking he will be found out. He rushes to Virginia and believing she has already heard his true character, he tells her everything. She is horror-stricken, but promises to save him. As he is attempting to leave by a window the squad chasing the escaped spy sees him and believing him to be the man they are after, open fire, killing him. The soldiers are grief-stricken when they discover they have shot the wrong man, and Lamar is buried with military honors, as Virginia, on account of her love for him, remains silent and does not wish to stain the dead man's name with the odious name of traitor.

OVERCOATS (Feb. 5).—Smith, a clerk at Greene's office, is rather fond of Anne, the pretty stenographer. He sends her some flowers and candy, with a note asking her to go to dinner and the theater with him Saturday night.

Anne, thinking to surprise Smith, writes her acceptance and wrapping the note around one of her photos, which Smith has asked for, slips it into his overcoat pocket. That night Greene takes Smith's overcoat by mistake. When Greene gets home, his wife finds the photo and the note, and as Smith's name is not mentioned in the note she naturally thinks her husband deceitful. Mrs. Greene, hoping to make her husband repentant, substitutes her own photo with a note asking him to take her, his own wife to dinner and the theater Saturday night.

The next morning the wrong coats are righted, without either knowing that he had worn the other's coat.

Greene finds his wife's picture with her note (upon which there is no name addressed) in Smith's coat, and naturally thinks her faithless. Saturday night, Mrs. Greene determines to watch her husband and Mr. Greene determines to watch his wife.

He gets home just as she is leaving the house. He follows her. She goes to the office and finding her husband gone, confides all in Smith. Smith, on the other hand, thinking Anne is deceiving him, suggests they both go to Anne's house and catch the two deceivers. They both go to Anne's and Greene, who has been waiting outside, follows. There the situation comes to a climax but is soon explained to satisfaction, and both couples are happy.

THE MONKEY ACCOMPLICE (Feb. 7).—Charles Davenport, a wealthy young broker, pays court to and wins the heart of Geraldine Rand, a very nice girl whose brother Tom, is a man of rather shady reputation. The night of the wedding, Geraldine's brother Tom, comes back after an absence of several years and attempts to break into the house of his prospective brother-in-law. Davenport recognizes Tom and, after a very dramatic scene, exacts from Tom the promise that he will in the future take the straight and narrow path. After his sister is married. Tom tries and succeeds in making a man out of himself. He secures a position in a broker's office, and is on the highroad to prosperity. All would have gone well with him if he had not had his questionable past; for the time comes when cruel suspicion almost wrecks his new and promising career. The cause of it all is an Italian's monkey, trained not only to win pennies for his master, but also to climb up the sides of buildings, enter boudoirs and make away with ladies' jewels. When a necklace belonging to Tom's sister disappears in a mysterious fashion, naturally Tom is suspected by his brother-in-law and circumstantial evidence implicates him in such a fashion that he is unable to explain his way out of the difficulty. With the aid, however, of a bootblack, whom Tom had befriended, the crime is traced to the proper source and the monkey and the Italian whose combined criminal and mysterious efforts have baffled detectives and the police for several months, are put out of business.

THE CURSE OF THE GREAT SOUTHWEST (Feb. —).—This story centers about Frank Mager, the ranchmen's candidate for sheriff, who promises, if elected, to rid the county of the notorious band of cattle thieves. Frank is elected and starts out to look for the rustlers. His first move is to notify the stock growers of a meeting to be held at the schoolhouse, and he proceeds to tack up notices. Riding over the mountains he meets Amanata, a Mexican girl, who is the sweetheart of Buck Peters, foreman of the Y-6 Ranch, and also captain of the "Cattle R." Her horse becomes lame and he befriends her.

Peters is roping horses in the corral and receives a note from the rustlers informing him that they are holding cattle ready to cross the border where he thinks it is safe. We see the cattle bedded down at the rustlers' camp when the messenger rides in with a note informing them to meet the captain at Amanata's cabin the next night.

They meet and succeed in delivering the cattle to the Mexicans. Flushed with success the rustlers meet Peters at the cabin and decide to get another bunch of cattle. They send word to the Mexicans to meet them. The Mexicans come to the cabin and call on Peters and his band of rustlers, and discuss the situation. Amanata is told by Peters to go out as he has business to talk over with his men. Amanata leaves the cabin but listens at the door and hears the plot against the sheriff. The sheriff goes to the schoolhouse just as Peters tries to kiss the schoolteacher. Peters is knocked down by the sheriff and the deputy sheriff orders Peters away.

Amanata writes a note to the new sheriff and tells him to look out for himself as the rustlers say that they will get him. The sheriff and schoolteacher go to the postoffice. Peters finds out that Amanata has betrayed him to the sheriff. They quarrel and Amanata is badly hurt. Peters goes off and leaves her; but she manages to stagger to the schoolhouse and notifies the schoolteacher that the rustlers are after the sheriff. As she is telling her story the sheriff's horse comes in without a rider and they then know that the sheriff has been captured by the rustlers.

Amanata leads the ranchmen and cowboys to the rustlers' camp, where a fight takes place between the cowboys and rustlers. The rustlers are defeated and the sheriff is saved. Peters is captured.

THE PALACE OF FLAMES (3 reels) (Feb. —).—Evariste Marny, a business rival of Andrew Vivanti, is threatened with ruin, and to eliminate competition hires a town vagabond, Tonio, to fire the factory of Vivanti. Changing his clothing after having fulfilled his part of the bargain, Tonio carefully preserves a card bearing Marny's handwriting, an agreement as to the time for the deed to be committed, etc., etc., believing that some day it might be of value. Several lives are lost, and suspicion of having set fire to his own establishment for the insurance benefit is cast upon Vivanti. He is tried, found guilty, and sentenced to prison for life. Marny prospers, and becoming conscious of the wrong he has done, adopts Vivanti's young daughter to make amends to his conscience.

After thirteen years in prison, Vivanti makes his escape. Disguised as a rag picker, he begins a new life in search of his daughter and of information that will prove his innocence. He takes up his abode in an inn of low repute and begins his search. Amongst the crowd of assembled ruffians and drunkards is Tonio. Tonio has been living a care-free life since his crime, depending upon money extorted from Marny for his existence. Vivanti adopts the name "Old Andrew," that he may conceal his identity. Soon after his entrance to the inn, Old Andrew is set upon by Tonio, but the difference is patched up and they become fast friends. His money exhausted, Tonio visits Marny and makes demands for more. He is refused, but Marny yields when shown the telltale card. He barters with Tonio, and a price is put upon the card. The money is paid, and after a scuffle Tonio snatches the card away from Marny and departs with both money and card.

Tonio returns to the inn intoxicated and exhibits the money to Old Andrew. He accidentally drops the card and falls into a drunken sleep. While picking over his rags, Old Andrew spies the card on the floor, and noting the writing, etc., etc., it comes to him that Marny is the one guilty of the crime of which he has been charged. Vowing vengeance upon Marny, he hastens to his home. On his way to Marny's rooms he passes his daughter, Lydia, now grown to womanhood, and Marny's son. He does not recognize his daughter, and she shrinks from what she supposes to be an intruding ruffian. He finds Marny in his room, and by aid of the card convicts Marny. He is about to do violence to Marny when he is bade "look from the window." Marny explains that the loving pair he observes is "your daughter and my son; now strike if you will."

With supreme self-sacrifice Old Andrew withdraws, leaving his daughter to her happiness and ignorant of his existence. At the inn, Tonio has awakened from his drunken slumber, to find that the card has gone, and believing that it has been taken by the agents of Marny, hastens to his home in a frenzy. He gains admission to the house through the cellar grating, and demented with rage at having lost the blackmailing card, fires the house. Old Andrew, wending his way up a hill on the outskirts of the town, turns for a farewell look toward his daughter's home and sees the palace in flames. He hastens back to her rescue. In the mansion the scene has become terribly dramatic. Tonio, struggling in his own trap, perishes in the flames. Livid tongues of flame leap out through the mansion, and the occupants rush about frantically. Then through the flames and up the staircase comes Old Andrew, bent upon his daughter's rescue. He finds, however, that she has already been carried to safety by Marny's son and that Marny alone of the occupants has been left to his fate.

Parts of the floor have fallen, the staircase is ablaze, and flames are licking the entire building when Old Andrew makes his way up the stairway to the rescue of his enemy. He wrenches a door from its hinges, bridges over part of the fallen floor, and finally comes upon Marny lying prostrate upon the drawing-room floor. He carries him out to the stairway, but finds that the flames have beaten him and part of the stairs have been burned away. Rescuer and rescued hang in a perilous position, supported only by Old Andrew's firm grip on a pillar, until the fire-fighters arrive, spread a life net, and catch the two men as they fall. Marny receives mortal inquries and is dying. Upon his deathbed he confesses his guilt and tells Lydia that she is the daughter of Old Andrew. Weeping over the bier of Marny, Lydia and her sweetheart find that although they have lost one father they have found another in the Palace of Flames.

SALOME.—Herodias, wife of Philip of Iturea, gives her affections to her husband's brother, Herod. Their secret passion is discovered by John the Baptist. He denounces them, but, so great is his power in the land, that none dare silence him.

Succumbing to the temptation of Herodias, Herod betrays his brother and casts him into the Prison of Bronze, where he is left to languish. Herodias now plots to rid herself of her husband, and she finally prevails upon a negro servant to go to the Prison of Bronze and strangle him.

When Philip is dead, his brother Herod is proclaimed, 'midst great pomp, Tetrarch in his stead. For a time he rules wisely, but can never drive away the pangs of conscience that are his constant companions.

Herodias next prevails upon Herod to seize and imprison John the Baptist, who is obtaining a strong hold over the people. Weakly Herod fulfills her wish, and the prophet is cast into the Prison of Bronze.

St. John is beloved by Salome, the daughter of Herodias, but he spurns her affection. In vain does she visit him in the Prison of Bronze, and attempts to lure him into her power.

Herod becomes possessed of an insurmountable desire to see Salome dance. This desire is discerned by the watchful Herodias and promptly frustrated.

The populace begin to demand the release of John the Baptist, and fear possesses Herodias lest he should be liberated and again denounce her to the people.

The visit to Herod of the Roman judges is an occasion for much feasting and merrymaking. It is at a feast given in honor of his guests that Herod requests Salome to dance. She refuses, but Herod maintains his entreaties, and finally says that he will give her anything she cares to ask for if she will dance.

Salome was puzzled what to accept, but her mother creeps to her side, and, like the evil serpent, suggests that she shall ask for the head of John the Baptist. Spurned affection turns to hate of a like intensity, and Salome sees in this her chance to avenge the affront offered her by St. John. She asks for his head. Herod regrets his rash promise, but his regrets are soon charmed away by the witchery of the dancer.

When Salome has finished dancing the head is brought to her. The sight of this strikes terror to the heart of Herod, and he sees his guests shrinking from him in disgust. Too late, he seeks to repair the evil done by commanding his soldiers to seize Salome and put her to death.

whether you are in the East, West, North or South—

We Pay The Charges

on all orders for Banners and Cards, excepting orders for card signs amounting to less than $2.00. A customer on the coast writes: "I don't see how you can turn out that class of work by hand at the prices you do and then pay the charges. I have been paying $1.00 for cards not half as good as yours at 40c., and then have to keep 'stirring' my painter up till I get them."

Mr. Exhibitor, the prices we quote cover everything; go where you please, send where you please and you'll find that our work at the net price to you is like a broken drum—it can't be beat!

Showing full-sheet card, 40c. Made to order, any reading matter you wish, in colors. Half sheet (14x22) to order, 25c. Quarter sheet (11x14) to order, 15c. (Other sizes in proportion.)

The Thanhouser

Three-a-Week's Feature February

(FIRST WEEK: Two Split-Reels and "When the Studio Burned")

Released Sunday, February 2

His Uncle's Wives
and
The Seven Ages of An Alligator

This is just the subject to open "Feature February" with—a split-reel containing a side-splitting farce and an unusual life-study of an unusual animal. The first picture pictures the predicament of a young artist who loses a very dear uncle, resident in Turkey, who wills his wives to aforesaid nephew. And the nephew is an engaged young man! Suppose his fiancee should hear! The story is a comedy riot.

(Released Tuesday, February 4)

When The Studio Burned

This is the last word in Thanhouser enterprise—a film on their own fire. And it is a vivid depiction, too, since it is based on the startling newspaper stories that were flashed to a thousand American cities on the afternoon of January Thirteen, Nineteen Thirteen. The press of the whole country, therefore, printed an advance synopsis of this film for you. We hold right to that synopsis, not even forgetting the well-worded rescue of the Thanhouser Kidlet, by Marguerite Snow.

(Released Friday, February 7)

While Mrs. McFadden Looked Out
Los Angeles The Beautiful

You will like Mrs. McFadden mainly because you know her type so well. Likely you have her right next door. Leaning out of her window, she is a neighborhood landmark. No one passes below but she doesn't know it. The Window Gazer of this particular picture loses her daughter, household goods and life almost, but still she looks out. The subject at the end was especially prepared by our California Art Photographers.

"THE RACE FOR THE MILLIONS"

An equal power is the other Gaumont State Right feature "In the Claws of the Leopard," which in two reels tells how South African miners use savage beasts to "put out of the way" the widow of their one time employer. To steal a gold bearing "claim" is their motive. How superhuman strength came into weak feminine arms when Mrs. Waring felt the leopard's keen fangs pierce her flesh, felt its claws slash her clothing. "The Human Vulture," a two reel feature, is noteworthy because of its typifying the American love of gold which wreaks woe upon the weaker ones.

The Moving Picture World Says:

Beasts of the Jungle

is well treated, and many difficult situations caused by the animals are creditably handled. The Solax Company have done well in their endeavor to break the monotony of the common picture, by introducing these animal performers, which gives a new touch of interest, which without doubt will be received enthusiastically. A thrilling scene is the climax of the picture.

State Rights Proposition

Attractive to conservative and legitimate showmen. Declared by all critics to be the best THREE-REEL animal attraction ever produced. Elephants, lion, tiger, monkey and parrot are used. Special scenery and costumes—sensational situations throughout. A little girl faces a tiger, and a man grapples and fights with a lion.

Advertising Matter

The Edison Kinetoscope

Underwriters' Type "B"

The Edison has always been noted for its steady projection but that is not enough—all possibility of unsteadiness must be eliminated. So the Edison is now equipped with four floor sockets for the heavy legs. A new oiling system feeds the main bearings from a central oil cup, assuring uniform lubrication, with the greatest convenience to the operator.

But these minor improvements would be of no importance if the machine itself were not constructed of the best materials that can be put into it.

Write for catalog No. 500 and a copy of the Edison Kinetogram.

"THE PRICE OF JEALOUSY"

Friday, February 7th

The Senorita Camelita Morales is insanely jealous of her rival, Mildred West, sweetheart of Captain Herbert Richards. She seeks the advice of a Mexican, Captain Salvada, who has been caught cheating at cards. The two plot together and decoy Richards from camp. The Mexican soldiers seize him and Salvada orders him to be shot. The Senorita, who really loves the American, pins a note to the saddle on Richards' horse and sends him back to the camp for help. The troops arrive just in time to see their Captain in front of the firing squad. Carmelita throws herself in front of the guns and receives the bullets as the United States men scatter the Mexicans and kill Salvada.

"The Price of Jealousy"

"THE MISER" Saturday, February 8th

In all the years that passed, the old man never forgot his only son.

"DOWN ON THE RIO GRANDE" Monday, February 10th

One of those strong, stirring and massive military pictures of the Border.

SPECIAL TWO-REEL FEATURE

"THE LOST SON"

Monday, February 17th

John Nolan, a good-hearted fellow, inclined to wildness, hits Ed Jennings with a billiard ball. John rushes home and tells his parents he has killed a man. His father dies from the shock. John escapes. Jennings lives, but all search for John is fruitless. George, his younger brother, works in a store and advances rapidly. Ten years later, George loses a large amount of money belonging to the firm. In desperation, he places all his own money on a horse at long odds. The horse loses. He offers his watch to the bookmaker, begging another bet. The "bookie," really his long lost brother, John, examines the watch and sees a picture of their mother. They return to the old home for a happy reunion.

The Peril of the Dance Hall

An Absorbing Drama with a Strong Moral Lesson

Pablo, an Italian, embarks for America with his little girl, Pepita. Pepita becomes a typical American girl and is the idol of her father's heart. Her girl friends invite her to visit a public dance hall and she goes despite her father's protest. Pablo follows with apprehension and rescues his daughter in a time of peril. Later Pepita, who has been taught a severe lesson, makes her father very happy by giving her hand to an honest young man who has been paying ardent court and who has assisted Pablo in disillusioning the girl.

Released Monday, February 17th

Panic Days In Wall Street

Harding suffers a great loss when Gregg, a young broker, makes a fortune in the street. Harding's daughter, Edna, secures a position in Gregg's office and proceeds to give out information detrimental to her employer. Her plans to ruin the young broker are frustrated when she falls in love with him and she discovers that Gregg is not a bad fellow after all.

Released Wednesday, February 19th

The Cold Storage Egg

Eva, longing for a lover, places a message on an egg, which is put in cold storage and not discovered for several years. When Jones, a romantic young man, finds the message and calls on the sender he meets with a surprise.

Facts and Comments

UNFAIR methods of advertising often characterize some of the concerns that have something to sell to exhibitors. One firm comes out with this trumpet-warning: "Menace in the Movies." It urges parents to see that the celebrated Jones and Smith fire extinguisher is installed in every motion picture theater which their children visit. We cannot know whether this first shot is followed up by other clever maneuvers, such as a visit to the exhibitor by a pretended parent who makes a frantic appeal to the exhibitor to install the wonderful extinguisher by the next parcels post. We do not believe that such advertising will make a great hit with the average exhibitor. In fact we think that he is altogether apt to resent such methods and that he will enthusiastically abstain from buying that kind of a fire extinguisher. If any article of merchandise possesses merit it needs no alarm of fire to sell it. Exhibitors are much like other men, they are willing to listen to persuasion, but have no use for bulldozing tactics.

THE MINNEAPOLIS TRIBUNE has compiled an interesting table of statistics showing the extent to which moving picture theaters are patronized in that city. There is little doubt that similar conditions prevail in other parts of the country and for this reason the statistics gathered by the Western journal are of more than passing or local interest. It appears that out of ten thousand families six thousand six hundred and fifty three attend moving picture entertainments. The average attendance from each family is two adults and one child, making a total of 12,051 adults and 8,480 minors. The amount spent in admissions reaches $400,000 per year. The investigator of the paper went into the causes of the popularity of the motion picture and summed it up in what he says was the language of "hundreds of mothers." "The moving picture theater is the finest place to spend half an hour after you have worked all day."

THE Ohio exhibitors at their state convention approved the draft of a bill, providing for state censorship. Of course, if there is to be any censorship at all it is better to have its jurisdiction as wide as possible and in this sense alone can the state censorship proposition be viewed with favor. Just how this state censorship is to be carried out is something of a problem. Are the manufacturers to send their reels into each state for approval? Who is to pay the fee of inspection? We do not believe that state censorship is the last word on this vexed question. Where, as in the case of Ohio, the exhibitors are practically unanimous in favoring state censorship there will be comparatively little trouble in finding a modus operandi and enforcing the law. Suppose, however, that an exhibitor refused to acknowledge the authority of the state board of censorship and carried the matter into the courst of last resort. There is every reason to believe that the courts would declare state censorship unconstitutional. The picture must have the same rights and constitutional franchises as the press. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD pointed this out long ago. Mayor Gaynor of New York City, covered the whole ground recently in a singularly lucid message to the Board of Aldermen. Let the picture like the press be free. Such freedom does not mean an exemption from present laws. Where pictures offend against the law because they are obscene, scandalous and indecent the police have a right now to suppress them. Where the pictures libel a man or show him on the screen in any way whatever he may recover damages unless the producing company have his consent in writing. State censorship is a minor evil and a makeshift. Nothing less than the absolute enfranchisement of the picture will in the end be acceptable to the friends of the industry.

FOLLOWING the Boyerstown disaster in 1909 the Pennsylvania legislature passed the so-called three foot aisle law. This law undertook to provide that moving picture theaters, whatever their shape, should have three aisles, each three feet wide. A few abortive attempts were made to enforce this law, but as it would have put about one half of the motion picture theaters out of business, the state authorities compromised with exhibitors on the merits and possibilities of each separate case and the law has to this day remained a dead letter. It is now proposed to enact new laws on the same subject hardly less drastic than the present statute. This legislation seems to be aimed at the small exhibitor who, as a rule, takes the utmost precaution in providing for the safety of his patrons. The organized exhibitors of Pennsylvania should fight such legislation with all the power at their command.

FROM every part of the country we receive letters showing a gradual change in the attitude of the daily press toward the motion picture and the theater where the motion picture is exhibited. Five years ago it was a journalistic chorus of denunciation and the word of praise was the exception. Conditions are now in a fair way of being reversed. Unqualified condemnation of motion pictures is rare, as even the most illiberal of critics now mix a word or two of qualified approval with their blame and censure. Even in this city of New York the press is beginning to discover the merit of the motion picture and many a page of kinematographic news has found its way even into the high class dailies. Every exhibitor in the United States has it in his power to accelerate this change in the daily press. The columns of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD are filled with interesting matter for which most editors would be sincerely thankful. We know that some of our readers use the columns of this paper for spreading the light in the daily press and we hope their number will constantly increase. Lots of motion picture news has a general interest and editors are glad to print it.

A Serious Lapse of the N. B. C.

By W. Stephen Bush

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD recently asked the National Board of Censorship whether a certain picture, in which the details of a hanging are shown with disgusting realism, had been seen and passed by that body. In reply to our question we received an answer in which it was pointed out that the picture had been seen and passed. The letter further states that another picture showing an electrocution was likewise viewed and approved by the board. We are informed that a discussion of "fifteen or twenty minutes" preceded the Board's approval in the latter case, but that the members came to the conclusion that the moral lesson conveyed by the execution must outweigh any horrors at the gruesomeness of the details. It further appears from the letter that a quorum looked at each of the objectionable pictures and that the decision in favor of allowing the exhibition of the pictures was unanimous.

We have at all times viewed the activities of the Board of National Censorship with favor. On the whole their decisions have been characterized by fairness, judicious liberality and a desire to respect the reasonable demands of the manufacturers. We believe that a vast amount of good has been done by this board. Though without any official authority whatever it has gained the confidence of the general public. It has disarmed the criticisms of irresponsible "reformers." Its formal approval of a film has always been respected by the authorities to the extent that it created a presumption in favor of the film shown.

If this high standard of usefulness is to be maintained the Board cannot afford to allow any more pictorial descriptions of hangings and electrocutions. The argument urged in the letter of the board that the "lesson" conveyed by an execution must outweigh any horrors at the gruesome details is scarcely worthy of serious consideration and we are surprised to think that such an argument should be put forward by intelligent and cultured men at this period of human progress. Push this logic to its ultimate conclusions and what will be the result? If public executions are to be revived on the screen by reason of the supposed deterrent effect, why not have all executions public? The theory of the "deterrent effect" has been thoroughly exploded. Instead of deterring potential murderers the public execution has brutalized the whole community. It seems strange that these elementary principles of modern ethics have to be urged upon the able and experienced public men who control the National Board of Censorship. But for their own official confession to that effect we would have refused to believe that these antiquated notions have power to influence their official action. We did not think that persons of intelligence could be found, failing to realize that the constant and even the occasional witnessing of scenes of violence and killing have a debasing effect upon the spectator.

We fear that instead of a deterrent effect upon the spectators there will be an encouraging effect upon such producers as love to deal in the morbid and ultra-sensational. If the pressure of careful examination is withdrawn and if hangings and electrocutions are to be permitted, why not lynchings and crimes of violence generally? If there is any need at all of a restraining influence, then it must be exerted in preventing an exhibition of hangings and electrocutions. There is no doubt whatever in our minds that such exhibitions on the screen could with perfect propriety be stopped by the police under the general statute which forbids indecent, obscene or scandalous shows. The Board of Censorship should in its decisions always keep pretty well ahead of the police, otherwise there is no need for its existence. It should be quick to prevent exhibitions which the police would have a right to legally suppress.

We have not mentioned the strongest argument against the reasoning and the stand taken by the National Board of Censorship in this matter. It is safe to assume that two-fifths of the average audience in an electric theater consists of children. A responsible journal in Minneapolis has made a careful investigation and has prepared a table of statistics, based on average attendances at all the principal motion picture theaters in that city. From this tabulation it would appear that two-fifths of the audience was composed of children. The conditions in Minneapolis are no doubt typical of the entire country. Does the Board of Censorship believe that children ought to see public executions depicted on the screen? Is there any member of the Board willing to take a child to such an exhibition? It sickens every friend of the motion picture to see fathers and mothers cover the faces of their children with their hands in order to shut out the sight of objectionable scenes in the films. That kind of parental censorship ought never to be necessary. If the National Board of Censorship has any regard for the feelings of fathers and mothers, who take their children to the electric theaters, it ought to place an absolute, unconditional and permanent ban on all films depicting public executions.

We are of the opinion that the National Board of Censorship ought to have in its membership a practical and experienced exhibitor. It is the exhibitor who bears the brunt of hostile criticism. He has to face indignant fathers and mothers. He has to contend at close range and often on the firing line with all the enemies of the motion picture. For this work, painful and disagreeable as it is, he neither gets nor expects any reward. Why should he have no voice in this matter? He knows what the public wants and what it will not tolerate. He comes fresh from the school of experience. His judgment is not always infallible, but we believe that the Board would greatly profit by his advice. It surely could do no harm if he were listened to on any question that may come up before the Board. The National League might take this matter up for the benefit of the exhibitor and for the benefit of the industry at large. We feel reasonably sure that the average exhibitor would place his veto on any film portraying the harrowing details of a hanging or an electrocution.

STATE SENATOR STILLWELL, a Democrat from a Bronx District has introduced a bill prohibiting the exhibition of motion pictures on Sunday everywhere in the state of New York. We do not think that a Democratic legislature would care to go on record with such an act to its "credit." Even if the bill were to pass both houses it is reasonable to assume that the governor, who knows conditions here and who sympathizes with the plain people and their theater, will put his veto "writ large" on any such reactionary measure.

Autocosm of the Exchange Man

By Louis Reeves Harrison

JUST plain man is not going to sprain his brain figuring out the meaning of every word that meets his eye while he is reading, and, as he is representative of just plain people by the million, that is why words often fail to carry the process of thought from one individual to another. Writers struggle all their lives to ascertain the force and comprehension of the English language and to mark nice shades of distinction between words closely allied only to find that they are laboring under a historic misfortune. They are almost certain to become addicted to one tedious mannerism or another and fail to say what they mean in print. Worse yet is the experience of those who attempt to write plays for the stage.

We are not obliged to be exact or vividly appropriate in ordinary conversation—there is plenty of time to revise and explain and correct various lapses of the tongue, but all literary ornament and all that puts a strain upon the swift comprehension of an audience has to be eliminated in the dialogue of characters in a drama, and the author finds himself up against one of the most difficult propositions in the world in laboring between what is stupidly clear and what is brilliant though not obvious. What a relief the photodrama affords to men and women of ideas who lack perfect control of language!

Do you see what I am coming to? It takes a novelist a year or more to prepare his copy for the publisher. It takes a year or more for the dramatist to prepare his script for stage production. All because the coventional expression of thought and feeling is so difficult to master that only one in a million succeeds well enough in using it to impress that million.

Suppose that genius took the same pains in preparing a great drama for the screen! His audience would number millions in all parts of the world. No matter whether he was recording thought or sentiment, or knowledge historical or scientific, he need only illuminate his subject at rare moments with a few well-chosen words. The rest would be swiftly impressed by a powerful medium that is absolutely destitute of formal distinctions when rightly handled, and is being well enough handled at this stage of the game to make it the most popular form of entertainment ever devised by the mind of man.

I regard the man of genius as one who opens the way for the rest of us to improve our present condition and attain greater happiness than we now enjoy. In him is the force that makes progress possible. One great channel for his energy in the future, because it enables him to communicate freely with the largest number of those seeking an outlet for their natural energies, is that afforded by the scientific development of moving pictures. The good that he can do depends upon the degree of freedom with which he can act. Those who choke up the channels and thus suppress what is of high value to all are afflicted with autocosm.

Everything that tends to break down the barriers between the most gifted men and women and the less gifted ones, that all may participate in what is beautiful and interesting, that there shall be no privileged classes, that our country shall be a true democracy, is to be hoped for and urged upon the motion-picture pioneers. They are in process of developing a language. They are preparing the way for a literature that shall be without vernacular. Moving pictures seem to have a natural destiny not fully appreciated, not half appreciated, by those engaged in making them.

"Autocosm" is a word invented by a noted English author to define the condition of a man who imagines that the whole universe is comprised within himself. The moving picture business seems to have brought into prominence an undue proportion of such individuals. In no other line of manufacture have men of very mediocre ability risen to enormous wealth and power in so short a time. This is without detriment to the capable ones who were swept along with the others. Many who could stand up courageously against misfortune of all kinds become completely demoralized by a sudden accession of wealth and "autocosm" is a natural result.

Of those who have narrowed the business down to its present restricted form, who have obstructed the presentation of whatever in the human mind is worth preservation and perpetuation, who have kept millions of intelligent people from attending the exhibitions, who labor under the delusion that the entire universe is in their state of mental stagnation, the worst is the exchange man who thinks his mission is to tell the rest of us what we want. He is the "Old Showman." He thinks the New Art is merely a means of amusing those who can only afford to spend a dime for recreation, and I defy any one to convince him to the contrary.

One idea prevailed among early exchange men—they thought that the business would not last. They were all in a hurry to get all there was in the onrush at flood tide, not realizing that they were merely obstructing a strong current. No question of national degeneracy, none of belittling and injuring the work of mothers and teachers in the education of children, played any part in their schemes. Their sole cry was "Give the people raw meat and plenty of it." If the business had been left to them alone it would have been in a state of decay by this time. The one thing universally detested by Americans of all but degenerate ranks and degrees is vulgarity on the stage. That moving pictures have not met with wider approval than that generously extended is purely and simply because the exchange man put his vulgar stamp upon so large a proportion of a product that manufacturers were willing and glad to improve.

There are many exhibitors who will question my statement about vulgarity, and if any such are so alive to the necessities of their own business as caterers to public taste as to desire confirmation of what I say, let them consider the policy of nearly all leading periodicals in America. Careful investigation will show that over ninety per cent. of the weekly and monthly magazines going into millions of homes put a ban upon the vulgar and suggestive in stories or articles of any kind. I am one of those who would like to see moving pictures appeal to that same ninety per cent. instead of a decadent small percentage.

Go to any established producer and ask him if he is turning out low quality in response to any known demand from the people, and he will reply that such demand comes entirely from exchange men. I realize that the whole truth is not embodied in such a reply, but that does not controvert the fact the exchange men having the "autocosm" disease are almost destitute of ambition for the future of moving pictures. Their old ideas are about as valuable in this era as a snake's old skin. The greatest mission of moving pictures is to give opportunity for improvement to those who long for it and most need it.

Uncle Sam—Inquisitor

Proceedings Before Special Examiner in the Suit of the United States Against the Motion Picture Patents Company and Others.

WHEN the Government of the United States seeks to dissolve or prosecute a corporation alleged to be operating in restraint of trade, the Sherman law provides special facilities for securing and collecting evidence. Upon application by the Attorney-General of the United States any Federal court will appoint an examiner who is vested with the power of holding sessions and taking testimony. The Government may call any witness it pleases and get from him all the information possible against the alleged trust. It may call any of the men suspected of being violators of the law, but whenever a witness is called and takes the stand he becomes by that very fact immune from prosecution. Hence the term immunity bath. Hence also the popularity of immunity baths among trust magnates who suffer from nervous troubles or twinges of conscience.

In Parlor B, on the second floor of the Hotel McAlpin, at the corner of Broadway and Thirty-fourth Street, New York City, much interesting testimony was taken recently by Special Examiner Edward Hacker in the suit of the United States against the Motion Picture Patents Company, the General Film Company and a number of other defendants. The testimony thus secured will be used by the Government whenever the case comes to trial. No one can tell with any degree of certainty just when that will be. The case may be reached in the course of the current year, and it may not be reached before 1914.

The first two witnesses were Mr. Henry N. Marvin, the president of the Motion Picture Patents Company, and Mr. William Pelzer, the treasurer of the General Film Company. Their testimony was largely formal and negative. Marvin assured the examiner and his questioner, Edwin P. Grosvenor, special assistant to the Attorney-General of the United States, that neither the Motion Picture Patents Company nor the General Film Company had been formed for the purpose of restraining trade or monopolizing the film business. He told Mr. Grosvenor of the chaotic conditions of the film market before the advent of the Motion Picture Patents Company. The Motion Picture Patents Company, Marvin said, was organized to put an end to intolerable conditions and to prevent the destruction of the film industry. In pursuance of the same policy of wise regulation, Marvin declared the General Film Company was created. Such was the sum and substance of Mr. Marvin's testimony. William Pelzer, who followed Marvin on the stand, added practically nothing to the statements of his predecessor, except when later, under direction of Mr. Grosvenor, he adduced some important and interesting documents, of which more later.

Things around the large and beautifully polished oval table in Parlor B ran along very placidly indeed. The stenographer was about the only person paying close attention to the witnesses. The low-voiced talk among the attorneys somehow suggested the "beetle's droning flight." Reporters on the qui vive for "live copy" were about to give up hope and fold their tents to steal away in poetic silence when the examiner called William H. Swanson to the stand. A plain-looking man, apparently in the early thirties, quietly dressed and modest of demeanor stepped forward and took the stand. He was sworn and looked around with an air of perfect self-possession. If the reporters were at first inclined to expect no ripple of excitement from the new witness they changed their minds quite willingly a few minutes afterwards. Mr. Swanson exuded interesting information, abounded in clever repartee, patronized his cross examiner in a spirit of patience and bonhomie and incidentally fairly deluged the record with bits of early American moving picture history, with humorous observations and a quiet but deadly sarcasm.

I felt sorry for the aged legal gentleman from Baltimore to whose lot it fell to cross-examine Swanson. The witness was not a bit recalcitrant or unwilling or pugnacious, but most anxious to oblige.

"Mr. Swanson," asked the Baltimorean veteran of the law, "is it not a fact, that you can serve a hundred customers with four reels."

There was just the faintest trace of a smile on the lips of the witness. Then with a solemnity of which the late Sam Weller might have been justly envious he replied in slow and measured tones:

"Well, Mr. Willis, I suppose it could be done, but I do fear that the reels would have to be cut up into small portions and you might lose the customers."

Mr. Willis paused impressively after this answer of Swanson. He probably felt proud of the tough question he had propounded to the witness. The latter sat impassive in his chair and not a single man around the oval table smiled.

The cross-examination of Mr. Swanson was the opening of the door that led to a veritable store house of first-class reading matter. The direct examination, conducted by Mr. Grosvenor, counsel for the Government, was comparatively brief and simple. Here is the gist of it: "I was making at the rate of about a hundred thousand dollars a year out of four exchanges, one in Chicago, one in Omaha, one in St. Louis and one in New Orleans, when the Patents Company came along and swooped down upon me by cancelling my license and cutting off my supply of films." It was mainly this statement that the venerable attorney from Baltimore could not and would not accept. Against it he directed whatever batteries he could, but it is fair to say that his batteries either missed fire or never got within range of the witness' evidence.

Counsel took the witness over the stormy days of the winter of 1909 when Swanson, who was then a power in the field of moving pictures, found his license gone.

Q. In the month of January how many reels did you buy from the Patents Company?

A. I did not have a month to buy films in. My license was cancelled without notice. The notice and the cancellation came at the same time. No manufacturer delivered anything to me, with possibly one or two exceptions.

Q. Who were the exceptions?

A. I think I did get some reels from Pathe and from Selig. No, I correct that. I got nothing from Selig. I do not think the Patents Company carried out their part of the agreement, they ought to have given me notice of cancellation before they cut off the supply.

By digging further into the direct testimony of Swanson counsel for the defendants nailed down the fact, that the Patents Company telegraphed to all of Swanson's customers, notifying them that Swanson's supply had been cut off. Counsel sought to show that Swanson had other sources of income than his film exchanges and succeeded in showing that Swanson made money in various theatrical enterprises, but also elicited the fact that he always kept separate accounts and never figured the profits from his theatrical enterprises in the sum he said he had made out of the film exchanges. While testifying as to the various items and assets which made up his personal property at the time of the loss of his license Swanson emphasized the fact that he placed no inflated values on films.

"That is one of the hardest things to do," said the witness, "to place a just and proper valuation on films. The cost of a film and its actual value were quite two different things. When I bought a film for a hundred dollars I immediately depreciated it 85 per cent.

Q. How many reels did you buy in December, 1908, for all of your exchanges?

A. Impossible to answer that from memory.

Q. How many reels did you need to supply your customers?

A. Well I found it took about 3000 reels to supply about a hundred customers.

Then came counsel's classic question about supplying a hundred customers with four reels.

Q. Did you have no regular system of supplying your customers and buying your reels?

A. In those days, I mean in 1907 and 1908, there was no such thing as a system. No manufacturers had any regular releases in the early days. Such things as first runs and second runs and third runs were unknown. Exhibitors were not educated up to the advantages of having the reels first. As to buying the reels, why, we just went into the factories or offices of the producers. Saturday usually was buying day, and there were often fist fights among the men that wanted to buy. We never looked at the reels before buying and just swept them off the counter. That's the way it was in the Vitagraph office and in the Selig office; was just a case of how many you could sweep off the shelves. These conditions continued up to the time that the Film Service Association was formed, some time in 1908.

Q. Give the exact time of the organization of the Film Service Association?

A. February, 1908.

Mr. Swanson had spoken in his direct examination of how several prominent men in the Patents Company had prevailed upon him to sign a license agreement in New York City. He said in substance that social festivities had played quite a part in the methods of persuasions that were used and named the Republican Club in this city as one of the scenes where Bacchus had been worshiped. Counselor Willis plunged into these details on the cross-examination.

Q. You say that these men all slept in the same room with you?

A. I think two of them did, but I am sure about the other. They accomplished their purpose and secured a promise from me.

Q. Where did you sleep that night?

A. To tell you the truth, I don't know exactly where I slept that night. We all had loads for which we should have made more than one trip, and I don't believe the other men remember where they slept that night. (Laughter).

Mr. Willis, slowly but surely perceiving that this line of questioning afforded little matter of pride to his side, took a new tack.

Q. Well, even after your license had been cancelled, Mr. Swanson, you continued your exchange?

A. Yes, as a junk shop. The cancellation of the license put me out of business. I could get no kind of new supply until late in March of 1909. An exchange is dependent on a sure daily supply. If it has to be without such supply, even for one day, it is badly embarrassed, if it remains without supply for a week it is crippled, and after that lack of supply means loss of business.

Q. You continued advertising?

A. I did.

Q. I show your advertisement in the issue of March 13th, 1909, of The Moving Picture World.

In this advertisement Mr. Swanson had said among other things that "he had considered the question most carefully and had investigated very thoroughly the source of supply of film for the independent exchanges and he believes that the subjects which are to be placed on the market by the International Projecting and Producing Company are unequaled not only in subject matter but also in photography."

Q. Was this advertisement placed in The Moving Picture World by your order?

A. Yes.

Q. Then it would appear from your own statements that you had no difficulty in procuring film?

Mr. Swanson looked sad. He made no secret of the fact that he had been altogether too optimistic in the "ad." He answered: "The 'ad' in question was censored by the editor of The Moving Picture World before it was allowed to go into the paper." At this there came a sign of life from a section of counsel, who up to this moment had been earning their fees by merely looking wise.

"Censored or censured, which was it, Mr. Swanson?" one of the somnolent array asked, plainly tickled at the cleverness of the question.

"Why," answered Swanson smiling at the brilliant sally of counsel, "The 'ad' was both censored and censured by the editor."

Q. What about the supply? Was it not there as you stated in your "ad"?

A. Mr. Willis, no amount of money could have bought a supply equal to that of the Patents Company at that time. The International finally made a delivery of three or four reels per week, but nothing like the necessary quantity. I got in touch with the Great Northern, who, I believe, wanted to work with the International, but the Great Northern had a license from the Biograph, and they did not seem just sure of what they were going to do.

Q. Well, what makes did the International Projecting and Producing Company deliver to you?

A. Please, Mr. Willis, let's not talk about it. You awaken painful memories; don't talk of makes, there were attempts at makes, I believe Messter's was one of them, and a few others equally bad.

Q. I show you another ad in The Moving Picture World giving the names of the film companies supplying the International Projecting and Producing Company?

A. Why, those people were inexperienced, they advertised samples of reels without knowing whether the American public would stand for that kind of film, as a matter of fact, the public did not stand for them.

Q. Going back to the question of the Film Service Association. Are you sure that manufacturers had influence there?

A. As sure as I am of being married to my wife.

Here the cross-examination of Mr. Swanson was interrupted to give Mr. William Pelzer a chance to take the stand and produce certain papers which he had been ordered to bring along. Among the papers produced by Mr. Pelzer was a copy of the Exchange License Agreement issued by the Patents Company to the Kinetograph Company in New York and Atlanta, Ga. Mr. Pelzer said there was no agreement of any kind between the General Film Company and the Kinetograph Company.

It appeared from statements submitted by Pelzer, that after paying dividends on the common and preferred stock of the General Film Company there were undivided profits in 1911 of more than a million and a half dollars. Mr. Pelzer submitted statements showing how this money was apportioned. This statement will be available for the press at the next meeting called by the examiner.

By counsel for the government:

Q. What salary do the directors get?

A. Twenty dollars a day and mileage.

Q. What is the salary of the president of the General Film Company?

A. By advice of counsel I decline to answer.

Q. Will you tell us what your own salary is?

A. I decline to answer. You have subpoenaed people here, Mr. Repton, for instance, the auditor, and you have been in consultation with Mr. MacDonald, both of the Kinetograph Company, to whom I have refused the information you seek.

Q. Mr. Witness, as long as you seem to be exercised over this matter, I might as well tell you that I am going to subpoena any witness I see fit, and I assure you that you will find me quite often in communication with Mr. MacDanold or any one else who might be able to aid me in this inquiry. You know what the object of this inquiry is. We are here to determine whether the Motion Picture Patents Company and the General Film Company are corporations operating in restraint of trade. It is commonly reported that the General Film Company is merely a partnership between manufacturers.

At this moment Mr. MacDonald was heard from. Said he: "I wish to state that I am here representing Mr. Richard A. Roland, who represents the ownership of one-eighth of all the preferred stock of the General Film Company. I am here to learn all I can for the benefit of the holders of preferred stock. If there is evidence here showing that the holders of common stock have distributed the entire net earnings, the position of the holders of preferred stock is certainly precarious when a dissolution takes place.

Q. By Mr. Grosvenor: Mr. Pelzer, can you tell me what the profits of the General Film Company were in 1912?

A. I cannot, The books are not closed. I have been treasurer only a short time. I might be able to give you an idea if I had been treasurer a longer time.

Q. Have you no idea at all?

A. No.

Q. Do you think it has been a profitable year?

A. I think it has been a profitable year.

Mr. Pelzer, who seemed to be in a belligerent frame of mind, was then excused and the cross-examination of Mr. Swanson was resumed.

Mr. Swanson, on taking his seat, desired to make a voluntary statement. He wanted to correct an impression he said that he had any but friendly feelings toward the defendants in the case and had no personal animus in the matter at all. It was just business rivalry and—

Here the witness was interrupted by some savage words from one of the counsel who up to that time had not uttered a word, but now lashed himself into a state of moral indignation.

"I object," he cried, "to this harangue on the part of the witness and wish to hear no more. I ask to have it stricken from the record."

Swanson looked surprised, but was by no means disconcerted and ready to answer more questions of Mr. Willis.

Q. Now, Mr. Swanson, what was the primary object of forming the Universal Film Company?

A. To make money.

Q. And what was its secondary object?

A. To make money.

Q. Of what companies was the Universal made up?

A. Rex, Champion, Powers, Imp and Nestor.

Q. How were the sales of these concerns before the consolidation?

A. Well, the Imps were pretty good sellers, I guess they sold about ninety copies of three releases.

Q. What about the Powers?

A. They were poor sellers and did not figure enough to make statistics interesting.

Q. What about the Rex?

A. The sale there was about sixty copies of two releases.

Q. And what about the Champion?

A. Poor old Champion, he was lucky to sell any.

Q. What about the Horsley films?

A. Sold about eighty copies of three releases.

Q. Why were these companies combined?

A. Mr. Willis, are you trying to sick a government investigation on me?

Q. Answer my question.

A. Well, the activities of the Patents Company against us were such that we had to get together, we could do more united than singly.

Here the session was declared adjourned until February 5th to reconvene in the same place.

Mr. Grosvenor, the special assistant to the Attorney-General of the United States and Mr. Joseph R. Darling, special agent of the Department of Justice, are at present engaged in Detroit where the case of the United States against the Bathtub Trust is likely to be reached for trial. If the defendants in that case plead guilty the examination in the suit of the United States against the Motion Picture Patents Company and others will be continued as scheduled. If on the other hand the defendants elect to go to trial it may be April or May before these hearings can be resumed.

Mr. Darling showed a list of the witnesses to be called to the representative of The Moving Picture World, but asked not to have the list printed. He was afraid that some of the witnesses might "skip." After taking a long look at the list I assured him his fear was unwarranted. Most of the witnesses are old exchange men, who either sold out to the General Film Company or who had their licenses cancelled. Mr. M. A. Neff, president of the National League is one of the prominent witnesses on the list.

A curious thing about these examinations is the fact, that counsel for the government and counsel for the defendant seem to have fallen under the strong fascination which the motion picture exerts on all its devotees. They juggle with technical terms and dilate on the possibilities of the picture with all the enthusiasm of neophytes. W. S. B.

LUBIN GETS KLEIN PLAYS.

Siegmund Lubin has closed a deal with the famous author, Mr. Charles Klein, for the exclusive motion picture rights to all his productions. Included in these are "The Lion and the Mouse," " The Third Degree," "The Cipher Code" and other equally well known plays.

Negotiations have been pending for several months, and the consideration entailed will mark a record in the price paid for motion picture production. It is the intention of Mr. Lubin that all these plays shall be made into feature films, some to constitute an evening's entertainment.

Arrangements are already under way for the building of such massive scenery as will be needed. Many of the actors who took leading parts in the original plays will be engaged, and these pictures will surely show a new departure in picture making.

The basis of the picture is the play. With this great foundation upon which to build, and the wonderful artistic material at Mr. Lubin's command, it may be safely said that these films will undoubtedly entitle him to keep his place in the front rank of great motion picture producers.

They are evolving big things up in the Eclair offices and it is really a sight worth while to note how the entire organization enthuses over the leadership of their most capable president, M. Charles Jourjon. Some announcements of big things are promised for the near future.

Melies in New Zealand

The first visit of a motion picture company to this part of the Antipodes; full of interesting material.

By Doré Hoffman.

JUST prior to the visit of the Melies Company to the Island of Borneo, this globe-trotting motion picture company, which is making a tour of the world, sojourned for a number of weeks in New Zealand. Most of this time was spent in the Maori, or native section of the islands of New Zealand, for the reason that the past and present life of the Maori tribes is entirely a virgin field for the motion picture camera. One of the principal ideas of Mr. Gaston Melies, in making his tour of the world, is to record in motion pictures the lives of strange people in the remote nooks and corners of the earth. Conventional European pictures may be taken in almost any large city along the beaten path that circles the globe, but there are millions of people living far from the world's highways, concerning whose mode of life, either past or present, the knowledge we have is practically nil. There is a two-fold object in the purpose of Mr. Melies in visiting out-of-the-way countries. One reason is to furnish something new in the way of entertainment, and the other is that each picture taken shall possess a certain amount of educational value.

The Maori of New Zealand is an interesting creature. There are many people who have not the remotest idea of what a Maori is and, it is said, a majority of the Europeans living in New Zealand know little more about them than the fact that they are a semi-savage tribe inhabiting the northern island of New Zealand, where they keep to themselves as much as possible. Some of them adopt the white man's ways when they go to live in the white man's cities. To use a plain English, the Maori are nothing more or less than reformed cannibals. Before the white man came they occupied the entire islands of New Zealand and every blessed one of them was very fond of man-meat. Their history is one of the most horribly interesting parts of the study of ethnology. Hundreds of years before Columbus discovered America, it is believed that cannibal fishermen, from the Fiji Islands were blown by storms far from their homes and eventually drifted upon the shores of various small islands that dot the Southern Seas. The population of these islands, including New Zealand, having begun in this way, developed in a wilder state than it ever had been in the early history of these brown-skinned castaways.

They brought with them many customs and manners of the islands from whence they had drifted, together with most of the legendary circumstance which guides the daily life of all Polynesian people. These old, savage legends were augmented by new legends which developed as the generations succeeded each other, so that each island gradually came to have its own legends in addition to those that were brought to it.

The whole history of the Maoris down to the time New Zealand was taken by the English, about 1840, is one of blood-curdling savagery. The entire country was divided into tribal possessions and these tribes were constantly at war. Cannibalism they brought with them from other lands and it continued until nearly 1870. There are numbers of old men among the Maori tribes today who have feasted upon man-meat in days gone by. Since the white man brought cattle and sheep to the islands, cannibalism has practically vanished, though many of the old men declare that there is nothing sweeter than well potted man-meat. "It tastes like roast pork," said one of the old chiefs to Mr. Melies, "only much sweeter." Said the same old fellow, "The last fight I was in, as a government scout, I saw the beach strewn with the bodies of revolutionary Maoris and as I saw them lying there, I am ashamed to say that I felt the old longing for a taste of man-meat come upon me, and I wished that I might have some of them roasting in my oven. But I remembered that I am now a Christian and must not eat the flesh of my brother, which restriction I sometimes think is the greatest drawback to the Christian religion."

All male prisoners of war were killed and roasted and their meat preserved in calabashes or gourds for future use; the female captives were kept as slaves. For a Maori to wander away from his tribal home within the lines of another tribe, meant certain death. These tribal hostilities in many cases dated back for generations and had their origin in absurdly trifling events. One war which involved the great chief Maniapoto and his progeny for many years, dated from a time when his nephew was accidentally slain in a sham battle while their tribe was being entertained by another. Maniapoto's forces were on their way to do battle with another tribe and stopped at the village of the Tuhourangi on the shores of Lake Rotorua. During the feasting, it was suggested, for the entertainment of the company, that they have a sham fight. The suggestion was acted upon, but the sham fight soon developed into a general melee in which the nephew of Mamapoto was killed and a savage war, enduring several generations, began. In these tribal wars there was always an official scorekeeper, much the same as our present-day score-keeper who keeps the official tally at a baseball game. It was his duty to keep a record of the heads that were lost and won. The heads of slaves and common people were not counted in the score; only those of chiefs or their children or near relatives.

Maori Paddles.

One of the photoplays taken by the Melies Company is the romantic legend of Hineoma and Tutanekai, enacted on the shores of Lake Rotorua, where the events are said to have taken place. Tutanekai was in the habit of visiting the Tuhourangi village to serenade his lady fair with songs of love, but because of a blight in his birth, was forbidden to marry her. The legend goes on to relate her virtuous constancy to Tutanekai; it tells of how in the dark of night she endeavored to escape from her own people, who constantly watched her, by embarking in a canoe. The canoe was too heavy for her to move and her actions were quickly discovered. Then with heroism that has since been put into songs, she plunged into the lake and swam the entire length of it to join the man she loved. This romance is the Romeo and Juliet of Maori literature which, unfortunately, exists only in memory and is handed down by word of mouth from generation to generation.

Maori Calabash.

In taking motion pictures of this story, native actors played all the parts. These are shown in the group illustration herewith The native "leading lady," Maata, who played the part of Hineoma, is to be seen standing to the left of Mr. Melies in the picture. Another legend of the "Young Lochinvar" type was also done by the natives and recorded in picture form. It is the tale of how Te Ponga won his bride, and affords incidental glimpses of some of New Zealand's most famous beauty spots. There will be forthcoming, also, other stories of the Maori wars, which are all thrilling tales and each of which contains some element of woman's strong devotion, which will prove to be the touch of nature that will show these people to be kin with the entire world. While dramatic picture stories were being made at and around Lake Rotorua, numerous educational films were being taken by other members of the Melies staff in varios parts of New Zealand; on the Wanganui and Waiotapua rivers; among the geysers; in the region of volcanoes, and at the centers of industry. Altogether New Zealand, as it was and as it is, will be shown with a thoroughness never attempted before and only possible now with the advancement of cinematograph enterprise.

SELIG IMPROVES LOS ANGELES STUDIO.

The week of January 13th saw the beginning of another extensive improvement in the plant of the Selig Polyscope Company's Western branch in Los Angeles. Property recently acquired immediately north of the studio will be utilized in extending the grounds clear to Duane Street, thus giving the plant a fine frontage on three sides of the block. The great concrete mission wall which is such a distinguishing feature of the Edendale valley, where the studio is located, will be extended to and along Duane Street, and will be parked inside and out, as is the older wall, with grass and flowers. It will encompass a number of new ornate concrete buildings, which are needed to house the increasing equipment and additional acting force of the Selig Pacific coast establishment.

George Hernandez, the well-known comedian of the Selig Pacific coast forces, is again busy portraying droll characters before the camera, after a serious illness which kept him away from the studio for eight weeks.

Director Henry McRae of Selig's Los Angeles studio is busy producing a line of one and two-reel wild animal specialties which promise to surpass any hitherto released. Miss Kathlyn Williams is playing the adventurous female leads in these exciting pictures, and Hobart Bosworth is appearing with her.

KINEMACOLOR SHOWS GOOD PICTURES.

At the regular Wednesday morning exhibition for the film scribes the kinemacolor displayed films which those present agreed were among the best if not the best as a whole that the company has shown at any one of these morning meetings. Among the pictures were "The Violin," a drama; "The Struggle," a drama; "Mystic Manipulations," trick photography and sleight-of-hand; "The Alchemist," drama; "On the Cornish Riviera," a beautiful scenic, and a fashion display of corsets and waists.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

PROGRESSIVE women are taking marked interest in the growing influence of the moving picture show on the mental development of children. At a meeting of Hull House Woman's Club, this city, recently, it was planned to use their efforts to persuade proprietors of 5 and 10 cent theaters to use films of educational value as a regular feature of their performances.

Members of the Club expressed the belief that instruction obtained by means of pleasing entertainment is more valuable and lasting, because more easily assimilated, than that procured by the poring over unnecessarily dry schoolbooks. Mrs. S. Hallowell, addressing the meeting, gave a synopsis of the moving picture business, viewing the matter from the practical standpoint of expense, rentals, trouble and also the value and meaning of their existence to the local community.

"We women should not only try to persuade public school boards to co-operate with the owners of film companies to multiply the supply of botanical, scientific, geographical and ethical pictures," she said, "but we ought to go directly to the owners and producers and give them our opinion, with the promise of our hearty encouragement. To my mind, child education will be immensely improved by the introduction of the moving picture method, and the growing brain will be less severely taxed. It may even shorten school hours and allow more time for hygienic exercise."

Wisconsin Public Schools to Have Moving Pictures.

To supply the public schools of Wisconsin with educational moving picture films, the extension division of the University of Wisconsin proposes to establish a loan collection of 150 of these films. Competition has brought the price of moving picture machines, Dean L. F. Reber declares, within the reach of almost any school, but only through access to a traveling collection could the average public school of Wisconsin afford the necessary films. For places where the purchase of a machine will be impossible, it is proposed to lend the school a machine.

The extension division has already tried the plan in co-operation with the Wisconsin Anti-Tuberculosis Association. These have been in use in all parts of the state. The recommendation that sufficient funds be appropriated to secure an adequate educational film supply is, declares Dean Reber, therefore, not a proposal to enter upon an untried field, but a justified extension of work already begun.

Picture Business in Columbus, O.

J. A. Maddox, president of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League, of Columbus, O., says that about 35,000 people in that city visit the picture shows every day, which means an attendance of 245,000 a week—a little more than one admission for every man, woman and child in Columbus. This is for the 48 exclusive moving picture houses in the city, and doesn't include other theaters which show pictures only on Sunday.

The Pantomime was the first picture theater in Columbus, and was opened in April 1906, its site being on the ground now occupied by the big Lazarus department store, on High Street. The Comique and the Exhibit soon followed.

About $200,000 is invested in picture theaters, in Columbus, at the present time. Last year's receipts were about $650,000.

Warden McClaughrey of Anamosa, Ia.

A new prophet has arisen in Israel—I mean in Iowa. His name is McClaughrey and, by calling, he is warden of a state prison at Anamosa. Before the legislature, recently, in Des Moines, Warden McClaughrey is reported to have said:

"I am fully convinced that the moving picture shows are largely responsible for the auto-bandits and other crimes in Chicago and other cities. It is not that these shows teach crime, directly; but they do show an infinite variety of plays wherein human skill and daring cut a very large figure and it is while viewing these plays that men get suggestions and ideas as to the possibilities of quick and daring action in emergencies, and they apply these suggestions to plots which they work out for themselves. Chicago is getting her lesson. St. Louis will get it, so will Kansas City and other cities. And Des Moines may well look out."

Why should Warden McClaughrey stop here? Why not fasten the murder of Rosenthal, in New York, and all the present crimes on the calendar, on the moving picture? Why should the inventor of the automobile escape anathema? Before the moving picture was discovered it is well known that there was no use for prisons or penitentiaries! Furthermore, Warden McClaughrey believes "that it is inevitable that the Iowa prisons will have much larger population, largely because of the moving picture business." What man possessed of sanity can take Warden McClaughrey seriously?

Foolish and Expensive Competition.

I have before me a pass issued by the Yale Theater, 63d Street and Stewart Ave., this city, which reads on one side as follows: "Pass Two (2). Good Daily, except Saturday, Sunday and holidays. Not good after February 10, 1913."

On the other side we have the legend: "Under new management. The purpose of this pass—to introduce our new policy."

I understand that the Yale offers five, and even seven reels of pictures at 5 cents. This is part of the "new policy" of the "new management." At that, passes are issued broadcast, good any time within a month!

The aim is to put the Glamour, a nearby competitor, out of business. Such competition can work only loss to both theaters. Besides, it creates a contempt for moving pictures in the minds of many in the neighborhood. This "new policy" has been tried again and again, and it has always ended in disaster.

A Word from the "Belasco" of Pictures.

S. L. Rothaphel, director of Saxe's Lyric, in Minneapolis, writes that business is "capacity at all times, regardless of weather conditions." The Lyric has the official indorsement of the clergy of all denominations, in Minneapolis; also of the board of education and of the women's clubs. These indorsements are all neatly framed and placed in the lobby. Letters from prominent educators and the governor are also framed and placed in the lobby. "The Lyric today is just such an institution as I once dreamed of having, and it is patronized substantially. It is not alone an artistic success, but a financial one as well," writes Mr. Rothaphel.

The Lyric has a new front, one of the most beautiful in the northwest. The attractive new lobby is of the French Renaissance style, and the entire interior has been tastefully redecorated. An orchestra of 10 pieces plays the pictures as only Rothaphel can present them.

"We are just finishing 'The Little Minister,' which ran three days at the Lyric to capacity audiences,' is another extract from Mr. Rothaphel's letter. "In the third reel, where the Little Minister and Babby are married in the Gypsy camp, until Lord Rintoul is rescued from a watery grave, we created bolts of lightning and heavy rain effects, which made a wonderfully realistic picture. Especially fine was the effect where a bolt of lightning struck the tree that falls and kills the old drunkard, Dow. This scene was loudly applauded."

Since hearing from Mr. Rothaphel last, he has been given charge of the direction of the entire circuit of the Saxe Brothers in Minneapolis, Milwaukee and St. Joseph, Mo.

Chicago Film Brevities.

S. L. Warner, of Warner's Feature Film Co., was in the city all last week. He left for Minneapolis to attend the state exhibitor's convention at St. Paul, on Tuesday, Jan. 28.

Don L. B. Handcock, of the Lyric Theater, in Knoxville, Ill., also paid the World a recent call. The Lyric seats 250 people. The admission is 10 cents.

P. M. Perretz and wife paid the World office a visit last week. Mr. Perretz, who was for many years assistant office manager for the Pathe Freres, this city, now owns and manages the Aberdeen Theater, 59th and Aberdeen streets, Chicago. He has been running the house for one year and reports excellent business, last summer's attendance being especially large. The Aberdeen seats 300 people, and 3 reels are shown daily for an admission of 5 cents. The service is furnished by the Anti-Trust Film Co. Al. Howard, piano player at the Aberdeen, has won the soubriquet, "Wizard of the piano," from the patrons of the Aberdeen.

G. H. Wiley, of Kansas City, Mo., president of the Missouri state league and national vice-president, was in the city Saturday, Jan. 25th, on his way from the Ohio state convention at Columbus, to St. Louis. Mr. Wiley is pulling strong to have the national convention of exhibitors, in 1914, held in St. Louis. While in the city, Mr. Wiley and several friends visited the Essanay plant, and were personally conducted through it by President George K. Spoor.

RECEIVER ASKED FOR UNIVERSAL.

Sensational Charges of Fraud and Corruption Made in the Complaint—Hearing on February 7.

Through his attorneys, Graham & Stevenson, Mr. Charles V. Henkel, a stockholder of the Universal Film Company, has begun an action against the Universal Film Company and Carl Laemmle, William H. Swanson, Joseph Engel, Julius Stern, Robert Cochrane, Patrick A. Powers, David Horsley and Mark Dintenfass. The action is brought in the Supreme Court in New York County and asks that a receiver be appointed to take charge of the Universal Film Company, and that an injunction issue against the present management of that corporation restraining it from paying out any more money. Copies of the summons and complaint and a notice of motion for the appointment of a receiver and an injunction were served on all the defendants January 27th. The Attorney-General of the State was notified of the action. The hearing on the motion for a receiver and an injunction will come up before the special term of the Supreme Court on February 7th.

The complaint in the action is supplemented by a very lengthy affidavit of the plaintiff covering about sixty typewritten pages. The plaintiff makes sensational charges of fraud, corruption and mismanagement in the affairs of the Universal Film Company.

It is alleged by the plaintiff that several of the defendants have not kept faith with the Universal Film Company and, contrary to their promise, have pursued other enterprises of their own in competition with the Universal Film Company. Some of the charges grow out of the recent European journey of the president of the Universal Film Company. It is also claimed that the present directors of the Universal Film Company discriminated in favor of certain film exchanges in which it is alleged they themselves are financially interested. It is further averred that many irregularities and acts of fraud were committed by some of the defendants, who, it is asserted, failed to transfer all their assets to the Universal Film Company as agreed at the time of the formation of the Universal Film Company. The plaintiff questions the good faith of the defendants and maintains that the income of the Universal Film Company from the European agencies does not flow into the treasury of the company, but that parts of it are intercepted by some of the defendants.

UNIVERSAL STATEMENT.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company has issued a statement, the essential facts of which are as follows: The suit brought against the Universal Film Manufacturing Company is merely the act of a disgruntled ex-employee, who happens also to own a small block of stock in the company. The defendants in the case hold ninety-seven per cent. of the total stock.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company is in extremely healthy financial condition. In spite of the fact that it is but a few months old, it now owns one of the greatest, if not the greatest, moving picture manufacturing organizations in the world. Considering the vastness of its holdings and the extent of its organization, and the youth of the concern, its success has been and is remarkable. The Universal Company is not disturbed by the suit. The directors have accomplished wonders for the company and have made the plaintiff's stock and their own more valuable every week.

Walter W. Evans, Jr., representative of the publicity department of the Edison Company, has announced in Birmingham that a party of Edison players will spend the winter in that city.

NEW ENGLAND PICTURE PERSONALITIES.

Mr. John Levy.

This series of sketches of "New England Picture Personalities" would in no way be complete without a little write-up of that popular and genial manager, Mr. John Levey of the Superb Theater, Roxbury, Mass.

It was in 1901 that Mr. Levey broke into the theatrical business, and at that time gained a lot of valuable experience, while associated with the Mitchell Mark enterprises. No man could work for long under Mr. Mark, one of the earliest and most successful of New England photoplay magnates, without acquiring much of the inside of this business—and Mr. Levey surely kept his eyes and ears open.

After this, Manager Levey took full charge of the Supreme Theater, Jamaica Plain, Mass., where he made a most pronounced success. So much so, in fact, that after two years, he was transferred to the present position as manager of the Superb Theater a larger and better theater, owned by the same management. Mr. Levey is one of those managers who realizes that in these days of strenuous competition, business is often secured on a personal basis, and the fact that the subject of this article is known to over ninety per cent. of the people of Roxbury, has much to do with the large business done by the Superb. Mr. Levey is naturally of a bright disposition, making him a general favorite with managers, competitors, and, in short, with all who know him.

The general methods of doing business at the Superb are a credit to Mr. Levey, who is always most zealous in conducting a theater above reproach in every way.

WASHINGTON STATE CONVENTION.

Realizing the necessity of organization, exhibitors of the State of Washington are preparing to hold a state convention for the purpose of forming an exhibitors league in that state. The meeting is scheduled to be held at Seattle on February 18th and 19th. Work of promotion is being now conducted by a temporary organization of which A. B. Campbell of Sedro Valley is president; J. L. Shanks of Seattle, vice-president; J. Rantz of Bremerton, secretary and treasurer, with H. O. Allen of Seattle as a member of the executive board. This committee has outlined a constitution and by-laws which will be offered for adoption at the coming convention. Application blanks have been forwarded to all exhibitors in the state for their signatures and it is believed that a large and enthusiastic representation will be had at the February meeting. Sessions of the convention will be held at Arcade Hall, Seattle, commencing at 9:30 o'clock, Tuesday, February 18th.

KANSAS LEAGUE A HEALTHY INFANT.

In transmitting the picture taken by some of the members of the recent convention of Kansas State League, Karl W. Bornschein manager of the Elite Theater, Ellsworth, Kansas, writes that the Kansas City League has sixty members and is only 60 days old, and predicts that the number will be greatly increased before the next convention, which takes place at Topeka, on June 2nd and 3rd. He says everybody had a big time at the Wichita meeting and that all are enthusiastic for the league.

The four film exchanges of Kansas City have agreed to abide by the decisions of the National Board of Censorship. The local board of public welfare receives each week from the censors a complete list of the accepted and rejected films. The rumpus in Kansas City has not been caused by the theaters using censored film, according to the Kansas City Journal, but by the 25 per cent. of the houses which use uncensored stuff.

Based On Frank Olive's Poem, "The Blacksmith's Story," and Indicates Ability.

THE Pilot Film Corporation makes its bow to the picture loving public in a comedy drama entitled, "The Blacksmith's Daughter," an adaptation from a poem of the same title by Frank Olive. This company has chosen a suitable subject for its first release and will do well if it adheres to subjects of the same character, eschewing the more sensational and the melodramatic, wherein crime features too strongly. But while the choice of subject was excellent, the Pilot Company might have done much better than it did in its portrayal. There is evidence of haste and unpreparedness in the work, which is almost inexcusable these days when competent and thoroughly experienced photoplay scenic artists, directors and performers are to be had. It is a mistake on the part of any promoter of a film manufacturing company to begin at the beginning, that is, to start where their predecessors commenced five years ago. They should begin where the others left off and keep up with the procession. True, it will cost them more money to secure the best talent and experience, but such a course would be economical since an ordinary picture is not a good recommendation and will not sell to advantage.

Scene from "The Blacksmith's Story" (Pilot).

It is not intended to convey by these observations the belief that the Pilot Company's first picture is altogether unworthy. On the contrary it contains much to commend it and the faults most noticeable are such as can easily be remedied in future productions.

The choice of title has enabled the new company to make use of a very effective design for its trademark, namely, a picture of a pilot at the wheel. It is a mark that will make an impression upon those who see it and will be readily remembered. It is indeed a mark of distinction.

As before observed the story from which this picture is taken is in verse. The old blacksmith has been induced to tell his history by a chance remark of a portrait painter who has just sold him what appears in the picture to be an enlargement of his wife's photograph. The story thus drawn from the blacksmith is to the effect that while a young man be married the supposed widow of a soldier, believed to have been killed in battle. With his wife he went to Kansas and established himself in a new home, living very happily. One day a stranger happened along and stopped to have his horse shod. Again a chance remark brought forth the story of the traveler, revealing to the blacksmith that he was the husband who was supposed to have been killed in battle years ago. It is a stunning blow to the blacksmith, but he saw that there is only one way out of the dilemma; so, taking the man into the house he presented him to the wife. There is an immediate recognition and an agonizing parting as the woman proclaims that the man was her husband and she must go with him. The heart-broken blacksmith permits her to depart, taking with her the child, for he realizes, also, that the little one belongs with its mother. So it is that he is alone in his blacksmith shop with the picture of the woman he believed to be his wife.

The story is one that will have an instant appeal, for it touches the tenderest heart strings. The character of the blacksmith is portrayed by Mr. George Morgan and Kenneth Davenport is the old soldier. Mrs. Travers Vail plays the wife and Mimi Yvonne, the child. The picture was directed by Mr. Travers Vail, formerly with the Rex Company.

While the acting of the principals is good in the main, there are spots that appear constrained, as though the actors were not as familiar with the work as they should be. There is an earnestness of effort which indicates presence of good talent, which we hope to see more fully developed in future releases.

The Pilot Film Corporation has its studio and laboratory at 120 School street, Yonkers, N. Y., and is under the management of George A. Magie. It will release through the Film Supply Company.

"THE RACE FOR MILLIONS" (Gaumont).

These states rights, three-reel pictures must be thrillers if they are to justify themselves in the box offices. "The Race for Millions" will capture spectators and hold them from first to last by the fresh openings and turns that its adventure takes. It is a story of adventure pure and simple and makes no appeal except to the spectator's love of excitement and the suspense felt by the normal mind when fate is hanging in the balance. There is nothing in it that can possibly offend the most sensitive. And although every intelligent mind must notice that the use of the telegraph would have been the natural way out of the heroine's difficulties so bringing the story to an end, every one will be likely to forget this at once, because the changes along the path of the narrative are so skillfully introduced and so unexpectedly natural that the memory of the telegraph is convinced away. It bothers the mind very little.

Scene from "The Race for Millions" (Gaumont).

A rich man, dying, makes a peculiar will in which he leaves his great fortune to his niece, whose whereabouts he doesn't know, provided his lawyer can find her within three months; otherwise it will go to his faithful housekeeper. The housekeeper has the niece kidnapped and carried away to a mysterious island. The girl never knows until near the end why she is being secluded in this way; but she has a sweetheart who does know and who is moving heaven and earth to set her free. She naturally is trying to escape. These two working toward each other, with the housekeeper and her accomplice trying to keep them apart make the drama, and it certainly is a tense one. The best players in the Gaumont Company's studio have been cast in it and the acting is both natural and intelligent at all times, but now and then it is farcical. It was produced in autumn, just when the leaves were beginning to fall and its backgrounds out of doors, for the most part, are unusually well photographed and interesting. We see many glimpses of beautiful city streets, views of the sea with a mysterious castle on an island and several close views, nooks and corners, a police station, a court yard, etc. It will rank highly among other features made by this company, such as the "Vengeance of Egypt," "The White Gloved Band" and "In the Grip of the Vampire," commendable and popular releases.

JOHN D. TIPPETT MAKES WESTERN TRIP.

John D. Tippett, general manager of Union Features, has returned to New York City after a visit to Western cities, which included Louisville, Indianapolis, Des Moines, Chicago and Denver. Mr. Tippett took a general survey of the film situation in the territory visited, and among other matters attended to establishing some new offices for Union Features.

The Great Aerial Disaster (Itala Feature)

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE Itala Company has reached the extreme of thrillers in contriving to have an explosion take place on an aeroplane while it is high above the earth and supposed to be carrying the hero of an interesting story, then in picturing a "plane" flight to the ground of the burning machine, with a close view in small scope of the flaming air cruiser as it comes down upon a scattering group of workmen in a field. The last part of the descent, when the great artificial bird swoops down head first within a few yards of the camera man gives one the sensation of peering over the edge of Pisa's leaning tower. I did that once and become dizzy whenever I think of it. A nervy camera man took the pictures of the aeroplane's final dash to earth.

This episode of permeating emotion marks the turning point in a pretty story exquisitely told and of strong sympathetic interest, a glimpse of the adventures of an ambitious young girl who attempts the impossible, who tries to shape a career for herself on the stage and escape the ignominy of its associations. Among her other misfortunes she is named "Nelly," though that is not quite as bad as "Maud" or "Maizie," but it is almost enough to alienate the kindly feeling aroused by her sweet character and equivocal situation. Nelly has risen in her chosen profession, but has fallen socially to the edge of demoralization.

Actual Scene of the Explosion in "The Great Aerial Disaster."

The plays opens with a foreground of several gentlemen in a box at the Alhambra, among them an expert aviator whose short name is John. Through the box curtains we are given a view of Nelly in a novel fire dance. When the performance is over the gentlemen assemble at a Bohemian cafe for supper and are engaged in solacing the inner man when their attention is drawn to the insolence of one of those mackerels known in New York as "Cadets" exhibited in attempting to extort money from the fire dancer. She is in a state of humiliation and distress when the aviator interferes and kicks the cadet into the street. He accompanies her to her home, declines an invitation to enter and conducts himself like one of those rare gentlemen of unbelievable honor who nevertheless exist in all civilized communities.

Two classes of people jeer at the idea of any delicate sense of honor under the circumstances—men who never had an atom of it in their composition and women who never met any but those who lack it. This sneering incredulity has prevented the truth from being known in thousands of cases under thousands of compromising conditions where men of superior birth and breeding have shown the highest consideration to members of the gentler sex from sheer pity for their weakness and reverence for womankind. The young actress in this case is no exception to the rule among women of her class—she falls head over heels in love with the first manly man whose characteristics are proclaimed by chivalrous and disinterested conduct, and she falls victim to the sharpest agony known—that of love intensified to the highest degree because unrequited.

Nelly attempts suicide and this brings John to her aid a second time. Moved by her plight he takes her into his own home and treats her with mingled kindness and respect, while she is supremely happy to be near him in spite of her equivocal situation. The relation is a dangerous one and becames seriously complicated when the aviator attends a meet as a competitor and is swiftly drawn into an engagement with a charming and ambitious heiress.

The settings are all good up to this time and become positively beautiful when the interior of the wealthy young lady's home is revealed. Most delightful of all is a magnificent ensemble where a cotillion is given in a ballroom with conservatory and drawing rooms in the deep scene. The furnishings, the costumes, the picturesque favors, all contribute in an appeal to that sense of the beautiful which is so universal in humankind as to make artistic effort well worth the while. The flashing brilliancy of such pictures helps tremendously in the total value and constitutes a charm of itself that never fails to win.

On with the story! John becomes engaged to the ambitious heiress, and she announces her prospective marriage to her guests. She is enthusiastic over the achievements of the aviator and anticipates some reflected glory when he wins at the great Aviation Meet. The news spreads and comes to the ears of poor Nelly. Her tiny house of cards comes down with a crash. She writes a note to the man she has learned to love with purest devotion and states that she is going away because her presence in his house under the circumstances is impossible, tacitly admitting that she can not bear to see him in the new relation.

She wanders away, sinks down in exhaustion by the roadside, is found by a passing countryman, and is conveyed to a place of shelter for the sick maintained by Sisters of Mercy. She obtains work there as a nurse and remains as part of the establishment. John is occupied with duties in hand, and we see him at the meet with his bride-elect and her father before starting on his perilous attempt to break all records. She urges him on and accompanies him to where he enters his machine.

Now come the thrills, and there are a number of them. John breaks the record in a high flight and is descending when an explosion that is plainly visible takes place. The winged engine comes sailing swiftly to earth, a terrifying spectacle, until we are given a scorchingly close view as it reaches earth and is consumed by flames. The aviator's body is extricated in time to save his life, but he is terribly burned and possibly disfigured for the remainder of his days.

He is carried to the retreat where Nelly is acting as nurse and falls directly under her care. Her heart goes out to the wounded man in his suffering, and a powerful contrast is brought about when her simple-hearted devotion is compared to the conduct of the bride-elect. The latter is repelled by the sight of the burned and distorted man she finds in the place of the hero she idealized, and she turns away from the sufferer. He recovers in time and makes the true-hearted girl his wife, though he is a little bit too ardent about it at the end. The acting of the two leads is admirable throughout, being characterized as a rule by delicacy and high intelligence.

The few Itala features I have seen are strong where the average production is weak—they avoid error. Moving pictures are simply a new means of thought transference still in process of evolution. Business men have taken up this scientific discovery and utilized it freely for great profit without always understanding its true significance. As a result of misunderstanding it is steeped in error, but it looks as though the Itala people were heading straight for complete emancipation from present false conditions. They are doing fine work.

A GOOD PICTURE.

"The Spectre Bridegroom," by Eclair, is a most acceptable picture for any audience, if any preference is desired; it is very entertaining to girls who enjoy the permissible superstitions of Hallowe'en. Based upon Washington Irving's story, changed somewhat to meet local conditions, without detriment to the original. A conspicuous feature is the even and pleasing tone which is held throughout, the cast is admirably balanced, the scenes pleasant, and a lively interest maintained; when the end comes one feels a quiet satisfaction akin to that experienced after reading a pleasant book. Review of this picture will be found in Jan. 25 issue of the World, making such detail unnecessary here; not to refer to it, however, as a picture possessing educational merit would be an unpardonable omission; may more of them will be forthcoming.

American's Santa Barbara Plant

Architect Has Attractive and Comprehensive Design for Large Establishment.

J. C. Pool, the architect, is now so well along on the plans for the American Film Company's studio at Mission and Chapala Streets that a study of them reveals what a truly artistic home the moving picture concern will have in Santa Barbara. There is no doubt but that it will be the most artistic moving picture studio in the world, as pictures published of other studios in various parts of the world do not compare with what Mr. Pool has outlined.

Beauty and utility were never better combined then in this plan. There will be a general mission effect. Along Mission Street there will be an eight-foot arched brick or concrete wall, and at the east corner the office building, which will be surmounted by a mission tower. The main entrance will be midway between the east and west corners. After entering the heavy iron gateway two roads will diverge, finally leading to either side of the glass and concrete studio in which interior pictures will be taken. This studio will vary in height from 18 to 26 feet, and be 40 by 60 feet in dimension. The structure will be of steel frame, with three of the sides portable, of sections that may easily be taken out, the purpose being to make easy the adjustment of light. The property and scenic room will be immediately back of the studio.

The administration building, with its mission tower, will be at the corner nearest State Street, while on the south corner, at Chapala Street, will be the lounging room and dressing rooms for the players. This latter building will run back a considerable distance, with sufficient number of dressing rooms so that the players will have every convenience to make up for plays. There will be running water in every room, and the most modern system of heating for this part of the country.

The development plant, about 30 by 40 feet, will be immediately back of the administration building. The projection room will be in the administration building, thus conveniently located as related to the development department. Every negative is run off before being sent to Chicago.

There will be a garage for five machines, back of the dressing room, and immediately behind it the stables. The carpenter shop, etc., will be located in that part of the ground.

While the exterior has been made so pleasing to the eye, the interior grounds will be a perfect dream, and every foot of building and grounds of a style that will lend themselves to the taking of moving pictures. The corner between the administration room and the driveway will be a "set" garden. Immediately adjoining it will be a reservoir 18 by 36 feet. This will all be used in the taking of pictures. As far as it goes it will be as handsome as any Montecito estate. The reservoir will be given a pond effect, with grass growing to the very water's edge. It will be possible to take pictures in this garden, with the water, mission towers and real distant mountains.

To the left of the main entrance will be a grape ramada, and back of it a rose garden. The property wall, as well as interior wall of the dressing room, will add a rustic effect and be of sufficient height to obstruct views of wire poles that may rise in the street.

Between the dressing room and garage will be a tropical scene. The purpose is to only plant trees typical of this section in the "set" garden, but the others will be varied in character.

The Mission Street frontage of the property will have a wide parking.

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American, is in Santa Barbara, and he will give personal attention to minor details, after which work on the plant will be started. It is understood that Mr. Hutchinson is anxious to show Santa Barbara that he appreciates the setting and wishes to make the entire ground a credit to the company and community. In fact, this comparatively new industry in Santa Barbara will be along the line of the city beautiful.—Morning Press, Santa Barbara, Cal.

WALNUT INDUSTRY PICTURES ARE RELEASED.

"The Walnut Industry" industrial scenes taken two months ago in the Goleta district is part of a moving picture film that was released by the American company on the 18th. This is part of what is known as a split reel, the first being devoted to a play, "His Old-Fashioned Mother." The Goleta walnut industry was filmed during the recent visit of S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American. Mr. Hutchinson personally superintended the taking of the pictures. About fifteen scenes were taken, showing the walnuts from the time they drop from the trees, through the sorting and packing stage at the Goleta storehouse, until placed on a car, ready for shipment to the Eastern market. The pictures will show a number of the prominent residents of the Goleta district, including Philip Marble and Ed. Holister.

THREE PER FROM CALIFORNIA.

Directors Henderson and Heffron are making a combined output of three Thanhouser reels a week in that company's Western studio at Los Angeles. With the loss by fire of the Eastern studio, New Rochelle, recently, the efforts of the Los Angeles producers mean much to the weekly Thanhouser program, as they supply the required number of releases and give Director Marston time a-plenty to re-establish the New Rochelle studio. This is now building, and Mr. Marston is meanwhile working in New York City on features. The first of these will be released late in February. Harry Benham and Mignon Anderson have the leads. It is an adaptation of a very well-known piece of fiction.

Sunday Closing Bill Offered in California Legislature—Lubin Company Located—News Notes.

MOTION picture exhibitors of California are greatly alarmed over a bill which has just been introduced in the legislature at Sacramento and which, if it becomes a law, will close motion picture theaters on Sundays. The bill has only been introduced a few days and at this writing little is known about it. State Senator William E. Brown, of Los Angeles, is reported to be the author of it and the sponsor for it, a circumstance difficult to reconcile with the bill's alleged provisions. Los Angeles exhibitors have been notified from the San Francisco association that the bill is aimed solely at motion picture theaters and specifically exempts legitimate theaters and other forms of Sunday entertainment. To this extent it seems to give color to another report that the theatrical interests are back of it.

That Senator Brown is behind the bill, as the Los Angeles exhibitors have been informed, is inexplicable, because Brown is considered one of the sanest and most moderate members of the legislature from Southern California. He was elected as a Progressive on a "Square Deal" platform. Moreover, he is a successful business man who can see both sides of a proposition, not a fanatic whose mind is closed against reason. If he is standing sponsor for such a bill as this is reported to be it simply means that he has not been fully informed on both sides of the question, and when he is shown the exhibitors' side it is a safe prediction that he will change his position.

The Los Angeles exhibitors within the next two or three days will hold a meeting to decide what steps to take. There is talk of sending a delegation to the capitol to appear, with the San Francisco delegation, before the committee and oppose the bill. Undoubtedly a strong protest will be made.

In case the motion picture exhibitors are not able to keep the bill from becoming a law, which is most unlikely, they will still have another chance. A constitutional amendment adopted by the voters of the State last year provides for a state-wide referendum. Under this provision the exhibitors may circulate petitions throughout the State and upon obtaining a comparatively few signatures can suspend the operation of the law until it has been submitted to the voters of the entire State. If upon being so submitted it fails to receive a majority of the votes cast it cannot become a law. The securing of the necessary signatures would entail little trouble or expense, for copies of the petition could be placed in the box office of every motion picture theater in the State and the patrons of the theaters asked to sign the petitions if they believe in Sunday performances. In this way the petitions could be completed in a few days with little expense beyond the mere printing and postage.

Lubin Company Located.

The California Lubin company moved this week into a new studio of its own in East Los Angeles, the exact location being 4550 Pasadena Avenue. On its arrival here a little less than three weeks ago the company made its temporary headquarters in the studio formerly occupied by the Los Angeles Motion Picture Company in the same section of the city. Wilbert Melville, producer and manager of the company, began looking around the next day for a permanent location. The one he discovered and leased he considers ideal. He has a plot of ground 100 by 400 feet in dimensions, with a fine old Colonial mansion facing Pasadena Avenue which makes a comfortable and not unpretentious residence for Mr. Melville. At one side is a smaller detached building which serves as an office. Beyond that is a third building which is used as a billiard room and a club room in general by the members of the company. At one side of the rear of the lot is a large barn which accommodates the horses and ponies purchased by the company, and four automobiles. At the other side a stage 50 by 60 feet has been built of steel and reinforced concrete. It was constructed with a view to enclosing it in glass, which will be done a little later.

The property overlooks the Arroyo Seco, one of the greatest storehouses of beautiful outdoor moving picture backgrounds in Southern California. Mr. Melville will be able to work for weeks within gun shot of the studio without exhausting the possibilities of that region, and the Arroyo Seco extends for several miles from the studio. An "arroyo," it may be explained for the information of Eastern tenderfeet, is a stream which goes dry, or nearly dry, in summer, but may become a raging river in the rainy season. "Seco" means "dry" and, like most Western names, it is a misnomer in this case.

Another useful property which the Lubin company has almost at its door is a railroad and a railroad station, for the studio is only a few hundred feet from the Salt Lake line.

The California company is a new one organized in New York less than a month ago. There is another Lubin company working at the present time at Yuma on the line between California and Arizona, but it will remain in Arizona.

Besides Mr. Melville and the office employees this company comprises Henry King, leading man; Irene Hunt, leading woman; Herbert Von Schiller, juvenile; Joseph Holland, heavy and characters; Henry Nevius, James McDonald, B. C. Brackett, J. J. Blackwell, camera man; L. L. Coakley, scenic artist; Charles Huff, stage carpenter, and Leon Abrams, property man.

Since its arrival here, and while still unsettled, the company has turned out one double-reel picture and two single reels.

Carter on the Job.

Lincoln J. Carter, the melodrama king, has arrived in Los Angeles to undertake the production in motion pictures of fifteen of his most famous melodramas for the Universal Company. For the last three days he has been in conference with A. M. Kennedy, Pacific Coast manager of the company, and next week he will begin work at the head of a company which Kennedy is now organizing for him. He is under contract to make from 45 to 60 reels, for the productions are all to be in either three or four reels each. Carter's company will make thirteen separate organizations now working under the various Universal brands in Los Angeles.

Wilfred Lucas, former director of the Biograph Company, is another who has joined the big Universal family. He is to have charge of a Rex company as soon as he arrives.

Philips Smalley and Mrs. Smalley, original directors of the Rex Company, are again directing Rex pictures at the Cower Street studio. Otis Turner, who has been making such a tremendous hit with his big Bison productions, has been transferred to another Rex company, which will turn out big stuff hereafter. His place with the Bison company has been taken by Frank Ford, who has left the Broncho company. This will be like coming home for Ford because he was director of one of the Bison companies before the formation of the Universal and when the Bison brand belonged to the New York Motion Picture Company. W. S. Davis and Richard Garrick, former directors of the Smalley and Turner companies, are no longer with the Universal. Director Insley, who went to Honolulu at the head of a traveling Universal company, was called home and F. W. Randolph was sent out to relieve him.

News Notes.

The Photoplayers is now a sure enough club. Following the arrival of the organization's charter from the Secretary of State, the members held their first formal election of officers the night of January 18 and chose Fred Mace, of the Keystone Company, president. Mace had been serving as temporary president and was entitled to the honor which was given him unanimously. That the club exists to-day is due more to his efforts than to those of any other person.

The other officers elected were Arthur Mackley, of the Essanay, and Joseph De Grass, of the Pathe, first and second vice-presidents respectively; George Melford, of the Kalem, secretary; William E. Wing, corresponding secretary, and Charles Giblyn, treasurer.

The Golden Gate Film Exchange did a nice stroke of business lately when it added to its list of patrons the Main Street Grand, the largest motion picture theater in Southern California, and said to be the largest theater devoted exclusively to motion pictures in the world. It is now using six first-run pictures from the Mutual and Film Supply lists on each program.

The multiple reel features issued by the Mutual and Film Supply companies are now being handled in this city by a separate film exchange—the Pacific—of which Charles Klopot, known from coast to coast as a special feature man, is manager.

The new talking machine attachment for motion pictures threatens to start a real theatrical war in Los Angeles, for already the management of the Orpheum and Oliver Morosco, theatrical manager of Los Angeles and New York, are quarreling about the subject.

A day or two after the Associated Press carried the announcement that Thomas A. Edison had completed a machine which successfully adds sounds to the pictures, the Orpheum management announced that it had contracted with the inventor for the exclusive right to use the device in those cities where it operates theaters.

Mr. Morosco promptly came back in a sarcastic newspaper interview in which he intimated that the Edison invention is a mere makeshift, but that the only real talking machine attachment is one for which he controls the rights. He paid the inventor $50,000 for the right to use it, he says, and he proposes to have it in operation before the Edison machine comes on. The Orpheum press agent is preparing a crushing retort.

Fred Mace and Charlie Avery, two of the Keystone comedians, created a couple of characters while working in a picture this week which turned out so well that they may make several subsequent appearances if Mack Sennett can find someone to write comedies around them.

The characters are two burglars, one of whom—Mace—is a half-wit and very hard of hearing. Avery is short, redheaded, and, in the picture, looks tough and pugnacious. The story required them to break open a safe. Avery attempted to tell Mace that he was making too much noise pounding a cold chisel with a sledge hammer. Mace, deaf as a boiler maker, supposed that he was being told to strike harder, and this in turn excited Avery to greater efforts. The bit was a scream. Even Sennett laughed at the two burglars who are worse bunglers than the Two Sherlocks.

W. C. Balder, formerly camera man for the Gaumont Company, and one of the motion picture photographers who accompanied President Taft on his last trip to the Panama Canal, decided to make his home in Southern California. He blew into town several days ago and announced that he was looking for a job turning a crank. Fred Balshofer, knowing his reputation, went after him at once, but while he was chasing Balder around with an automobile the Vitagraph people got hold of him and took him to the Santa Monica studio, where he is now on the regular payroll.

Lanier Bartlett, photoplay editor at the Selig Company's Edendale studio, has gone away for a two weeks' vacation. He had one late last summer. Some people in this business are unable to get one a year. This shows the value of making one's self indispensable. P. M. POWELL.

PLEDGED TO JOLLITY.

Great Northern comedies, not only owing to the excellency of their photography, but to the fun-making ability of H. Striboldt, Chr. Schroeder and Carl Alstrup, three of the jolliest comedians in the acting forces of the company. Whenever they appear in a film the heartiest of laughter is assured and in addition there is Herr Bach, whose rotund figure and smiling face has caused many a smile when viewed on the screen. These distinguished actors have been engaged by the Great Northern Film Company from the acting forces of the principal theaters of Europe and each has had years of experience on the so-called legitimate stage before entering the field of moving pictures. The routing of dull care is their principal object in life.

FILM SUPPLY'S STRONG FEATURE PROGRAM.

It doesn't take a modern Solomon to discern from advertisements and announcements which have come from the offices of the Film Supply Company during the past week that there is something of more than usual interest in the wind. Everything seems to point to the ultimate offering of a feature program. The Film Supply Company is now distributing the regular releases of Gaumont, Solax, Itala and Great Northern. Each of these concerns is particularly strong on features, and from the tone of the Film Supply Company's advertising it is evident that these features are to be handled through that company in the future. It is unquestionably a most valuable and substantial asset. In addition to the aforementioned brands it is rumored, but on good authority, that several of the more prominent makers of features are soon to ally with the Film Supply Company to further strengthen its output of features.

Of these new concerns, perhaps what will be the most notable is the All Star brand. These films start with a masterful feature in three reels—the divine and incomparable Sarah Bernhardt in "An Actress' Romance," which is Mme. Bernhardt's own adaptation of her own most favored and popular play, "Adrienne Lecouvreur." This is the production which has for long been held in reserve by Mme. Bernhardt for her final and supreme effort before the camera. She is supported by her entire original company from the Theatre Sarah Bernhardt, Paris.

The second of the All Star offerings is none other than the eminent French character actor and tragedian, M. Mounet-Sully, in the classic masterpiece, "Oedipus Rex." This production has already been released in Europe and has created a greater furore than any other film known. It is the plan of the All Star brand to release a feature at regular intervals from this time on, each one being a world-wide known production with an equally well known theatrical star in the leading role.

Another departure to be gleaned from the Film Supply Company's advertising is the fact that hereafter the first Friday and Saturday of each month are to be set aside as a time at which prospective buyers may see these various features on the screen. This will be in their spacious and well equipped theater on the premises. This is probably the first time that there has been offered an opportunity for an out-of-town buyer to sit and see the product of various manufacturers under one roof. At the present time, in addition to the regular releases which form their program, the Film Supply is offering more than ten brand new features, and these are being changed at regular intervals. It certainly points toward a feature program.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

THE supervisors of the distribution of motion picture films in this city and elsewhere have been in communication with the municipal authorities of Detroit, Mich., relative to the reasons for the recent condemnation of several films by the censoring authorities of that city. The request for reasons was not made because it was thought the condemnations were unreasonable or unjust. It was prompted by a desire on the part of the distributors, as well as the manufacturers, to secure an insight of censorship of motion pictures as exercised in Detroit. The request was complied with by Mr. Royal A. Baker, censor of amusements, Department of Police, and attached to the reasons was an exhaustive formula prepared by Mr. Baker as an assistance to the future welfare of the business. Regardless of criticism that may be aroused on the part of some producers as to the range of restriction outlined by the Detroit official, he is entitled to much credit for the completeness that marks his handling of the subject.

The censor contends that pictures must contain a moral ending, and "to make a story moral persons committing crime must be detected, prosecuted or serve a penance by loss, devastation or accidental destruction." It should be shown "that all wrong committed is paid for by reversed conditions or law." Law should always supersede crime and miscarriage of justice. Among the "don'ts" Mr. Baker dwells upon advice against the showing of agents to the law committing or assisting depredation, or agents of religion committing depredation or violating rules of their creed. The showing of suicide or auto-suggestion of it, strikers rioting, destroying property or committing violence are all advised against, as well as scenes showing arson, bombs or infernal machines or their use and kidnapping, seduction and Black Hand operations. Avoid tricks educational to crime, Mr. Baker continues, such as taking impressions of keys on wax, putty, etc., filing and stealing keys, the cutting of telephone and telegraph wires, turning railroad switches, putting logs on tracks, throwing wrenches into machinery, tampering with devices which people's lives depend upon. The official would also have the manufacturers of films avoid scenes of criminals using automobiles to assist in depredation and escape, and the use of empty freight cars for means of escape. And here is another batch of stunts to which the censor hands out objection: Picking locks, blowing safes, using a "jimmy" or a "pinch" bar, cutting out screening in doors and windows or breaking and entering, climbing porches, using ladders and masking criminals. He also taboos scenes of badger games, white slavery, street soliciting and vulgar flirtation. Blackmail and swindling scenes he does not object to unless they are so portrayed as to make practice of them impossible. Avoid showing gain, or the possibility of gain through crime, says Mr. Baker.

In winding up twenty-five paragraphs of "don'ts" the Western censor admonishes the steering of scenes showing escapes of convicts from prison, or assistance in that direction, the tricking of agents of the law or anything which will lower the respect of people toward the agents of law and order, claiming it is detrimental to furthering justice. The official's comments on murder scenes are about as exhaustive as human mind can conceive. He suggests that unless there is great cause for murder, or some plausible motive, it should be avoided. Nine sub-divisions of the subject are then taken up, starting with the declaration that there should be but one murder to a story, and premeditating crime so suspicion falls upon innocent people should be avoided.

The censor next takes up the subject of dressing scenes and figures and declares that nothing is added to a scene by having characters lacking wardrobe. He shudders at the thought of full length tights and casts his vote against extremely low cut gowns, as well as scenes of exaggerated low dance halls. The latter is qualified, however, as the official says if such are really essential to the working out of a theme they should be few and short, passing on and off the screen quickly. In this connection weapons are spoken of, the official stating that firearms must be used with sense and reason, and not spontaneously. Brutality to animals is condemned, as well as to women and children, unless there be a strong moral in connection. Dancing next receives attention. "No kootch," says Mr. Baker. Underworld dances are not objectionable if leading up to a moral and are fast and short. Hold-ups of trains and citizens, or attempts, he bars, and adds that all other hold-ups must be done by auto-suggestion, close details and long scenes being avoided.

Well, Mr. Baker covers the ground pretty thoroughly, does he not? But he adds still another paragraph. It is given in full because it shows an attempt by the censor to enumerate the kind of pictures that meet with his approval. He says: "Attempts at murder and other crimes is just as bad as the actual crime in regard to law and order. A story must balance so a moral will be effective. Many producers have an idea if a story comes out all right, meaning the police arrest the thief, they can sandwich as much as they desire into the story. They are mistaken, for a story must balance and contain just as much goodness as badness. I advise studying character cutting and the use of character stories, social dramas, moral dramas, educational dramas, travelogues, comedies and so forth."

That is a great glide many writers and speakers make when they find themselves drifting into deep water—that "and so forth." It sounds like a compliment to the reader and listener as an excuse for a hasty exit. "Your high grade of intelligence will enable you to guess the rest," as it were. Here is an appeal for help. Can any of the instructors on "How to Prepare Scenarios" tell us what kind of a picture will satisfy Mr. Baker, other than biblical and travel subjects? After analyzing his long string of "don'ts," "avoids" and "eliminates" there comes to mind the old story of the resourceful boy who, when his companion pleaded that he be left the core of the apple, told the waiting youngster, "There ain't goin' to be no core." That is about the stand Mr. Baker has taken. He fails to leave the scenario writer, the producer and the stage director even the core of a thing that would bear a resemblance to a drama. As already stated, he deserves credit for the paper. It is a wonder for exhaustive methods of prohibition. It can be equaled in but one way, and that is by admonishing the producers to return all scenarios to the writers, without reading or attempting to glean enough from them to make even a bluff on the screen. It will be observed that Mr. Baker holds the position of "censor of amusements." The title implies that he has supervision of all places of amusement, and his essay warrants the presumption that if he is doing his full duty there is not a theater open in Detroit—which, of course, is not a fact; and this, in turn, justifies the conclusion that the Detroit authorities are discriminating against the motion picture industry, which is unjust, illegal and unconstitutional. A calm view of the matter shows Mr. Baker very much in the light of a reckless rider like some of the reformers in Brooklyn, N. Y. At a recent Y. M. C. A. meeting there a resolution was adopted asking the Board of Aldermen to pass the motion picture ordinance over Mayor Gaynor's veto. Two aldermen were in attendance and stated they would vote as the resolution requested, but gave notice that "with the censor amendment the ordinance is not workable." "Pass it anyway," came from the audience. And yet there is a continual howl all over the country against representatives of the people wasting their own time and the money of the taxpayers by passing in the halls of the legislatures and senates bills they know are unconstitutional, or otherwise so defective as to make them inoperative. It is not surprising that when the time arrived last week for the aldermen to comply with the resolution an attempt to override the veto was defeated decisively. They deserve to be complimented for refusing to be driven to an act of palpable idiocy. There are enough obsolete and inoperative laws without enacting more with eyes wide open.

NEW THEATER IN TERRE HAUTE.

The Hippodrome, which James A. Clarke is building at Terre Haute, Ind., and which will be completed in April, will have a seating capacity of one thousand, all downstairs. Mr. Clark has secured the exclusive right to present Kinemacolor in Terre Haute, the contract having been made through the Cincinnati office.

The Traveling Exhibitor.

NOW that the special feature and state rights releases are gaining ground, this letter from a showman will interest many. We give both Mr. Balcom's letter to us and the one he sends to the managers. He appears to have taken up the exploitation of the subject in a more thorough manner than the usual state rights holder and many of his suggestions can be adapted to other features. His letter head is done in brown with the title embossed. This is imposed on a cut giving a view of the desert in a yellowish brown, a camel and its rider being the only relief to the expanse of sand. Mr. Balcom says:

I have been a reader of the M. P. WORLD for the past year and it has been of great value to me in all departments, but as yet I have never contributed anything to its columns.

For the past four years I have been in the illustrated lecture work and last summer purchased the Colorado rights for "A Trip to the Garden of Allah" with which I have been very successful. I make the lecture which I give with the pictures a special feature and find that educators will give me their support almost everywhere because of this fact.

Believing that anything worth doing at all is worth doing well, I had letter heads like the above printed, and sent form letters like the samples I enclose, to every independent theater manager in the State, and to superintendents of schools in the cities where these managers were located.

I made a very thorough study of the country shown in the pictures, and give a lecture which, even without the pictures would be entertaining. I am also sending you a photo of myself in the Arabian costume which I wear while giving the lecture, which in itself is a splendid advertising feature.

During the time between reels in theaters where only one machine is used, I have a spot light thrown on me and I fully explain the costume and even unwind and wind the turban which contains some 20 yards of material, this always makes a hit and gives a pleasant rest between the pictures.

I am a believer in the fact that within a short time "Lecturing the Pictures" will be immensely popular, provided it is done right from the start, and only the best be allowed.

If you care to use the photo and this letter in any of the departments of the WORLD, it will be satisfactory to me.

Thanking you for all the good things you have given me the past year and with heartiest wishes for a successful and happy New Year to you all, I am,

The Letter.

Manager Motion Picture Theater,

Dear Sir:—The fact that the "GARDEN OF ALLAH" pictures are FAR SUPERIOR to any feature yet produced, is proven by its phenomenal success in Colorado Springs (shown to over 5,000 people in two days), at The Grand Theater, Pueblo, and its booking at the Princess Theater, Denver at a straight rental of $50.00 per day.

Mr. Carl Balcomb (lecturing the pictures in native Arabian Costume), is a lecturer of many years experience, his lecture on "COLORADO" having won great praises for him throughout the eastern and southern states.

One reason for the great success of both these lectures is the large amount of advance advertising which is furnished. An advance reel of pictures for advertising is a form of publicity never before used and is a winner. Then we furnish Slides, Heralds, like enclosed, 1, 3, and 8 sheets, banners, lobby frames, newspaper cuts and readers. In addition to this, a letter HAS BEEN SENT to the SUPERINTENDENT of SCHOOLS of your City which will insure you his support and co-operation. Run a Special matinee for school children. You can easily get 25 cents for admission, and I would advise selling reserved seats in advance.

We are now ready to book your house with both the "GARDEN OF ALLAH" and "COLORADO" feature moving pictures and lectures, playing either percentage or rental. We plan to be in your city about the week of ——— and will be pleased to hear from you at once if such a date would suit you.

Booming Things.

Too many of the purchasers of states rights belong to that class of investors who seem to think that anything to do with the pictures will automatically produce money. They buy the rights, do a little advertising and then sit down and wait for the money to pour in. It won't pour. There was a time when perhaps three or four hundred feet of fifty foot subjects could be taken into a town and made to yield a handsome profit, but now you cannot make money with four thousand or forty unless you know how to handle the business.

If you want to make a special feature and work the dramatic houses or other places not regularly devoted to pictures, you must have the aid of an experienced advance man to lay out your route and make the best terms. He can tell you when to hire and when to play on shares. He will know the good and bad towns and something of the good and bad seasons. Get a compact route with as little travel as possible, in other words, plan short "jumps."

Do not trust to the local management to boom the show, most particularly if you rent. But even if you share and the house's split depends on the business, remember that you'll find lots of places where the manager will argue that he can get his expenses out of a minimum business. Get your own men into the field. Have at least two out ahead. Seven and fourteen days. Travel with your own operator and get the best man you can obtain. He'll have to meet all sorts of emergencies, so the best will be none too good. You may be assured that you can get a local operator, but do not accept the statement on fact. Take your own man and be certain that you'll be able to give a performance. You may save $25 a week and lose a show or two because the man you have cannot wrestle with emergencies. That won't pay.

Paper Is Essential.

Give the house plenty of advertising matter and instruct your men to see that it is used. Do not take up the old paper and ship ahead. It will look ragged and dirty. Get new stuff. Have your lobby display mounted on cloth that can be rolled and carried safely. Use photographs in boxes rather than lithographs for inside work and get these into the lobbies, where possible, a week before you come. Have enough to permit you to have two lobby displays in view while a third is traveling and make certain that the stuff is shipped. Do not take the local manager's word that he will look after it in the morning.

Carry a business man, one who knows all the petty swindling tricks that some managers love to play on the inexperienced visitor. If you have reserved seats do not count the boxes. Count the dead wood, the unsold tickets and collect for what does not appear in the rack. If you use "hard tickets" or general admission, only, carry your own tickets and count everyone that is given the manager. Then watch to see that some are not held up at the door and slipped back to the box office. There used to be a vaudeville theater where a chute led from the gallery door to the box office and every fourth ticket went back down the chute. Don't pretend to know it all and do not tell the manager you are watching him. Just watch.

Playing the Picture Theaters.

If you play the picture theaters it is a question whether you want to rent or share. If you rent you get your money. If you share you take chances on the weather, counter attractions and factors that work against the house. If you rent merely send a reliable man with the films. If you share have a man out to give the local manager press matter and attend to the posting of the paper. If you have the right sort of man he'll much more than earn his salary in the increased business he'll make. Give the local man all the assistance you can whether you rent or share. Come into the house and get out again in such a fashion that you can play a return if it is expedient or come back with something new if you cannot play back with the first offering.

Now is your chance to establish yourself as a state rights man in some good territory. You can't do it if you scrap with the local man about everything from paper to projection. Make yourself liked. Show the resident manager that you are inteested in something beside the money you will make and a couple of years from now you'll be glad you followed the advice.

An Isis Paper.

The Isis Theater, Trinidad, Colorado, sends in a well printed four page booming that house, which is run by L. T. Osborn. There seems to have been a style adopted which is adhered to in all departments which results in a clean and intelligent looking paper. It is more general than specific in tone, a chatty little sheet that slips in a word now and then about coming films, but which talks mostly on general film topics. It is not always closely edited and there is a headline that refers to "new innovations" though innovations are of necessity new. There appears in the first issue much chat of the house and its equipment, but if the house is certain of its run we think that a weekly program should be added. Here is a case where the general feature of the matter is carried to excess.

Get them interested in the films in general, but tell them a little something about the films you are going to have, even if you cannot exactly date the coming notables. There is always something that can be counted on if you have any sort of an agreement with the exchange. If you haven't that sort of agreement, add a little money and come to an understanding. The Isis News is so good in most points that we should like to see it a trifle better. We'll appreciate being put on the mailing list, for we want to see it grow.

Slides Again.

Charles E. Howard, of Guyandotte, West Virginia, writes that the other day when a locomotive engine and some cars smashed through the false work of a new bridge, he hustled out and made a set of lantern slides of the scenes of the accident and that same night had them in a theater four miles from the smash. He adds that he has had them out in nearby towns ever since and expects to get a couple more weeks rental.

It is a subject that we have frequently spoken of, but it will stand a repeat. If you know something about camera work, get after the slide end. It is fascinating work and you can get an outfit very cheaply. Not only can you run the slides of local events in your own house, but you can rent them to houses in nearby towns and if the place is not covered by a local press man you can also query the daily papers of the nearest large city, using the telegraph and stating just what you have. If you cannot bother with the work yourself, get the local photographer interested. Perhaps he'll take the matter up and let you have the slides cheaply. As Mr. Howard puts it, persons who keep away from the photoplay theater because of a fancied ill repute might come to see the local stuff and find out what they have been missing.

No film company in existence can send you a subject that will have half the draught of some local happening shown in a series of slides, and those who have seen the actual wreck or fire, or whatever it may be, will be the most eager to see the slides. Play up the local end whenever and however you may. Mr. Howard made slides pay, so can you.

From Pathe.

Pathe Freres sent out a celluloid slip giving the calendar for 1913 and the licensed release days with a space for additions and a roughened surface on the back for erasable memoranda. It is a fine piece of advertising because it is the sort of thing that a manage will appreciate and keep. We'll gamble that nine-tenths of the distribution is to be found on the managerial desks this very moment. We know that ours is already hung up. That's the sort of advertising that makes good advertising; the sort that is kept and not merely read and thrown away. This slip will do for the desk or the pocket and is bound to come in handy. It costs more than a printed card calendar, but it is cheaper in the end because it will last much longer than a heavy card.

The Keynote.

J. Willis Sayre, of the Seattle Times, also does the advertising for the Alhambra of that city. We think that he strikes the keynote of the situation in this recent contribution:

> DO YOU REALIZE THAT
> at a first-class motion picture theater for 10 cents you get more scenery, more and better actors and an infinitely greater variety of novel and really interesting entertainment, than you have been accustomed to paying $2 for?
> IT IS A FACT. THINK IT OVER.
> People no longer go to photoplay houses like THE ALHAMBRA because it is cheap, but because they get more enjoyment out of it than in going anywhere else. There are automobiles lined up in front of > every night in the week. It is the show, and not the price, that has made the photoplay theater the dominant form of theatrical amusement in America today.
> THE ALHAMBRA

Hammer It Home.

Hammer that fact home. Keep at it day after day.

It's the show and not the price that almost overnight made the photoplay the most popular form of amusement in the country; that gave the motion picture the world wide prestige it enjoys. In the ten to thirty cent vaudeville theater you get a couple of good acts and a lot of very poor material. In the theaters you get a star and a cheap supporting company, but because two or three hundred theaters divide the cost of a photoplay production you get the work of good actors throughout, well balanced stock companies such as the local stock or even the higher priced theaters could not afford to maintain. The other day one company dismissed forty extra players and still had about two hundred left on the pay roll. Think of a theater run that way.

It has been at once the success and the curse of the photoplay that it costs only five or ten cents. Make it patent to your patrons—and the persons you desire for patrons, that it is only the price that is cheap. Then run your house that way and pay for a service that will live up to the promise. In nine-tenths of the towns of the country the only good acting that the inhabitants see is shown on the screen. The better class of dramatic companies cannot show there at a profit, but the best actors want to get with the pictures and many of them do. James K. Hackett will soon appear in The Prisoner of Zenda in towns where he could not take in enough at the town hall to pay the transportation of his company alone. And yet these towns can now show him to the best advantage, for each night he will appear in from fifty to one hundred theaters, and a single appearance will be stretched over months.

Hang the slogan over the door. "Nothing cheap but the price of admission." Get it on all your advertising and tell them why.

Looks New.

Lou J. Wittman, of the Star Theater, Hamilton, Ohio, has struck a new line. The latest program carries this advertisement:

> FREE SHOW EVERY SATURDAY AFTERNOON
> FROM 1:00 TO 2:00 OUR FIRST SHOW
> We will admit any boy or girl under the age of 12, in the Star Theater absolutely Free—you can't pay to get in until 2:00 o'clock but the performance will start promptly at 1:15—at 2:00 o'clock another set of pictures will be placed on exhibition for the balance of the day.

That sounds like foolish generosity, but note that at two o'clock you have a brand new set of pictures. If you want to stay for those—of course you pay. It gives the kiddies a real treat and it gets them in for the pay show at the same time. With commercials renting at a dollar a day, it looks like a cheap way to draw a crowd. It might be worked with profit where it is desired to introduce the matinee idea to those not used to it.

Advertising Mary.

We like this advertisement of the Nickel Theater, Haverhill, Mass. It reads:

> IN REGARD TO
> "WHAT HAPPENED TO MARY"
> SHOWN WEDNESDAY AND THURSDAY
> at the
> NICKEL
> ¶ Hundreds of my patrons have expressed their pleasure in the fact that this interesting story is being produced in motion pictures, and I have already a long list of patrons whom I notify by mail as the new chapters come along. If you would like to be one of these, just give your name and address at the ticket office and I will keep you informed.
> ¶ "WHAT HAPPENED TO MARY" is certainly an interesting story and the million or more readers of the Ladies' World are watching for the moving pictures each month. The December chapter is the one I am showing tomorrow and Thursday—"A LETTER TO THE PRINCESS," a wee bit more exciting than the past chapters, but, as usual, Mary is successful again.
> ¶ You really can't afford to miss this remarkable series of pictures. Even if you haven't seen the first four subjects, you can start right in on this one and find it the most interesting story. Each chapter is a story in itself.
> ¶ Later on I am going to have a MARY WEEK, and will show all of the back chapters so that those who have missed them may have another chance. Better put your name and address into the ticket office and I will notify you when MARY WEEK comes, too.
> AND LEST YOU FORGET.
> ¶ TONIGHT I am showing that remarkable Biograph drama, "BRUTALITY," that so impressed the patrons last evening. Really everybody should see a picture of this kind. It is worth a quarter alone, but there are others that are extra good.

All Alike.

The house advertising seems to be along the same lines, a twelve point border or boxes and the same simple, convincing announcement. It suggests a house of solid comfort properly conducted, the sort of house that makes appeal to the family trade, where the kiddies are looked after and their elders made welcome. There is nothing flamboyant, nothing spread eagle about the announcements, but they interest and impress. The building up of a mailing list for Mary is a good idea. Plenty of space is used to get the display over. Here are a couple more extracts from other advertisements:

> "HAREM CAPTIVES"
> IN TWO REELS
> A thrilling sensational story of the Great Sahara Desert, with an exciting chase on camels across the sands, a hot fight, many narrow escapes from tragic deaths, carrying you from the quaint houses and ruins of the poorer Arabs to the magnificent mosques, with all their Oriental splendor and deep mystery.
> YOU CAN'T AFFORD TO MISS IT
> "THE STOLEN SYMPHONY"
> IN TWO REELS
> ¶ This is the Lubin Co's big feature; a strong dramatic story in which the entire cast of Lubin Players, numbering over 200 people, support Arthur Johnson in the role of the mad genius.

It is not always that this simple style succeeds, but where it can be worked it is better than sensational stuff. It lasts longer.

Miss Pickford's Picture.

A. L. Stallings, of the Angelus Theater, Spanish Fork, Utah, sends a folder of Miss Mary Pickford that he gave to his patrons around Christmas. It is a halftone cut of the former Biograph favorite, done on heavy paper (though none too well printed), covered with heavy white card, tied with blue ribbon. It is a present that, as Mr. Stallings says, will last for some time. Miss Pickford is a general favorite.

It doesn't really belong in this department, but if Mr. Stallings will pass a manicure file over the "o" on his typewriter it will not punch a hole out of the paper nearly every time that letter is struck. Very little pressure should be used, just enough to take the cutting edge off, and it will save him a repair bill.

Mr. Stallings is in a small town with a paper once a week, so he takes plenty of space and gives the four programs, using one program on Friday, another on Saturday and changing Monday and Wednesday in the early half of the week. He does not exaggerate about his stuff, but states interestingly, if briefly, what is coming.

The Arcade.

The Arcade sends a batch of posters announcing some extraordinary features for the residents of Tientsin and explains that, owing to the house being let to a traveling troupe, they are using the best of the features that would have ordinarily been shown while the stage is occupied by flesh and blood actors. One of the attractions was the "Paris Motor Bandits," and for this they not only got out a special gilt-edged card, but the envelope containing the same is specially printed with the name of the attraction and the date of showing. This is a bit of enterprise that might be copied over here. It appears on the face of the envelope in 8 and 12-point type.

It would seem that there had been some trouble about a subject, for on one bill appears this frank statement: "Owing to the disappointment expressed by our patrons at the film we showed last time, we cabled to the Moving Picture Sales Agency, Ltd., of London, and the film we are showing this evening was sent to us by them via Siberia.

"Via Siberia" means the heavy cost of railroad transportation against the usual steamer freight, but it shows the determination of the Arcade to keep faith with its patrons, even if it is the only regular picture theater in that section of China.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Comedy.

SOMEONE got our goat the other day, or did very nearly. He wrote, "I am sending you a little comedy I have written. When I have had more experience I will try drama."

When he has had more experience indeed! When he gets so he can write comedy he won't touch drama unless a personal friend asks him to. We've built up a pretty decent little writing business of our own and it is founded on our ability to write something that will look funny. It doesn't always sound funny and we don't write it to sound funny, but the humor of idea is there and the humor of action is still more there and the combination brings us checks that in proportion to the time we spend writing a play makes us the best paid writer of photoplays in the country. Others make more money writing plays, but they put in more time.

When we started in we were fortunate in having the best comedy director in the country to supply with scripts. Others make a better story now and then, but he makes all good stories. He knew what he wanted and told us and so we specialized in comedy and made a mark.

Here, in substance is what we learned. Between a laugh in a look and a laugh in a thought, get the look. Lots of people who cannot think go to the pictures, but we know of but one blind man who is a photoplay fan.

Comedy does not rank in importance with drama in the popular mind, but it is the last word in writing. Graduate into comedy from drama. Do not use it as a stepping stone to drama or you'll go floundering into the stream.

For the Reader.

A "reader of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD" begs some of our time and information, which is very cheerfully furnished, though the reader in question is either quite new or has deficient eyesight.

The reader got a script back from the Universal the other day. There were seventeen possible reasons for rejection and the one he had checked was that there was no 250 word synopsis accompanying the story. Now he wants to know if this is necessary.

Dear, though near-sighted "reader" it is indeed. Time and again have we called attention to the need of a short synopsis. Time and time and time again have we told why it should be brief, but we are patient (sometimes), and so here goes again.

The rejection slip means just exactly and precisely what it says. You did not submit a 250 word synopsis and therefore your script was not read, because the reader has not the time to read over seven or eight single spaced pages to find out what in tunk you are trying to write about.

Your start off, dear Reader, with a twenty word leader in front of the first scene and then fourteen lines of business leading to an insert. Bet you did more than the seven or eight pages. And that poor reader has some few hundred or thousand scripts to read, the pile-up since Hal Reid wented and the Universal got sore on the whole blamed script thing.

No one has the patience to read through that mess of stuff. You say, "he presses button on desk and an office boy appears." That's ten words. He doesn't have to press a button. Say "calls boy." That's only two words and it means the same thing. Then the caller can yell, he can press a button or shoot off a pistol as may be most convenient. You pile on the agony in this fashion and a poor Universal editor (and there is an editor now), who is trying to catch up on three months arrears, slaps the story back at you with a request for a 250 word synopsis that he can read instead of a five to seven thousand word story he hasn't the time to read.

What any editor wants to know first is if its the story that he wants. If it is not the sort of story he is looking for there is no use reading the whole script. The 250 word synopsis is an arbitrary limitation established by the Edison company because any man who knows how to write a photoplay knows how to get the main facts of the story into 250 words. If he doesn't he should stop writing photoplay for a time and study condensation.

You do not have to tell all of the points in your story. You do not have to give all of the action. You merely tell, well within 250 words, what your story is about. If it is the sort of story your editor wants he will read the script to see if it is the sort of script he wants, but he wants to know quickly what the story is about.

That's why he wants the 250 word synopsis. If you have been a regular reader you would be tired by now of reading of the synopsis and why it should be short. We think you are a Recent Reader, so we are going into details again not alone for your benefit, but for the benefit of other. Get this!

A photoplay consists of a synopsis, a cast of characters and a plot of action. The synopsis is not the complete tale but merely the high points of the story. Personally we run from 50 to 200 words. That's plenty. You do not have to take the action up scene by scene. Let's take The Three Musketeers, which is "some" bulky book. Here is a brief synopsis.

> D'Artagnan, an adventurer from rural France, arrives in Paris to make a name for himself. He encounters Athos, Porthos and Aramis, three important members of the King's Musketeers. The four perform almost incredible feats of valor, overthrowing the well laid plans of the great Cardinal Richelieu, and at last the Cardinal, despairing of conquering them, wins them to his side by giving D'Artagnan a commission in the Guards.

That is four of five less than 250 words, but any intelligent editor will be led to read the rest of the story from this introduction and you cannot sell an unintelligent editor anything, anyhow. That six lines on the typewritten page comprehends all the editor needs to know. You've got him interested to the point where he will pick up the script. Now make that script so brisk and clever that he reads it through. Do this not with "clever" writing but with intense, absorbing action and gripping situation. Do that and you'll win him, but remember that he knows how to get an office boy into the room more effectively than by pressing a button. And reporters do not press buttons (this chap was a reporter). They yell "Boy!!!!!" and when the boy gets ready, he comes.

We wish we could take every photoplay writer into the studio and let him see a script produced. If we could we would not have so much excess baggage. He would put down the essential facts and leave the rest to the director's good sense.

But if you don't know that the synopsis should be well within 250 words, you do not know enough to send out scripts.

What Jax Is.

So many companies are heading for Jacksonville that a brief description of the place might prove of interest. Of course there are ways of making any good story fit almost any place, but if you are trying to suit the Jacksonville companies remember these pointers:

Jacksonville is on the St. John's River about twenty miles from the ocean. The banks of the river are mostly dirt and abrupt, forming little or no beach. Just at present the water is full of floating islands of lily pads. Pine trees abound and these line the river banks, coming down to the water's edge. There are a few elevations at spots along the river, but mostly the country is flat. The pines are not heavily foliaged and pictures showing scenes in the woods are practicable almost anywhere.

The city has brick pavements and stone sidewalks. Most of the houses set back from the road and there are no rows of flats. Several fine hotel entrances are available and the roads leading from town are decidedly good. There is one small ferry boat and any number of small motor boats. Ocean steamers of the Clyde and Merchants and Miners lines are generally at the dock, there are lumber boats a few miles down the river and there is a small boat up the river daily that stops at numerous private or semi-public docks.

The beach is twenty miles away, but over good roads. It will not pay to write in an occasional beach scene. Put in enough for a day's work. The sole beach hotel is not a very imposing structure, but there are better further down the coast.

Looking Ahead.

After you've written your script look it over and see if you can save the director some work. Remember that each scene is played with no relation to that going before or the one following. All scenes played in the library are played at once and not each in turn. Perhaps there is some costume kink that may suggest playing a picture in the library instead of the dining room. It's just as easy to move it yourself as to let it go through the other way and give the director a little thought To explain, there was a script the other day in one scene of which the leading man was supposed to shave off his beard. All of the library scenes were played in smooth face and all but one of the parlor scenes showed the beard. By making the bearded scene in the library instead of the parlor the time it takes to put on a crepe beard was saved; possibly an hour.

It is not absolutely essential that you should keep the production scheme in mind, but if you can, you make the script more available and at the same time show your familiarity with the work.

Condensing Inside Scenes.

Just because you know that a studio is a place well provided with scenery, do not use a different set for each scene, when you can play several scenes in one set. No matter how much scenery a studio may have, the setting and striking of scenes consumes from twenty minutes to several hours according to the nature of the set. If too many scenes are used there is a waste of perhaps a day in setting scenes that could have been avoided had the inside scenes been condensed.

Unless you need to have people pass from one room to another in the same house, let the action fall in one or two rooms against five or six and at a pinch throw an action out of doors where there is no time lost rather than require a full set to be made for an action that is not of sufficient importance to justify another setting. If you want your hero and heroine to meet at the home of a third party you can have this third person do the introducing in the street instead of the house if that is the only action that you have planned to have happen in that house. Thinking of the director is apt to make him think of you and if you want to sell scripts plan it so that he thinks kindly of you.

Novelty.

Just because you have thought of an idea, it does not, of necessity follow that it is a good idea. The fact that you just thought of it does not make it new. That's a point where hundreds of would-be writers fall down and stay down.

The South Sea islander who knows nothing of the world outside, might regard the invention of flint and steel as something new and more important than the old fire stick. That the flint and steel was long ago replaced by the friction match would mean nothing to him. It is a new idea so far as he knows and so must be new to the world. In the same way the story you think of may be brand new to you and still old and worn out to others. Just the other day a complaint was made that a company had stolen an idea and the author was highly indignant. As a matter of fact the script was returned to the complaining writer because they already had a script on substantially the same lines and in sending the idea over the professional writer excused the lack of novelty by pointing out the redeeming new point.

It is hard to determine the novelty of a story, but it is safe to regard with suspicion the ordinary idea and to write for sale only the exceptional suggestions, keeping the ordinary ideas until you have learned to make them extraordinary.

Sticks To It.

In the February issue of the Motion Picture Story Magazine, Mr. Brewster writes:

> The mistake Mr. Sargent makes is in stating that I praise or defend any particular school. I do not know one school from another, nor do I know the officers and instructors of any particular school. I spoke of schools generally, and I particularly stated that there were doubtless good and bad schools, although I am not sure that there are bad schools. I assume that the poorest of the many schools can, and do, teach their pupils the rudiments and technique of photoplay writing, and this is just what the pupils want. Mr. Sargent's book does this, it is true, but a book cannot come back and criticise the pupil's work and show where that work could be improved. Any school ought to be able to do this, and if it can that school ought to exist. I know of no case where a pupil has not been benefited by his or her course in photoplay writing.

As we have tried to explain to Mr. Brewster, the fact that we wrote "Technique of the Photoplay" has nothing to do with our attitude in the matter of the schools. We also criticise manuscripts, but that does not blind us to the fact that Pop Hoadley does as good work for one dollar as we charge twice that for. And we get two dollars for a criticism, and we get only a small royalty on the book, for the publication rights were sold to The Moving Picture World twenty months ago. Even if we let such a thing bias us, the royalties on Technique are too small to interest us much. We trust that Mr. Brewster will be able to assimilate this plain statement of fact.

Our contention is that the school can teach no more of the work than the instructor knows, and that the correspondence school teachers know little or nothing of their subject, although they profess to teach it to others. Mr. Brewster says he knows none of the officers or instructors in the schools. Why, then, does he presume to pass upon the value of such courses, ignoring the frequently made statements of William Lord Wright, Mr. Thomas of the Photoplay Magazine, Spectator, formerly of the Mirror, and others who do know who these alleged instructors are and what value their instruction possesses? Any one of these writers will be glad to give Mr. Brewster facts if he thinks that the writer of this department is blinded by a book. Mr. Brewster, alone of all the editors of publications devoted intimately or distantly to the photoplay business, gives countenance to the schools and opens his columns to their advertising, and yet he admits that he does not know about the schools and seems to be unwilling to learn.

A course of lessons, backed by criticism, would be useful if the lessons were prepared with proper care and knowledge and if the criticisms were written by men who knew more of the subject than the pupil, but the blind lead the blind.

We have not kept the hundreds of complaints that have come in, but perhaps some of the victims of the schools will relate their experiences for Mr. Brewster's benefit. Meantime here is an extract from a letter in this morning's mail. The writer says: "You say I write with no knowledge of the requirements of the studio. That is the reason I am now bothering you. The school did not explain that to me as you have."

Surely the professors should know something about the studio if they are qualified, but we question whether any of them ever saw the inside of a real studio. Mr. Brewster is entitled to his own opinion, but we wish he would base his opinion on facts instead of theory.

Talking Pictures.

Do not send your talking pictures to the Edison studio. There is no demand for talking pictures yet, since the work must be done by trained writers who know what they are doing, but if there was a market it would not be through the Edison studio, since the talking pictures are a separate department.

Canadian Readers.

Several Canadian writers have asked how they can send return stamped envelopes with their scripts when they live so far from the border that United States stamps are not to be had. As a courtesy we will send a "book" of forty-eight stamps to any writer who encloses a money order for one dollar and an addressed envelope. The books are sheets of six stamps bound between waxed paper leaves. If you want the letter registered add ten cents for the registration fee. The letter should be addressed to this department and not merely to the paper.

Inquiries.

NOTE—No questions can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of addresses to which photoplays may be sent will be supplied on receipt of a STAMPED AND ADDRESSED ENVELOPE.

L. S. B.—Henry Walthall was Indian Charley in My Hero. Pictures of Biograph players are not to be obtained in this country and will not be sent you from abroad by the vendors. Though we value the friendship of the English distributor, we had to obtain our own set through an outsider. Miss Hawley had the part mentioned. Do not send stamps for mail reply.

M. H. G., DAYTON.—A stamped and addressed envelope means an envelope with a stamp on it. Address the New York office next time.

W. B. H.—Query Mr. Spencer and the western Universal. If the company pays you for the script it is a reliable company. We know nothing of their solvency.

A. E. B.—The same editor seems to be reading for Reliance, Punch and Majestic. It is not good practise to send a man to bed in New York and show him a second after dressed and in a western city unless a leader intervenes. Perhaps there was a leader that some operator cut out. Do not follow a bad example just because it is an example. Sometimes the close cuts are made to get within the thousand foot limit.

M. K. J.—This department does not deal with marriages, but you can find the announcement in a recent issue—in December. The Thanhouser Kid is Marie Eline, the Kidlet, Helen Bagley.

H. H. S.—You seem to know more about the lady than we do. At that you have not recognized her in the pictures named. Miss Joyce had the first three parts and Miss Roland the last named.

V. S.—In "The Greater Wealth." Harold Sharon was played by Wheeler Oakman.

R. S.—We cannot place Mr. Thompson. The Longfellow query would require too long a search. She had the lead in Mme. Rex. Miss Herman did not have the lead in "A Blot In the Scutcheon." The "House With the Closed Shutters" was outlawed, more than two years old.

J. K.—Where only a synopsis is asked for it may exceed the 250 word limit but keep it as brief as possible.

RICHARD ROE—William Butler was the lawyer in "Bill Boggs' Windfall." Walter C. Miller was the young physician in "A Cry for Help." William Christie Miller, (not Walter, please note) was the old man in "Adventure in the Autumn Woods."

L. A. C.—In "Aisles of the Wild" the brunette was Clair McDowell and the blonde, Lillian Gish. Gish is not another name for Miss Pickford. Lillian Gish, a blonde, is with Miss Pickford in "A Good Little Devil." Dorothy, who is but 14, is still with the Biograph, too young for stage work. The Gishes have been friends of Miss Pickford since her own very recent childhood.

G. H.—Do not know the date of Miss Pickford's birthday. Perhaps she will be good enough to supply it. Miss Sweet probably went to California, but we are not certain.

W. V. M.—Elmer Booth played the Convict Husband in "The Narrow Road" and the Snapper Kid in "The Musketeers of Pig Alley." Very probably he is the same who is now playing in "Stop Thief," but we cannot state that fact with the positiveness you require.

L. G. R.—Albert Swanson is listed by the Lubin company as playing Dave Morden in "When Love Leads."

B. A.—Walter C. Miller was the southern sweetheart in "The Informer."

G. L. P.—We do not reply to questions by mail. In "Death Valley Scotty's Mine," Nell was Miss Ruth Roland and Broncho Belle was Miss Marin Sais.

J. A. M.—Ray Myers was the cowardly son in "Blood Will Tell." Joseph Graybill was George in "Saving Mabel's Dad." E. H. Allen was the murderer in "Law of the West." The other two questions cannot be answered for lack of data.

W. F. W.—G. M. Anderson is in the east but we do not know just where a letter will reach him. We do not take up the question of ages of players. Arthur Mackley is the player you have tried to sketch. That nose is a libel.

MURPHY—We have given all the names we have for "Pig Alley"; look back. Scripts should be written as briefly as possible, but the number of words is not one of the factors unless you have too many. It's the length of the action that counts. You have it about right.

E. R.—"Regular" readers should know that we do not answer matrimonial questions. Mr. McGowan is still with Kalem. Cannot tell much about the movement of Universal players. Write the company at the Mecca Building for the photo.

BUBBLES—You're hopless. If you go to the theater to study pictures and forget to study in your interest, the only thing to do is to read "The Stories of the Films" about six to ten pages back of this. A comedy is a comedy, of course, but would you send a sea farce to Broncho Billy or a Wild West to a company working in New York?

C. B. M.—You can write us in this matter if you'll observe the usual courtesy of sending a stamped and addressed envelope. It's breaking the rules, but it goes this time.

E. J. G.—Miss Mae Marsh was the telephone girl in "The Telephone Girl and the Lady." Wilfred Lucas was the husband in "As in a Looking Glass." Henry Walthall, Lionel Barrymore and Jack Dillon were the three friends in the play of that title. Have no data on the next two. In "Papa's Sweetheart" the near-stepmother was Miss Elizabeth Miller. We do not identify the players by their pictures but by the names of the parts they play.

W. P. K.—Your question is rather general. From $15 to $100 is paid for a full length script. Two and three parts in proportion.

W. G. F.—The fact that you do not see a player in pictures for a time does not imply that he is dead. In Mr. Anderson's case it simply means that he is taking a vacation.

AMBITIOUS ACTRESS—It is not necessary to have studied acting to get a job with the pictures, but it takes the biggest sort of a pull to get inside a studio door these days. No dramatic school will help you to get a job. There are 11,964 other ambitious actresses in New York, who are equally sure they can make good if given a trial. We know because we saw most of them last week. The cloak makers strike has added a couple of hundred to that number but we've not counted these because they won't last.

CONSTANT READER—And that goes for you too. The only way to get a job is to induce someone to buy a picture producing company for you.

ATLANTA—The Thanhouser Kid makes frequent stage appearances. Sorry but we have not the other names you want.

R. T.—Arthur Mackley is the man you mean.

M. N.—You should know what companies are in Tampa yourself. Those mentioned are not in Tampa to our knowledge, but we believe that the Lubin Jacksonville company may take a run down your way shortly.

Projection Department

Editor Invites Discussion.

FT. WORTH, Tex., sends in description and sketch of a film cleaner of his own designing. In connection therewith he mentions several film-cleaning fluids. I am not reproducing the sketch or describing the cleaner, for the simple reason that its efficacy seems to depend on the use of a cleansing fluid, and the use of such fluids ought not to be undertaken except by one who understands them, and their action, as applied to celluloid, thoroughly. I intend to try and give some reliable data in this connection soon. Ft. Worth then asks:

> A projects a 12 ft. (108 sq. ft.) picture at 90 feet. B projects a 12 x 14 foot picture at 67 feet. Who should use the most current? A has a mirror screen. B has a perfectly smooth aluminum curtain (not rough as it should be). I say B ought to have 15 amperes more than A and even then won't get as good an illumination as A. Am I right about .2 of an ampere per square foot of screen for d.c. and .3 of an ampere for a.c., where plain screens are used? Am contradicted as to that.

Yes. You are correct, though that is only approximate, and is qualified by a minimum of 20 amperes d.c. and 35 a.c. See page 335 of the new handbook. Now here is an interesting question for discussion by operators, and I propose to let them discuss it. Let us hear your opinion, gentlemen. Also there is something very much wrong in the question itself. How many of you will tell me what it is? Understand me aright. I don't mean you are to discuss the question I have answered, but the question of who should have the greater amperage under the conditions named. There is room for some very intelligent reasoning here and a chance to display what you really know.

High Voltage.

Mr. Walter H. Stephens, Nicholson, Pa., makes the following inquiries:

> Can current for picture projection be taken from a 600 volt a.c. trolley wire, upon which the pressure is unsteady; that is to say, when a car comes on or leaves this end of the line, the incandescent lights become dim. Would a motor generator set produce steady enough light, taking power from above line? How can the amperage of a projection arc be changed; its voltage?

You could use a transformer, wound to reduce the voltage to about 35, but the projection light would die down to some extent as the line voltage dropped. The same would be true of a motor-generator, though that might possibly be compensated for. To explain about amperage increase and voltage would require more space than we can spare, as it would involve resistance, transformers and motor-generator action. Would suggest you send $2.50 to The Moving Picture World for a Handbook, in which all that is thoroughly and completely explained, as well as hundreds of other things you ought to know. Those who have had experience taking current from trolley lines will please write Mr. Stephens direct, giving him such information as they can.

Exchanges Should Charge for Damage.

Streator, Ill., orders a Handbook, and says:

> Like others, I cut out the Projection Department, and bind them separately, thus making a valuable reference book. You are right in saying exchanges should charge for damage done to films. I have no trouble with mine but know that I am fortunate as all exchanges do not keep their films in such good condition. The operator in another house here has an awful time. It is true that carelessness or ignorance on the part of operators is responsible for much of the trouble, and exchanges could check that by adopting your suggestion. You have not mentioned postage charges on the Handbook, so I have only sent the $2.50.

The book is sent post free, Streator. You are indeed lucky in having films reach you in good condition. Trust you will like the book. By the way, let us hear from those who have now had time to look it over. I have more than a year and a half of hard work tied up in that book, and would like to know what you think of it.

Likes the Book.

Mr. Wm. A. Pahl, operator with Hippodrome Co., Parkersburg, Pa., writes as follows:

> The new Handbook received and I must say it is well worth the money. It sure is a peach, and one of the best investments I ever made.

This is but a sample of many letters now beginning to come in. We shall, from time to time, print a few to show you what those who have bought the book think of it.

Announcement Slide Making.

Mr. L. T. Hill, Mystic, Conn., writes:

> To make a satisfactory announcement slide, procure a camera film negative and remove the emulsion from it. You may then write on the clear celluloid with a typewriter, wash it off and write again as often as desired. You can use it by cutting out two pasteboard mat forms, slide size, or by making a thin paper mat and using cover glasses. I have left slides made thus in light of a 40 ampere a.c. arc for 2½ minutes without damaging them. Operators salaries are very poor up this way. I know of men operating three shows a day for $12.00 per week.

I presume the emulsion may be removed from a camera negative the same as from a positive film, viz.: dissolve plenty of washing soda in warm water and soak film a few moments therein. No danger of too much soda. Warm water alone will do the trick but not so well. I should think, however, film being celluloid it would not stand the heat of a strong arc, even though confined between cover glasses, for very long. Otherwise the scheme is feasible, but for various reasons I would prefer gelatine, the main one being that it would be hard to manage such a small piece of film in the average typewriter and you could not afford to use it just once and throw it away, as you can with gelatine.

Engine or Generator Trouble.

Bloomingburgh, N. Y., is in deep water. He explains matters thusly (p. 1230, June 29, issue):

> Last June I wrote you as regards trouble I was having with calcium light. Since then I have been trying to install an electric lighting outfit, as you advised, with but very indifferent success. Am having troubles of my own. I started out with a Westinghouse 2 k.w., 125 volt dynamo, 1,830 r.p.m., pulled by a 3½ h.p. engine. But it did not hold up the current properly and the people who did the installing, etc., told me I did not have enough power. I then purchased a 4½ h.p. engine, without altering results. Everything would work fine until the arc was struck, whereupon the engine would slow down, and of course the voltage would drop, until I was getting about 50 volts at the arc. By manipulating the field rheostat I could increase the voltage and get a very good light; much better than with calcium, but not what I ought to get. I then tried a 6 h.p. engine, but still had the same trouble. I therefore concluded it was not the engine, but the generator which was responsible. Have decided that my 2 k.w. generator is not large enough. Have been using ⅝ carbons and the best have been able to get is 60 volts and 10 amperes d.c. I do not see why the voltage should drop thus when the arc is drawn, or why the engine should slow down, as a 6 h.p. engine certainly is large enough to pull a 2 k.w. dynamo. Can you advise me in this matter?

Evidently you should have asked advice long ago, Bloomingburgh. In the first place, your generator will produce 2,000 watts if it is a 2 k.w. machine and your 3½ h.p. engine ought to pull a generator with an output of 2611 watts. Three and one-half h.p. equals 746×3½=2,611 watts. But you ought not have purchased a 125 volt generator. A 70 volt one would have been very much more economical, and even a 110 volt dynamo would have been better. I would most strongly advise you to get a copy of the new handbook just as quickly as you can (price, $2.50) and study it diligently. The only explanation I can see for your engine slowing down is that you are using no resistance at all in series with the arc. You ought not have but about 48 volts (somewhere between 48 and 60) at the arc and the difference between your generator voltage (125) and the arc pressure must be taken care of in resistance coils (a rheostat) connected in series with the arc. What puzzles me, however, is that, while you ought not get anything like satisfactory results running without resistance, still even that condition ought not to slow down a 6 h.p. engine very much when it is only pulling a 2 k.w. dynamo. If you are using resistance in series with the arc then, unreasonable as it seems, the trouble lies, I think, at least in part, in your engines, provided you have set things forth correctly. Your dynamo ought to supply you with 16 amperes at 125 volts. There must be sufficient resistance introduced to use up the difference between that and the arc voltage—in other words to allow 16 amperes to flow under 125 volts pressure; see pages 17 to 21, handbook, for method of figuring this. But your generator is too small at that, especially if you use any incandescents. You ought to have at least a 3½ k.w. dynamo, but I would advise that it be a 70 volt machine, since then there will not be so much energy wasted in the rheostats. But, at that, you might first try results with a rheostat—if I am right in asssuming, you have none now. Write any reliable projection machine manufacturer, telling him you want a 20 ampere, 125 volt rheostat. I say a 20 ampere one because such a rheostat will only deliver about 16 amperes after it has been in use a short while.

Power's Shutter.

Hutchinson, Kas., asks:

> Enclosed find $2.50 for handbook. Would like information as follows: Ought Power's three-wing main shutter blade cover the lens completely while film is in motion?

No. See Fig. 120, page 282 of handbook, for position of shutter when film has just stopped. See pages 219 to 223, inclusive, for explanation of shutter action.

We Live to Learn.

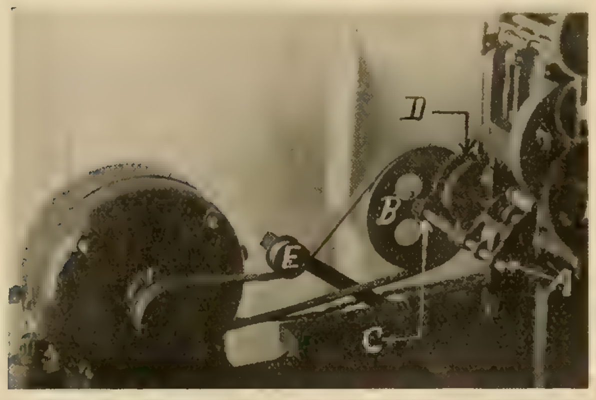
Hot Springs, Ark., hath taught the Editor something, as follows:

> For two years past have been a constant reader of The World and in the Projection Department have found many useful things. Am sending you picture of my motor drive, the machine being an Edison Exhibition Model. A 12-inch fan motor supplies power. On end of shaft A is an old flywheel which receives the flat drive-belt. On shaft A is a ¾ inch gear, meshing with gear D, which is 2 9/16 inches in diameter and it attached, by suitable means, to belt pulley on lower sprocket shaft. Idler E is made of an old flanged sprocket. It was sawed in two, a piece cut out of the hub and then it was soldered together again. Am also sending a safety razor blade for you to try out as a film scraper. It is the best thing I have found, as you can scrape the whole width of the film at once, thus always securing a perfectly straight, clean-cut edge to join to. A good film cleaner may be made by using two blackboard erasers. Fasten on to the table between the reels. Hinge the other one on top, cover them with felt and provide a suitable arrangement, or latch for fastening them together, with thumb screw to provide as much pressure as desired, and—there you are. Projection is very good here, but salaries are punk. We tried to organize a local. Got together and sent the money to Mr. Lee M. Hart, Gen'l. Sec.-Treas. I. A. T. S. E., Chicago. They kept it six months and then, by request, returned it, with nothing doing. Can you give us a few hints as to how to proceed in organizing a local? I know you would like to see one here. We have a few good operators and some who could stand considerable "fixing"—own brothers to Jimmie-The Usher, as it were.



And again it is illustrated that none of us get so smart we can't learn something. I've had that safety razor blade scraper sprung on me several times, but it never occurred to me, until the Hot Springs brother told me so, that one could use a safety razor blade and scrape the film endwise in removing the emulsion, thus cutting an absolutely straight, even line right up to the dividing line. I at once tried it and it works fine, but afterward scrape the other way to roughen the celluloid. The blade sent is an American Safety Razor blade, which has a piece of steel doubled over one edge, forming a shank. It is a perfect tool for the purpose. As to the motor drive, it is a very ingenious arrangement, but inasmuch as the photo tells the tale there is no use to comment. The blackboard eraser film cleaner is undoubtedly practical, but there should be flanges on the lower eraser to keep the film from pulling out, unless you mean to pull it through the short way of the erasers. You must have not less than seven operators, each employed in a moving picture theater and each with not less than one year of actual experience as an operator in order to secure an auxiliary charter. I am sure there was good reason why the charter was not issued. Did not brother Hart explain? You might organize an unaffiliated local and affiliate later. Consult the officials of the local union of any craft in your city. They will doubtless help you organize. Yes, I would like to see you boys get together. It is for the advantage of all that you do so. Many thanks for the information contained in your excellent letter, especially the razor blade matter.

Will It Pay?

Mr. J. A. Wollam, Walter, Okla., comments on various things and asks questions as follows:

> Am running a show in this little town. Population, 2,000. Show three nights a week to packed houses. Pride myself on putting up as good a picture as can be produced. Take The World and find the Projection Department especially interesting. Have operated almost every make of projector and now have a Power's 6. It is an excellent machine, but I wish to criticise one or two points, particularly with reference to shutter trouble, concerning which we see so much in the Department. Anyone who understands it could readily set Power's Six shutter so it will cover the movement of the picture, were it not for the lost motion in the gears. All the end play can be taken out of the shutter shaft by adjusting the collars (638, Fig. 117, Page 276, new handbook.—Ed.), but where there is enough play in the cogs of the spiral gear (635, Fig. 118, Page 278, new handbook) that the rim of the shutter may be moved from ¾ to one inch, the travel ghost cannot be entirely eliminated. In my opinion that play cannot be done away with until the construction is changed. Aside from this one fault my Six is as good or a better machine than any I have ever handled. And now will you give me your opinion on a motor drive proposition?

The brother then asks me to express an opinion as to whether or not it would pay to patent and attempt to market a motor drive, of which he gives but a hazy description. Says it runs noiseless and is better than any he has seen, and that it can be sold for $12.50. Now, friend Wollam, you surely cannot expect me to pass an intelligent opinion—an opinion of any value to you or anyone else—without I examine the device itself. But, as a general proposition, I very much doubt that it would, unless remarkably good, sell well enough to repay you for your trouble and time. Mind you I do not say it would not, assuming it to be a really excellent article. But $12.50 is a pretty steep price as compared to the charge for other motor drives. I really am only guessing as I haven't seen the device. Send one on for my private examination if you wish to. Send by parcel post with enough parcel post stamps for return. I can then express an intelligent opinion. As to the Power's Six gear play, I would suggest that if your shutter rim has any such amount of play as that you should send the machine to the factory for overhauling. The shutter ought not to have anywhere near that much play and the gears must be badly worn. I think you might possibly overcome the trouble by hanging a one-half inch leather strap over the shutter spindle and attaching a weight thereto—just enough to hold the shutter steady and keep out the backlash, but not enought to make the machine run hard. Try it anyhow. I know of no projection machine on the market which has not some faults. One must seek the one which combines the greatest number of good points and the least number of objectionable ones. Perfection, the wise man will not expect to find.

Illinois Replies.

Illinois comes back as follows:

> Just read your answer to my letter in this week's World. Yes, I admit that my knowledge is rather weak. I think I said before that I did not know it all, I am not like some operators (?), who think they do and can't be told anything, I want to learn all I can and give the best service possible. Our machine has a three-wing shutter, but I had the flicker just the same. Yes, sometimes I would run slower, but that wasn't my fault. I would be running less than sixty-five and the manager would tell me to slow up that I was running too fast. Well, anyway I have gotten rid of most of the flicker since writing you, I don't think I have any more than any machine would make. At times though I have a travel ghost, which I find is caused from to much lost motion in the gears. If I pull steady on the crank all the time I have no ghost at all, but if I slack up as crank comes up I get a ghost, and it is hard to get a steady pull where you have to do the rewinding and everything else that is done in the operating room. I think the only solution to this is a motor. Got rid of the flicker by making flicker blades wider. As to the one-half inch solid carbon below, will say that I tried them, but thought I got as good a light with cored carbons and it was easier to handle. I am going to give them another try anyway. I think they give a whiter light around the edges. As I said before, I do not know it all, but I am willing to wager that I am getting a better picture than lots of union men that are holding jobs, for I have seen some mighty bum work from union men, or I supposed them to be union, for they had a union slide on screen. It seems to me that if they can get into the union they ought to be able to do the best of work. I suppose the examinations in some locals are weak, aren't they?

Your knowledge may be, and is, in certain directions, rather weak, Illinois, but I like the way you write, and predict that you will be a successful operator. As to the flashes of travel ghost, it is evident that your gears are worn. See my reply to brother Wollam, Walter, Okla., and try the same experiment. I think, if rightly done, it will eliminate the trouble very largely, if not entirely. Your method of eliminating the flicker shows you have knowledge of shutter action. In this connection see pages 219-223 inclusive of the handbook. Yes, the union man who shows a union slide and delivers poor projection is reflecting no credit on himself or the organization. Union examinations are frequently too weak.

Carbon Holders.

Mr. L. B. Minges, Lestershire, N. Y., submits, for examination and test, a pair of very substantial cast iron carbon holders. These holders are very heavily made, indeed, and certainly would never break. The carbon contact is 1¼ inches long, thus insuring good electrical contact and preventing heating of the carbon. The screws are substantial, and the binding post excellent. The holders are made to fit any lamp. The high resistance of cast iron is offset by the large area of the device, so that it would amount to nothing appreciable. It is a very good article.

Oh, You Lubin!

Mr. Ringland Kelly, Ogdensburg, N. Y., puts up the following poser:

> Have an old Lubin projector which I wish to make into a moving picture camera. Can it be done? I read of the Casino making their own motion pictures of local affairs and showing them in their theater. If I can take local views, a large theater here has offered me great inducements to show them in their house. With the lens on the Lubin I can focus up to 100 feet. Beyond that would need a new lens. Can take one picture with it and see no reason why could not take moving pictures if I have the lens. Is a moving picture camera focused? If not, I don't see how they can take a moving train when it is coming toward them. What is the price of raw film and the price for developing and printing same? What companies do such work?

Friend Kelly I am strongly of the opinion you had best leave the making of pictures to others. The intermittent of your old Lubin could be used for a camera movement but it would have to have a special, light-tight shutter and a high grade photographic lens; also the whole business, except the end of the lens, would have to be enclosed in light tight box in which reels for the films would have to be arranged. I would not advise any but an expert cameraman to undertake such a proposition, and even he could not get satisfactory results without a total outlay (counting money and time), nearly equal to the cost of a camera. Then, too, by the time you purchased the film stock, counted your own time and the developing and printing, no one theater could pay you enough for the use of your films to reimburse you, though it might pay expenses on a circuit. If you had your own printing machine, developing plant and the requisite knowledge and skill to make even passably fair pictures, that would be something else again. But you have none of these things; in fact, nothing at all but the desire and an old Lubin projection machine. Let it alone, is my advice. Write the Eastman Co., for prices on raw film stock. Don't know who you could get to develop and print, unless Mr. J. C. Hemment, 108 Fulton St., New York City, would do it for you, or the Crystal Film Co., Wendover and Park Aves., New York City.

Care of Motors.

Mr. L. J. Shafanek, secretary L. U. 160, I. A. T. S. E., Cleveland, Ohio, writes as follows:

> There is one thing I would like to have you write about, and that is the taking care of and repairing small motors, both a. c. and d. c.; also the best speed regulation for a. c. motors. Have seen several diagrams and descriptions of speed regulators in the Department, but none appealed to me as quite the thing as to efficiency and durability. I am the instigator of a dance to be given by L. U. No. 160 probably some time around the first of March. The boys would like you to take a vacation; come out and get better acquainted.

There are many things about which I could write, with profit to all concerned, but I cannot discuss them all in one issue. I have copy on my files which has been waiting publication for months. The letters seem, however, to be the popular thing, and they have right-of-way over everything else as long as these conditions exist. I am of the opinion that either the plan shown in Fig. 151 or Fig. 153 of the handbook will give excellent results if rightly made and intelligently handled. I would like to visit you, brothers, very much, indeed. The reason I do not do so is that not only are such trips expensive, but they seriously interfere with the work. But I'll get out there some of these days and we'll have a good visit and learn to know each other better.

Ghost Fades Away.

Mr. Chas. W. Boyd, St. Joseph, Mo., writes, forwarding sample of faulty Vitagraph film; also upper magazine roller plate from Edison machine, which was not rightly placed and caused trouble. It was set too far to one side. The film had cut its side bar half in two. Friend Boyd also says:

> Would like to offer a little advice to those troubled with that very common source of annoyance, a ghost. I had one, and of course the manager was camped on my trail. Tried everything I could think of, but finally changed my brand of carbons, and presto! Mr. Ghost took his departure.

We have called the attention of the film manufacturer to the fault, which was due to carelessness on the part of some employee in the printing room. The magazine roller plate matter was also due to some one's carelessness. Those things will happen occasionally. As to the carbon matter, well, I don't see the why and wherefore of that, but sometimes things happen for which we don't see any sensible reason. This seems to be one of those cases.

From China.

The Arcade Amusement Company, Tientsen, China, is here again with the following:

> Being readers of your valuable department we would ask that the following be explained: As set forth in our last letter, our films come from the M. P. Sales Agency, Ltd., London. Attached to our office we have a room 10 x 27 feet for the inspection and mending of film. Every reel is examined carefully and repaired before being sent to the operating room. Needless to say, the films being second hand, they are in bad condition. Perhaps you will not believe me when I say that we use up almost an ounce of film cement a day. We have, for three years past purchased cement from the Pathe Phono Cinema Cine, locally. Recently we ran out of cement. Tried ordinary gum without result. There was a formula for making cement in one of the late numbers, but cannot find it. Kindly give number and date. By chance I learned the Amyl Acetate is a good cement. Tried it and my operator says it makes better splice than cement we have been using. Now if Amyl Acetate is as good, or ever better than cement, why all these formulas and unnecessary fuss? I tried carbon soaking. Dissolved five pounds of common salt in six bottles of water. Soaked carbons six days and then dried on top of stove for four hours. Tried two last night; 235 amps. of 220 volt 50 cycle current. Result, light not so white as with common carbons, but the flicker was less. Carbons needled. Intend soaking them three weeks and giving further trial. If there is truth in the good results reported why does not some manufacturer try treating carbons for a.c.?

Think you did not dry them long enough, for one thing. Probably the flicker seemed less because the light was not so bright. Unless I am in error you ordered a handbook, some time since, which is on its way to you now. On page 330 you will find film cement formulas. However, Amyl Acetate is an excellent cement and if you add about 2 ounces of film, first having removed the emulsion (see page 330 of the handbook for instructions for doing that) and cut it into fine ribbons to facilitate dissolving, to each quart you will improve it considerably. One, at least, of the large film manufacturers uses that kind of cement in his factory.

Book Looks Good to Him.

Mr. Everette J. Brown, La Fayette, Ind., arises to speak thusly:

> Received my handbook. It appears to be the book for operators and managers. Wish to goodness more managers would study them. My book came just in time, as we are about to remodel the house. Have a first class theater. Throw 75 to 80 feet; pipe organ; two new Power's Six projectors; motor-generator set, current being 220 volt a.c.; twelve foot picture. The operating room will probably be of hollow tile and built according to the ideas set forth in the book. I think $2.50 a very reasonable price for so valuable a work. Every operator and every manager should have one.

I am more than pleased that you like the book, neighbor Brown. After my having put a year and a half of the hardest kind of hard labor into that work. Enough letters are already in hand to settle that point, and the verdict is favorable—in most cases enthusiastically so. Yes, Brother Brown, you are right. Suppose I were to start out to prepare, for you alone, any one of those machine instructions. It would cost you from $300 to $500, yet you get five sets of them for $2.50, to say nothing of hundreds of pages of other instructive matter. I have but one fault to find with the work myself, viz: it ought to be three times its present size. To cover the field completely, in all its branches, would require a thousand pages, at the least, and that would mean not less than five dollars a copy—too high priced for the operator at present. But I have condensed things and, I believe, covered it pretty well, everything considered. Taking the book, in conjunction with the department, it may be fairly said that no operator need lack knowledge. In one or the other he will find what he seeks.

Several Things.

Mr. Carl E. Chambers, Keokuk, Ia., Writes:

> Am much interested in article (Jan. 4 issue) concerning intermittent action and shutters. Have been working on the shutter proposition myself and have succeeded in evolving a pair of double cone shutters which put on a flickerless picture with the 1909 model Motiograph projector. I simply trimmed a pair of wide shutters down until they were about ⅛ inch wider than the regular 36 degree shutter. I then cut off the interrupters (flicker blades.—Ed.) and fastened on a pair the same width as the shutter blades. This cuts some more light but I am unable to see the difference in the picture. I use a Radium Gold Fibre screen. Throw is 100 feet, with a 13-foot picture. I pull 30 amperes from one of Mr. Hallberg's 550 volt economizers. Would like to have your opinion on this arrangement. I believe my projection is good, though there is always room for improvement. I often run a full reel with scarcely a preceptible motion on the screen, except when a bad patch goes through. Here is an idea which may help some one: I have placed a small, metal guard over the top sprocket, in such manner that the film perforations cannot catch on the sprocket teeth as the tail-piece leaves the upper magazine. This does away with the necessity for trimming away the sprocket holes on the last few inches of tail piece. Have also made a universal adjustment for my upper carbon arm, so that I can move the top carbon back or ahead in relation to lower one, without opening the lamphouse door. Will send sketch if you think it will be of value to those using 1909 model lamps. Some time since I purchased, at a stiff price, two volumes purporting to be instruction books on moving picture work, I was also to have the privilege of asking questions concerning practical operating room work. After looking over the books I picked out a few simple questions and sent them in, to see what would result. I enclose the answers. Look them over!

Your scheme as to the shutter would reduce flicker, I think, but would cut considerably more light, which might be a rather serious matter were you using a cloth screen. With a semi-reflecting screen this loss may not be so important. Pleased to see that you say there is always room for improvement. The man who becomes satisfied, no matter how excellent his work, is in a bad way. There is no standing still. A man either advances or retrogrades. If he is satisfied he begins to go ahead backward. Send sketch of how you attach the sprocket guard; also the lamp improvement. As to the books: I told you what they were, in the department, some time since. The answers to some of Friend Chambers' queries are amusing.

Peep-Hole.

Springfield, O., asks:

> Does any machine manufacturer making his upper carbon arm so as to be moved sidewise by means of a handle outside the lamphouse put a peep-hole in the front wall, just above the condensers? Have seen none so far, but think it would be of use, provided it be supplied with a cover to shut off the light when not in use.

Not that I know of. I do not quite see what you would want with a peep-hole there, unless it be to see when the carbon points are in line sidewise. This I think is hardly necessary, as you will soon learn to judge of that by the side view, provided the observation hole be provided with proper glasses and be rightly located—both matters of very large importance.

Resistance Question.

Scotland, S. D., orders a handbook and propounds the following:

> Am running on 220 volt current, using a barrel of water for one rheostat. I also use a rheostat made by the Enterprise Optical Company, Chicago. This rheostat has eleven coils. Do you think it would give me too much current were I to cut out the barrel of water and just use the rheostat? I don't claim to know anything about the electrical end of things. I run the opera house here and put on a motion picture show, when nothing else is on, to make things pay out.

Your information is altogether too indefinite. If you have the water rheostat and the coil rheostat connected in series, as illustrated in Fig. 51, handbook, so that the barrel of water is substituted for one of the rheostats in Fig. 51, then you could not use the rheostat alone. If, however, you are using two lamps, with water resistance on one and the rheostat on the other, you can dispense with the water altogether and use the rheostat for both lamps by making proper connections. But I think you have the single 110 V rheostat connected in series with the water rheostat. If this is true you had better get a 220 volt rheostat, which can be had from any machine manufacturer. I think after reading "Resistance" and "Resistance Devices," the handbook, you will understand these matters pretty thoroughly.

A Few Questions.

Ft. Worth, Texas, sends in the following queries:

> (a) If a Mercury Arc Rectifier be hooked up on 110 volt current, with flexible lead attached to contact No. 1, where would you connect it to secure more amperage? (b) How much exposure does an Edison two-wing shutter give when the crank goes around once in one minute? The foregoing were two questions propounded to me by the examining board of the Ft. Worth Local Union, I. A. T. S. E. I was under the impression that normal speed was 60 per minute of the crank, nor did I know that the automatic shutter would raise at any such speed. Referring to query a, I do not believe it practical to connect a rectifier so as to give higher than its maximum output.

So far as I know you are correct as to query a. If there is any way of normally boosting the amperage above maximum I do not know of it, nor would it be advisable to do so since connecting to contact No. 1 puts the tube up to capacity; provided the voltage be 110. If it be 104 it would not be quite to capacity, of course. You will find this matter fully and exhaustively dealt with on pages 171 to 182 of the handbook. Question b must have been designed as a catch question. Its answer obviously is that the speed named is impossible. Surely the Board meant "second" instead of minute. But even so, it would require very careful measurement of the shutter and figuring to answer with accuracy. If the speed be sixty per minute, then the crank would go around once, and the shutter 16 times per second. If the shutter cut precisely 50% of the light, then, inasmuch as the shutter revolves in 1-16 of one second, the exposure of the picture must be 1-16 ÷ 2 = 1-32 of one second, but if the shutter cut a greater or less percentage of the light than 50, then the figuring is more difficult. I think it hardly necessary to give such questions as this in examinations, though the rectifier query is fair enough, in fact, I think it a very good one, since it would tend to bring out several points. But it should, of course, only be given an applicant claiming knowledge of a rectifier, or one who has operated one.

Size of Picture.

Rochester, N. Y., orders two handbooks and inquires:

> Have an 82-foot throw, with a 14-foot 6-inch picture. Use a.c. First row of seats about 15 feet from screen. Although picture is a fine one, bright and clear, with practically no flicker, people do not like to occupy the first five or six rows of seats. Do you think a smaller picture would remove this objection; about a 12-foot one, say?

Inasmuch as you have given no particulars of the house, such as its dimensions, kind of screen, etc., I cannot answer with certainty as to what had best be done. If you have a stage, set the screen against the back wall and that will fix matters. If your house is not of greater depth than 75 or 80 feet from screen to rear row of seats, then a 12-foot picture will do quite well, and will help remedy, though not entirely remove the objection to the first few rows of seats. The front seats are undesirable, if within twenty-five feet of the screen. The wise man or woman sits as far back as he or she can, up to seventy-five feet, when at a moving picture theater. The kind of screen has something to do with the matter also. You can sit nearer a cloth or plaster curtain than you can to a reflecting, or semi-reflecting type of screen. In England the front rows of seats are usually low priced, while the rear seats command an advanced admission fee. See "The Screen," pages 336 to 343, inclusive, in the handbook.

Well—Umph! Jus' So!

Shawnee, Okla., sends in piece of film, a sub-title, reading: "The Moths Emerge From the Cocoons Kept From the Previous Year. These are the Bambyax, or Silk Worm Moths." Just under these lines appear what seems to be a fly, though this seems impossible since the critter is longer than the title letters are high. Appearing on a sub-title it certainly cannot have anything to do with silk worm moths. The thing is crawling around, too.

Probably Lens Trouble.

Sparta, Wis., writes as follows:

> Have Power's Six head, with Power's 5 lamphouse; a.c.; throw about 60 feet. My picture has been fine. Could ask for no better, until about three weeks ago. Since that time am unable to get clear focus all over the screen. Seems to be out in center and when I focus there it is out at edges. Could you refer me to directions for setting a two-wing shutter on Powers Six?

You will find complete directions for setting any shutter, as well as the principle of shutter action, in the handbook, which you should by all means have. It is probable your trouble lies in (a) You have had the lens apart and put it together wrongly. (b) lenses loose in their mounts. (c) Faint, invisible finger mark on one of the lenses. Oil on lenses would hardly produce this effect, since if that were the trouble you could not focus the spot at all. For how to put your lens back, when you have it apart, I refer you to Fig. 146, handbook. Always place the heaviest curvature of all lenses toward the screen.

A Most Interesting Letter.

Mr. Richard A. Addison, Muncie, Ind., writes a long, and most interesting letter. I really would like to publish it all, but space forbids. Boiled down Brother Addison says:

> Although have been a constant reader, this is my first attempt to contribute to the department which I enjoy so well. Am almost ashamed, for it has been a case of all take and no give. No one likes to read the letters from the "Boys" better than do I. But most of the queries could be answered by the operator himself, did he but stop, study his mechanism and think. However, as I made all my expenses on a trip through the north, summer of 1911, setting shutters at $2.50 each and wiping oil off lenses at $1.00 per wipe, you may infer that the great majority don't write to you just to be doing something. They really don't understand the projector, or projection itself. And now to business. It is well known that a certain leading make of films are not properly perforated. These films will frequently catch on the upper Power's Six sprocket teeth and pull the upper loop under, as per 1 in illustration. To remedy this I attached a small, metal guard, as shown at 2, detail being illustrated at 1 A. The holes to attach must be drilled in top of machine frame, of course. Another thing. To remove the Power's Six oil case cover idler gear X, 4, must first be taken off. To do this, collar has to be removed, and this necessitates removal of front-plate or the taking of the machine from its base and turning it upside down to get at the collar set screw. Now to obviate all this, just drill, or have drilled, a ½ inch hole at Z, 3, through which you can insert the screw driver and loosen the collar screw. Also those having the older Power's Six machines have trouble getting at the two set screws (744, P 7, Fig. 151, the handbook) compressing the toggle gear connecting link. This may be remedied by filing front plate as shown at B, 3. This opening is in later models of the Six. It is very convenient for the operator.

We desire to thank Brother Addison for his most interesting and helpful letter. What he says about the face plate of Power's Six is true. Any operator can follow his directions. Also the little guard is excellent. We are glad to have you with us, and trust you will be with us often. I enjoyed your remarks about old times immensely. I got out one of those little handbooks I put out so long ago and looked it over again. I really was surprised at what I managed to get into the little booklet, and how much of it was absolutely right. Much of it would bear repeating right now. In fact, when I get space, if I ever do, I shall reprint the opening remarks to operators in the Department. Must compliment you on your excellent drawing. It's mightly few sketches I don't have to redraw.

Camera Shutter.

St. Paul, Minn., asks:

> Want to know what part of a second the exposure of my M. P. camera is. The shutter revolves 840 times per minute and has a single opening approximately 1 x 1¾ inches. How may I obtain list of moving picture theaters in Minnesota?

Your camera shutter revolves once to each picture and normal speed is 16 × 60 = 960 per minute, instead of 840. You could, of course, run at 840, but that is too slow for best results. Running at normal speed (960) the shutter revolves in 1-16 of a second. The opening, as shown, roughly, without fine measurements, occupies about 1-10 of the circle, measuring at its center of diameter. Therefore the exposure would be about 1-16 ÷ 10 = 1-160 of a second. At 840 the exposure would be somewhat longer, of course. You might obtain a list of the theaters in Minnesota from film exchanges in that state and in large towns near the state line who supply Minnesota exhibitors, provided you explain to their satisfaction that the purpose for which you wish the names is not detrimental to their own interests.

Likes the Book.

Mr. H. W. Smith, Harrisburg, Pa., says he has received the new handbook and it is a great help. Says he has fixed his wall shutters as recommended in the book and they work fine. Is putting in a new screen which looks like aluminum and has a rough, pebbled surface. Wants to know my opinion of same. Says I have not said anything about drop in throw; that the other Harrisburg house has a throw of less than 100 feet with a 60-foot drop. Will send photo of "booth" if I want it.

No, Harrisburg, I don't want any pictures of "booths." If you send a picture of your operating room, why that is something else again. Glad to have that. Cannot express opinion as to curtain without having seen it, but the rough surface is correct. Drop in projection has been treated many times in the department, though not lately. You will also find it referred to on pages 331 and 332 of handbook. That 60 in 100 certainly is some drop, all right. Do they succeed in getting a sharp focus all over the screen?

Comments on the Films

Licensed

"THE VENGEANCE OF DURAND" (Vitagraph), Jan. 24.—This is a real feature. The author is Rex Beach. Quality shows all the way through the two reels. The picture is highly dramatic; there are many moments of deep suspense, and there are situations that stir the emotions. In the duel scene, when the artist drives a bullet into the body of the woman who has innocently caused the trouble, there are all the elements of tragedy. The woman has sought to stop the duel; at the moment the shots are exchanged she comes upon the ground and rushes in between the combatants. There is tragedy in the hand-to-hand encounter between the two men in later years, when the lamp is overturned and the house is set on fire, resulting in the death of Durand, the rescue of the daughter by the artist and his temporary loss of reason. There is deep pathos in the appeal of the orphaned girl, in love with the man who had accidentally killed her mother, and who had indirectly caused the death of her father, when she tries to restore his reason; other means failing, she sits at the piano and plays and sings "The Hours I Spent With Thee, Dear Heart, Are As a String of Pearls to Me." It is a rare situation—one to impress the beholder and to affect him. Space forbids enumeration of the carefully executed scenes. They are all splendidly done.

To Earle Williams, who portrayed the artist, falls the most of the work. He has risen to his fine opportunity and given us something unusual in pictured drama. So, also, has Edith Storey. It is difficult to realize that this is the same girl who only a year or two ago was doing work the exact antithesis of the part she plays here—the cowgirl of the plains, fearless in horsemanship. Her versatility is unique. Above all, she is an actress. Roger Lytton, who plays Durand, is strong throughout. Mrs. Swayne has the part of the mother; in this characterization she brings to bear all her experience and proven talent.

"SHE SHALL NOT KNOW" (Cines), Jan. 21.—A realistic story in which a young girl loses a chance to marry a desirable young man who, thinking that she has a dowry, has asked for her. The girl's mother is an invalid, and the girl and the family butler are keeping her from knowing that their money has been lost. The self-sacrificing faithfulness of this old servant is the picture's relief in its tragically unheroic situation. The mother thinks that she has provided for the dowry, so the girl tells the man that she doesn't love him. It is a good, instructive offering for Americans and furnishes an illuminating contrast to the way real people do things on this side of the water. The producer used farcical doings as a further relief, and these seem out of place in such a story; they don't help much. The acting is pretty natural for the most part.

"MA'S APRON STRINGS" (Vitagraph), Jan. 21.—A freshly humorous situation, very well played, makes this a good offering. It is set in a rural town in Maine and has two first rate characters—"Ernie," his mother's pride and joy, and "Ma" Smith, who has brought him up to be obedient before all things. Harry T. Morey plays "Ernie," and we were astonished as well as delighted at the way he convinced us that we were looking at a boy of about seventeen. His work is full of sympathy and insight and he makes the character natural by not playing for laughs. Kate Price's "Ma" was an easier role, and she makes it buttress "Ernie" perfectly. Dorothy Kelly plays the girl who sets "Ernie" free from the apron strings; wise girl, she makes a good choice. The producer, Frederick Thompson, has kept his whole story clearly out in the sunlight and has handled a goodly number of players well. There are moments when the action wears thin and seems not quite possible, but that is largely due to the authoress, Mary E. Blanchard, who has none the less built up her story to be a good photoplay.

"THE JOKE ON HOWLING WOLF" (Vitagraph), Jan. 22.—It could hardly be called anything but a small incident, an anecdote perfect for filling out a column in a newspaper, but Director Rollin S. Sturgeon has made a good character sketch picture of it that will be found entertaining. Eagle Eye plays a dirty, drunken, thieving Indian who wanted a "talking paper" recommendation and got one. It (the "talking paper") acted rather queerly and he lost faith in it and tried to get even with the man who gave it to him—the sheriff. It isn't pleasant for the sheriff while it lasts, but Howling Wolf is landed in jail, and the last we see of him he is tearing the "talking paper." The sheriff is George Stanley, and the wife is Anne Schaeffer. It is a very fair offering, well produced and photographed.

"JUST MISSED HIM"* (Eclipse), Jan. 22.—A trick film farce, perhaps a bit silly, but light and not without its amusing quality. The photography is perfect.

"THE MANCHESTER SHIP CANAL" (Eclipse), Jan. 22.—On the same reel is this very well photographed educational, which will be welcome, we are sure.

"THE POWER OF SLEEP" (Edison), Jan. 22.—James Oppenheim in this photoplay has drawn a man who is too strong to work, and it has been produced to make a queer character farce which made a good deal of laughter, but never caught the whole house. Burlesque characters are good with the gallery, but they are apt to miss some of the people downstairs. Frank A. Lion plays "Lazy Bill," who isn't working and won't help his thin, over-worked wife with the washing. He dreams that he is arrested for a saloon row and that his wife buys his services (convict labor) from the state. Being made to work, he now finds that he is too strong even to be kept behind iron bars, and some very farcical situations arise. Alice Washborn plays the wife; Elsie McLeod, the daughter; Edward Boulden, the daughter's queer beau; Arthur Housman, the village constable; Robert Milash, the bully; Percy Plunket, the judge, and Edward O'Connor, the guard. The photography is good.

"THE UNFILLED OATH" (Pathe), Jan. 22.—A story, not a picture, of life. It is clearly and smoothly told and entertains, but there is little power in such to stir emotions and little chance for sincere acting. It is a story of the revolution in Mexico, and the hero is "shot" at sunrise and buried. A girl had taken the bullets out, and when the insurrectos leave she digs him up. We see it, anyway, and they say seeing is believing. The photography gives some very good scenes.

"WHO IS THE SAVAGE?" (Lubin), Jan. 21.—We have never noticed Mary Ryan to better advantage than in this picture, which is by Romaine Fielding, and could be by no one else in the world. It is a farce played as earnestly as a tragedy, and though it will surely make the people sit up and wonder, it is a pronounced success. May we have more like it. After the laughter, which seemed fairly wrung from a not too willing audience, the consensus seemed to be that it was the queerest picture ever projected. It is queer—so queer that there were some who didn't like it wholly; they didn't know just how to enjoy it; it was almost recondite to them, but it made them laugh. The fun comes from the character played by Mary Ryan, the funniest kind of a real human being, and the disturbance that she manages to scare up makes us wish we were on the neighboring hilltop with a good field glass. We laughed so we wept even here. It is not a perfect picture. There are moments when the action seems overdrawn, and surely that automobile accident didn't help it; that wasn't either fresh or good. Belle Bennett deserves mention. A desirable release.

"A MATRIMONIAL DELUGE" (Selig), Jan. 21.—A farce in which a cowboy sends a matrimonial advertisement to a paper and gets a number of answers. He chooses one, but leaves the others where the boys can find them, and they see to it that all are properly answered, and many old maids appear at the same time. There is nothing very new in it, even the parts added by its author and producer, William Duncan. Myrtle Stedman and Florence Dye play the girls.

"THE THIRTEENTH MAN" (Essanay), Jan. 21.—This very same story was produced by the Imp company a year ago and more, and, if we remember rightly, it did it more skillfully. It is not a very strong picture. The trouble is that so much in it is inconsistent with so much else that the mind is kept from believing in it. Francis X. Bushman, Ruth Stonehouse, Raymond Whitney, Bryant Washburn and William Walters have roles. The photography is good.

"THE OLD OAKEN BUCKET" (Lubin), Jan. 23.—An imaginative incident founded on the life of the author of the old song makes a dramatic picture. The time, which is 1805; the setting, which is a newspaper office in Boston, with a few rural scenes to help; the characters, everything adds up to make it an unusually interesting offering. The producer has also taken care to make it seem real; it is astonishing that he didn't take a bit more care. There are several incongruities that were quite unnecessary in it. That iron pail and the modern machine-made pail weren't needed in the picture at all. Why did he put them in? An earthen jug would have done just as well. These are the only criticisms that we feel it necessary to make; the offering, aside from these, is fine. We don't know the author's name, but his work is very commendable and the story will surely hold strongly. The sets and costumes seem perfect, or almost so, and the whole is beautifully photographed. Harry Myers plays the hero, Woolworth, with intelligence; Peter Lang is just what was wanted for an easy-going old-time editor; Charles Arthur and Bartley McCullum seem typical men about town of that hard-drinking period. Mrs. Geo. Walters, the mother of the heroine, also should be mentioned and commended, as should Miss Wierman. It makes a picture more likely to be popular than most this week.

"THE TENDER-HEARTED BOY" (Biograph), Jan. 23.—If one is writing photoplays he can learn more from some of these Biographs than from any other company's pictures, because of the peculiar method that, consciously or otherwise, is followed in making them. The starting point seems to be in some original moral reflection—or impression might be better; for, while concrete, it is fluid enough not to hamper the dramatist in giving a pictorial expression to it. If one analyzes this story he will find it as deep as life; it will elude him in its meaning, even though he know more about it than the producer or author. It gives a tantalizing glimpse of humanity passing through a queer world; ours is a queer world. The tender-hearted boy hasn't had experience and finds that human wisdom is a very necessary virtue, for without it he finds that his kindliness is like a child in a winter storm without a house to shelter it. In this life, if one has anything precious, he must have a strong box to keep it in. Suggestive as the picture is, it isn't very brave, for it is made interesting to the many, though this, from the exhibitor's viewpoint, is a big merit. With several absorbingly interesting types and with a good story, clearly told and forcefully acted, it makes a desirable release.

"THE HALF BREED" (Pathe), Jan. 23.—A typical melodrama of the West, clearly developed though conventional. Whether we like this particular kind of story or not, we are bound to see that it is well done in every department—development, scene choosing, acting and photography.

"THE LIPTON CUP" (Selig), Jan. 20.—A slight love story fabricated to lead up to a yacht race which was prettily pictured but is not exciting. The picture's maker knew what was required of him and has made his story interesting and it is clearly told, save one scene, which we see through afterward. The photography is very good. Kathlyn Williams and Harold Lockwood play the leads. Robert E. Green plays a finely drawn old grandfather. Of the others in the cast, no one stands out, but all are fair. Lem Parker wrote and produced it.

"THE LAIRD OF McGILLICUDDY (Essanay), Jan. 23.—A farcical story in a college setting, giving Augustus Carney a chance to appear in Highland costume at a ball. He is the milkman and has been induced to come as a laird in order to show what a laird can be to Ruth Stonehouse, who has just broken her engagement with Billy Mason because she wants to marry "a nobleman with a great fortune." It is acted well, and though it never seemed to capture the whole audience, it made a good deal of laughter.

"A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM" (Selig), Jan. 23.—This story can hardly be called strong. It is that in which the little boy's mother is extravagant and frivolous, makes father work very hard to earn money enough to live on, goes out with other men, comes home with her breath pretty strong and, then in a touching ending, makes the pretty child keep the two parents from a separation. Lovely sets and photography, with good acting and a very pretty child, "Baby" Lillian Wade, do much in this instance. But even so, to those who see a good many pictures there is little freshness in it; it interests, but it never grips. M. B. Gardner, who is called the author, deserves very little credit. Lem B. Parker has made a picture full of artistic scenes. Kathlyn Williams plays in a number of pretty gowns—we heard some women remarking on this—and Harold Lockwood is in the role opposite to her.

"THE BOOMERANG" (Kalem), Jan. 22.—A rather sloppily acted picture. It deals with a harmful patent medicine which has made the fortune of a certain rich man. This man has a daughter, and on the picture's other side there is a poor man and wife who also have a little child. The poor man's child falls sick and her mother gives some of the poison to her; she nearly dies. At the same time the rich man's child finds a bottle and takes some; she also nearly dies. The two fathers are now brought together. There is very little to convince one of real life and little that is strong in the offering. It is well photographed.

"THE SUFFRAGETTE" (Selig), Jan. 24.—A farce comedy with some rough play, that will be liked in the gallery, and very little else. Cowboys dressed as Indians kidnap a lecturing suffragette and carry her off. No one would know Myrtle Steadman in her rig as this woman. William Duncan is the cowboy.

"THE AINUS OF JAPAN" (Selig), Jan. 24.—On the same reel is this instructive picture of one of the more primitive races of Japan. It will be noticed that these people have the same kind of eyebrows as we. The slant brow is to protect the eyes of people living for many generations in high altitudes, and it is the high backbone of Asia that has given so many of its natives a slant eyebrow.

"THE INSURANCE AGENT" (Lubin), Jan. 25.—A picture whose scenario ought to have made a first class farce. The idea is fresh, and at the same time is preposterous enough to be funny, and yet it is also human. The trouble with it seems to be that its leading man failed to get in his acting just the quality needed to make an audience sympathetic with the situation. There is some good acting, some fine pictures of both interiors and exteriors, and a good deal of likability in the situation. Arthur Johnson is the producer and takes the lead as the insurance agent. Lottie Briscoe plays the girl. Mrs. Daily, Charles Brandt and Howard Mitchell have important parts.

"THE ELUSIVE KISS" (Pathe), Jan. 25.—A bright and refreshing little farce-comedy that quite captured two large audiences and kept the houses full of laughter. It begins after a wedding, when the young people are interrupted time and again and plan to get away to the train without being noticed. They succeed in this, but get separated and are put to all kinds of annoying but amusing troubles before they find each other again. It is a picture full of freshness and unexpected happenings, a good many of which spring directly from the clever acting of the two leaders, Gwendoline I. Pates and Charles Arling, but especially of the former. The scenes and the photographs are very good, and we commend it all highly; but there is one point where it might have been made a bit funnier. It is when the two have met at the handcar. They are just about to bag the elusive kiss, when they see a train coming and lose again. They had been losing so often that if they had been regardless of danger at this point it would not have been so clearly foreseen, and every one would have sympathized.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY No. 5."—These topicals need no special pleading; they are always more than acceptable.

"THE MINER'S JUSTICE" (Selig), Jan. 27.—Rose L. Ellerbe, the authoress of this melodrama, has provided very little that is new. Her story follows the old kind of plot, but not very skillfully. It gives us the heavy villainess, but leaves the young hero a flabby ninny who is willing to destroy the mine of the man who was his benefactor, merely because the girl tells him to do it. Her reason is that he has "seen through her" and refused to let her get any money out of his protege, who has fallen in love with her. Even such a story as this can be made effective by careful handling. We have seen some that were exciting, but cannot call this very interesting. Its chief failure is that it tells too little. Henry McRae produced it. Frank Clark plays the old miner; Al E. Garcia, his young partner; Eugenie Besserer, the villainess, and Frank Richardson, the saloon keeper.

"THE TWO PURSES" (Vitagraph), Jan. 27.—On the Vitagraph list this picture is called "The Two Sets of Furs," but on the screen it has its proper title. It is a love story without much distinction and, though fairly well played, gives very slightly the appearance of true love; it hardly convinces. The authoress is Virginia Heckman, and her plot has this one drawback: we are not sure that the poor girl didn't leave the note from her landlady about her board bill on the table on purpose. She knew that the rich man was at the door and would come to the table where it lay in plain sight. Leah Baird's acting, in the role of the rich man's sister, was very good. Maurice Costello and Lillian Walker play the lovers intelligently. Kate Price is the landlady, a not very important role. Mr. Costello directed it.

"THE COKE INDUSTRY" (Vitagraph), Jan. 27.—This very interesting industrial on the same reel is a first class offering. It is well photographed and instructive.

"A MISAPPROPRIATED TURKEY" (Biograph), Jan. 27.—A clearly defined type of motion picture thriller. We are shown in one place some children playing with an infernal machine; they think it a clock. It is getting pretty close to the explosion time before any one discovers that a drunken man's plot has gone wrong, and now follows the dramatic race to reach the house of the poor woman in time to save her and her children. There is some noticeable slackening in the plot's workings, due to the fact that the children carried home the clock (it was inside of the turkey); yet it seems a very long race for the man trying to save them. He rides on a motorcycle, an automobile, and he runs. Children such as were shown couldn't travel far on foot, so the race fails to convince very strongly. It will make a very fair offering.

"THE GIRL OF THE SUNSET PASS" (Lubin), Jan. 27.—The scenario of this offering, as given in the synopsis, is better than the picture, but that is the author's weakness. He has called for the playing on the piano of "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and, since all music looks alike, the little touch of sentiment was lost. The story needed this, since it lacks atmosphere; there is too little to it. We have some pretty backgrounds and pretty scenes, but the author doesn't deserve much credit for anything very dramatic or new. Clara Williams plays two roles—that of the widow and that of her daughter when grown up. Walter Bridges plays the boy who falls in love with her. Edgar Jones and John Ince have roles.

"MAX JOINS THE GIANTS" (C. G. P. C.), Jan. 28.—This is not a baseball picture, or one having anything to do with the national game. The "giant" refers to physical stature. Max tries several times to attain the height demanded as a prerequisite for eligibility by the man Max had selected for a father-in-law. Through the aid of a friend he attains about eight feet in height, but unfortunately the deception is discovered and the conspirators are uncovered. It is all very funny.

"WHEN MARY GREW UP" (Vitagraph), Jan. 28.—Don't again say a woman can't hit that at which she aims. Clara Young, playing the tomboy, aims a half loaf of bread at the head of Flora Finch—and hits the mark. There is not a dull moment in this fine comedy. Mrs. Gordon, as the straight-laced aunt in her prim attire and great eyeglasses, is at her best. Miss Finch, as an extremely proper maid, is as funny as ever. Miss Young? She is improving steadily. There is no longer any ground for belief that she is indifferent or lacks enthusiasm. The finish is a sure laugh-maker.

"THE PART PLAYED BY AIR IN RESPIRATION" (C. G. P. C.), Jan. 24.—A picture that shows us that a fish or a mouse needs air in breathing. We are shown what happens when they are deprived of air. It is not a very comfortable offering for general shows.

"THE GENET" (C. G. P. C.), Jan. 24.—A natural history picture on the same reel, showing us the genet, an animal like a weasel. It is well photographed and interesting.

"THE CUB REPORTER'S TEMPTATION" (Kalem), Jan. 25.—A newspaper story with some very interesting views taken from the roof of a large building in New York City. These serve as the setting for a chase of a gang of second story men. The chief of the gang, pressed too hard by the police, throws down a chimney a bundle of bills, and these fall into the room of a cub reporter working for twelve a week. They are his temptation. The story fails to capture our attention as strongly as some of the recent Kalems, partly because it is not forcefully acted and partly because it wasn't written concretely; it is more like a newspaper account of the incident than like a story made effective by wisely choosing only what is necessary. There is some fine photography, and the story has a new incident. Earle Foxe plays the reporter; Alice Joyce, his wife; Tom Moore, a stool pigeon, and Matt B. Snider, Charles M. King and Richard Purdon have lesser roles.

"EVERYBODY'S DOING IT" (Vitagraph), Jan. 25.—A light and very slight farce, in which about twenty couples make love. Its object is to show how a crusty old bachelor fell in love himself after Florence Turner began on him.

"WHEN BOBBY FORGOT" (Vitagraph), Jan. 25.—Kenneth Casey and Adele de Garde led in this little story of children which will be acceptable. Kenneth plays a boy of about four, and while he does some very good acting, he doesn't get away with the small boy in his more childish moods. Adele de Garde is perfect in the role of the girl, which is her own always acceptable self. Kenneth, as an Indian, ties her to a tree and forgets to come to her rescue as the cowboy until her parents get worried. The offering is slight but pleasing.

"THE LORELEI" (Edison), Jan. 25.—A picture suggested by an old legend of the Rhine. It is set in modern life, was taken along the seashore, and is a tragic love story in which a foolish woman from the city makes sport with the heart of a simple fisherman. As the Lorelei drew the boatman to his destruction on the rocks, so she draws this man away from his worthy mate. The trouble with it is chiefly that motion pictures show this kind of story a bit too clearly to be really attractive. In this case the scenes are full of beauty—the beauty of the never resting sea and of its yeasty billows. The photography is only fair; we see the waves and the rocks well, but the faces are too often hidden so that the acting is lost. Some lovely double exposures are poorly framed, and so are made to seem artificial. The scene choosing is perfect. Laura Sawyer plays the woman, the daughter of an artist (Charles Sutton). Benjamin Wilson is the fisherman, and Jessie McAllister is the wife. The offering stands on its scenes.

"FALSE TO THEIR TRUST" (Edison), Jan. 24.—This is the seventh story of "What Happened to Mary." The chief characters are portrayed by Miss Fuller, Charles Ogle, Barry O'Moore and Harry Beaumont. The picture is interesting and contains strong situations.

"ONE ON WILLIE" (Kalem), Jan. 24.—Good comedy. There are amusing situations, participated in by Messrs. Brennan, Coxen and Barry and Ruth Roland.

"THE 'POSSUM HUNT" (Kalem), Jan. 24.—On the same reel are these scenes of a 'possum hunt, with a full retinue of hunters and a close-up view of the hunted.

"THE FARMER'S DAUGHTER" (Essanay), Jan. 24.—There is in this drama a fine picture of comradeship between father and son. "Dad's my pal," says the young man of the city, portrayed by Frank Bushman. The part of the father is taken by the late Harry Cashman. The story is of a young man automobiling in the country. An accident is the cause of a stay during recovery at the home of a farmer. There is a daughter. The nearly inevitable happens. The man asks the girl to elope with him to the city. She consents. There is a hitch in the marriage. An engagement seems to be in the way. The girl is left in the care of a mature woman friend. There is no suggestion of the slightest impropriety. The "dad" gets worked up over the situation and uncovers the fact that the prior engagement is founded upon "convenience." He tells his son to take the girl from the country. All ends very prettily. Much care has been given the production.

"MAKING A BASEBALL BUG" (Lubin), Jan. 24.—Comedy. The laugh comes at the finish, strong.

"PIZEN PETE" (Lubin), Jan. 24.—On the same reel is this burlesque of a bad man brought to grief by a timid soul rigged up as another bad man by a strolling actor. Both come to grief. The reel is all right.

"THE WIDOW'S MIGHT" (Vitagraph), Jan. 24.—Here is another Marsh Wilder-Bill Shea scream. Don't take our word for it. Go see it. If you have any Irish blood anywhere behind you you will go again. For Irish it is, all the way—even to a near wake, in which participated two of the real things in the way of weepers or criers. Shea is Wilder's good friend and tries to protect him from the wiles of the widow. Kate Price fills this line in the cast. The little fellow gets word from America of the fine opportunities on the police force. As he has money, he determines to go. Counting it, the widow sees him in the act as she peers through the window. She determines to marry the man and go with him. "Hide the money; here comes the widow," Marsh tells Shea. The widow, however, locks up her intended and takes the key. Through the keyhole Bill inserts a long-stemmed clay "comeallyer," and between the whiles he quaffs copious draughts of the "craytur" he lets fall into the bowl a little for the other fellow. This is all real fun. But it won't touch the wake. Bill gets his "dead one" by all but the keen eyes of the widow. Through the tears she sees the truth. She "busts up" the wake. In her might she gathers in her arms the struggling mite and in triumph bears him to her own home.

Independent

"GOLD IS NOT ALL" (Imp), Jan. 30.—This beautifully acted two-reel picture has already been given an extended review in these pages. King Baggot has several moments when he seems to be at his best and it is fine His whole impersonation of Carl, the mercurial pianist, who falls so deeply in love with the girl with a golden voice, is genuinely pleasing. This girl has been kept as a prisoner by her uncle, who likes to count her money, and her discovery by the three chums upstairs is a bit like Du Maurier's work. The whole picture faintly suggests "Trilby," although the suggestion grows weak in the second reel, where the interest, too, fags a little.

"WHITE MAN'S FIRE WATER" (Nestor), Jan. 29.—Nestor photography is a phrase that has been used perhaps not so often during the last few months as before that, and it means very much what Biograph photography means. If Nestor keeps up to the standard set by this picture Nestor camera work will take the lead from all. One or two of the scenes are not wholly fortunate as to the tinting, but for detail in both foreground and distance some of them seem almost unsurpassable. It was taken in a lovely country quite worthy the cameraman's care. The story has some freshness, is interesting and significant, but is not wholly plain; would have been better for an added sub-title or two. The acting is clear cut and shows that differentiation in the characters which can at times make even a commonplace story hold attention. Personally, the picture didn't grip us as it might those who haven't seen nearly all the Westerns. But it is a good offering on many counts and will surely be liked.

"A WINNING RUSE" (Imp), Feb. 1.—A boarding house farce, well played in part, but quite spoiled by the flat acting of one character (the girl's father), who apparently was unfitted for this kind of a role. One or two of the characters around the dining room table are very engaging, indeed. The photography is of high quality.

"DR. BUNION" (Imp), Feb. 1.—On the same reel is this extremely light but very short farce, in which King Baggot manages to convey a distinct and different character. There is too little to it outside of this to make it really count.

"A MAN'S WOMAN" (Mecca). Feb. 1.—Scenes of rough life in the Northwest are pictured in this offering that doesn't differ enough from other releases of the kind to be placed among the big pictures; yet it has much action and the photographs are unusually clear, though the print we saw has a peculiar tint not wholly successful. The gallery will probably like it.

"COWBOY SPORTS AND PASTIMES" (Bison-101), Feb. 1.—This surely is a big feature, for it is full of the most exciting action that now and then gives a big thrill, and there is also humor in it—a humor that from the nature of the case is wholly unconscious and natural. Ed. Gibson and Bertha Blanchard are featured in sensational riding on unbroken horses. Before the film is ended we see all kinds of riding, on steers, on mules, on burros. There is also some thrilling bull dogging and many other items that we feel sure will delight any audience looking for amusement. From the photographic viewpoint also it is in some respects marvelous. The cameraman has needed to twist his camera here and there, but has been very fortunate in being able to keep a running bull or a running horse in focus and keep it in the picture, too. We sincerely advise exhibitors to book this picture and to advertise it beforehand; it ought to pay. It's better than any circus we have seen, and in most things better than any other picture of its kind.

"THE AMERICAN NIECE" (Eclair, Paris), Feb. 2.—This is a comedy that was made for French people. For Americans it will also be a comedy, but an entirely different one, and it might be that, if a French and an American spectator saw it together, neither would know what the other was laughing over; but perhaps the average American would be too perplexed to thoroughly enjoy it. It depends on the French idea of what Americans are like, and not all will be quick to appreciate that fact, for it is not our own idea. The niece comes from America to visit her French uncle. She is peculiar, and especially in her ideas of money. She ruins her uncle, and then makes her father give him $20,000. As a piece of work it is very praiseworthy, indeed. The photography and the scenes are lovely, and as for the acting, it would be hard to commend it too highly; every player in it is a distinct and interesting individual. The heroine is, strange to say, both unconvincing and natural. We enjoyed it very much, but at first feared we weren't going to.

"BATHERS IN CEYLON" (Eclair, Paris), Feb. 2.—On the same reel with "The American Niece" is this animated educational that might have been aptly called "Splash. Splash." It gives some lively and spontaneously amusing glimpses taken along the streams of the big island near India. Its subjects are mostly of children in bathing, their wet skins shining like polished ebony in the sunlight. At the end there's a little scene taken in an elephant's Arcadia, and this, too, will be liked. The two on this reel will make a stronger appeal to cultured spectators than to those with less instruction, but ought to go fairly well anywhere.

"JUST BROWN'S LUCK" (Keystone), Feb. 3.—A comedy trifle located at Casa Verduga, near Los Angeles. Good outdoor scenes, but not a strong offering.

"THE ELITE BALL" (Keystone), Feb. 3.—This, on same reel with above, shows the entire Keystone company sumptuously attired in negro makeup at a colored ball. Sambo and Rufus quarrel over the belle of the occasion, and razors are exhibited freely. Moderately amusing.

"DETECTIVE KNOWALL ON THE TRAIL" (Lux), Jan. 24.—An eccentric farce that amuses by its absolute ridiculousness. The sleuth is called to trail an eloping couple. Trick camera work adds much to its laughter-making possibilities, which are high. Beside the real couple, two other young people, very eccentric, are introduced and add much to it. A commendable program lightener.

"THE MAGIC CARPET" (Lux), Jan. 24.—A laughable farce on the chase and tumble order, helped out by eccentric photography. It will make a first class program lightener.

"THEIR FIRST BABY" (Punch), Jan. 30.—A fairly amusing half-reel, in which a father is suspected of kidnapping his own baby. The child is impersonated by Little Herbert Rice.

"A WOULD-BE ROMEO" (Punch), Jan. 30.—Much better is this, on same reel with the above. A mash note sent to the conceited leading man leads him to a clandestine meeting with a colored girl. His friends have a good laugh at his expense. The photography is good.

"THE DOVE IN THE EAGLE'S NEST" (Thanhouser), Jan. 28.—A two-reel offering of the good old days of Robin Hood and his merry sort. The Eagle is a bandit, who inhabits a castle with his band and pillages upon wealthy merchants. The setting is well arranged, but the parts were not overly well cast. There is no particular pull upon the observer's interest in the first reel, but the action of the second comes up nicely and makes the whole offering a pleasing one. The galley slave's escape was especially good. The love story is well handled.

"THE PSYCHOLOGY OF FEAR" (Thanhouser), Jan. 31.—A conception not entirely new, but well acted and attractively pictured. The hero is terrorized at being in the dark, through a fright received as a child. Yet he overcomes his fear for the girl he loves and remains for days with her in the dark room while her eyes are being treated. A good photoplay of its type.

"HER NEPHEWS FROM LABRADOR" (Thanhouser), Jan. 26.—This ingenious mixture of humor and novelty will cause gasps of astonishment wherever shown. The young men from Labrador can't keep cool in the middle of a severe winter. They appear in shirt sleeves and carry palm leaf fans in zero weather. Later they skate on the ice, attired simply in bathing suits, and plunge repeatedly into the icy water. There is no faking in the picture, and it makes one wonder if the performers escaped pneumonia after this feat. It has to be seen to be believed. A very decided novelty.

"THE LATENT SPARK" (American), Jan. 27.—The feature of this film is seen when the hero jumps from one galloping horse to the back of another and pulls the villain to the ground, where they struggle together over the stolen mortgage money. The love story is well pictured, and as a whole the film is entertaining.

"WHEN THE LAST LEAF FELL" (Majestic), Jan. 28.—An old story worked up fairly well. The sick girl hopes her lover will return before the last leaf falls, and we see the false-hearted guardian knocking the leaves from the vine, one by one. One leaf remains to cheer her, and then her lover appears. Her recovery is immediate and the guardian is foiled.

"SAVED BY AIRSHIP" (Reliance), Jan. 29.—A banner offering of the truly exciting kind, in which Rodman Law plays the hero. In the preliminary scenes he is supposed to be a coward, but when the launch runs away with the girl and blows up, throwing her into the river, he gets on board the airship and jumps to her rescue. The rescue scene is a real thriller, and here, as well as in the fore part of the picture, the airship behaved admirably. An exceptional offering of its kind.

"SAVED FROM SIN" (Majestic), Jan. 26.—The wife dies and the bereaved husband decides to commit suicide. He buys a second-hand suit of clothes and goes down into the tenement section, where he becomes interested in two children. He has a change of heart and determines to adopt them and start life anew. The situations here are old and not handled with sufficient interest to arouse much feeling on the part of the observer.

"A WIFE'S BATTLE" (Reliance), Feb. 1.—An old story, better acted than usual, in which a man goes suddenly blind and his wife goes out to earn their living. The cloakroom scenes are good, and the advances of the designing employer well handled. The doctor's return of the $1,000 check seemed a little too much to be expected, since the operation was successful. A reel of average merit.

"WITH HER RIVAL'S HELP" (Crystal), Feb. 2.—A half-reel featuring Pearl White and Chester Barnett. Shows how one girl helps her rival marry the man she wanted herself. Well acted.

"BOX AND COX" (Crystal), Feb. 2.—This, on the same reel with above, shows an enterprising landlady renting one room to a day man and a night man. All goes well till one oversleeps and the other crawls into bed with him. Then trouble ensues, but it is patched up nicely. An amusing skit.

"THE ONE WHO HAD TO PAY" (Eclair), Jan. 28.—A strong offering, with numerous pathetic touches, showing how a young man in the city traded on his father's name for $2,000 a month. Alec Francis plays the part of the father. The son's speculations and dinner parties are depicted, also his escape to Europe with his friends after the crash comes. Then the father's pitiful plight is shown. The close is effective. An offering with a big theme.

"A ROMANCE OF THE NORTH WOODS" (Gem), Jan. 28.—The girl has a vision of her lover about to be hung for horse stealing, and rides madly to the rescue through heavy snow. Glen White and Sadie Weston play the leads. Some of the situations are too theatrical to carry conviction, but as a whole the offering is a passable one.

"HOW HE WON HER" (Powers), Jan. 29.—A "rube" story, with some crude character work in it, but some decidedly amusing spots. One of these is where Jake accidentally sticks his head in the window and kisses the old man by mistake. The prize fighting scenes are amusing. This class of picture pleases many people. The night attire of two of the men is somewhat too breezy.

"LITTLE MOTHER OF BLACK PINE TRAIL" (Eclair), Jan. 30.—The incidents in this are so crowded that they create some confusion in the mind of the observer at the beginning. It is a story of the Northwest and contains some good snow scenes and other outdoor effects. There is considerable melodrama in the film, and we see the black pine fall outside the door just as the couple is united after much trouble. We have seen this company to better advantage in other offerings.

"THE WILD FLOWER OF PINO MOUNTAIN (Frontier), Jan. 29.—The "life story" of a young girl, beginning with her babyhood, when her father is ruined in Wall Street and becomes a mountain recluse. Two brothers, the woodchoppers of Mira Canyon, fall in love with her. The scenes vary in interest; some are amusing, others very theatrical, and the one where the brothers go to the rescue of the dying man with drawn revolvers brings laughter of an undesirable kind. The duel with knives, while full of much conscious posing, holds the attention well.

"THE HIGHGRADERS" (Nestor), Jan. 31.—An offering with considerable plot, in which a swindling mining stock promoter and his friend are brought to justice. We would like to see the members of this company put a little more feeling in their work; they are too much given to simple posing, without striking into their work with sufficient animation. The barroom scene, in which the girl and the blind man hold up the thieving pair, is new and effective. The photography is good.

"THE RUGGED COAST" (Powers), Jan. 31.—A commendable reel, telling a strong seacoast story. The character work is good. Edwin August and Miss MacPherson play the leads. The village fool is an interesting type. The pictures of the kelp bed are good; the rescue of the hero by the girl was well devised and the sunset scene at the close is attractive. A good offering.

"A DINNER BELL ROMANCE" (Nestor), Jan. 27.—A mildly interesting story of rival boarding house keepers in a Western town who eventually marry and settle their difficulties.

"THE FOOTPATH TO HAPPINESS" (Nestor), Jan. 27.—This, on same reel with above, is an interesting oddity, of which more might have been made as a humorous offering. Only the feet of the two lovers appear until the last scene. It makes a novel half reel.

"MARKED CARDS" (Champion), Jan. 27.—This picture is a laughing tragedy. It is impossible to treat seriously. Audiences will not do so, but they will get many a laugh from its sheer absurdity. It purports to be melodrama of the deepest dye, but is simply unconscious burlesque. One oversight creates much amusement. The heroine crawls out of a window with black stockings on, and a few moments later she is seen climbing through the rocks, wearing white stockings. As a mere diversion this has points of interest.

"A DOUBLE DECEPTION" (Imp), Jan. 27.—A very good comedy, with a first class impersonation of one character by another. There are unexpected and amusing twists and the story works up to a good climax. There are no side-splitting situations, but they are all full of interest and laughable. A successful comedy.

"THE ANGELUS" (Rex), Jan. 30.—This production tells a strong, coherent story, and is characterized by an exquisite setting throughout. The first scene is a reproduction of Millet's famous painting, "The Angelus," in which two characters pause in their labors in the field to listen to the evening bell. The old mission atmosphere predominates through the entire film, and the photography is for the most part good. The jealousy of the sister's husband seemed a little unnatural, but was but slightly overdrawn. A good offering.

"THE LABYRINTH" (Rex), Feb. 2.—Toward the latter half this film begins to claim the attention closely. It has many faults of construction, one of which is an automobile accident, which had better been left to the imagination, but there is good work in the reel. The part of the girl is pleasing, and that of the old Jew is a fine impersonation throughout. The close is very nicely handled.

"SUNNY SMITH" (Victor), Jan. 24.—Showing the manner in which a young hobo is introduced into a boarding house by a jealous man and becomes "star" boarder. The story is entertaining, and the boarding house scenes typical. The sepia and blue tints are a little dark at times. Owen Moore and Fritzie Burnett play the leads.

"TICKETS, PLEASE" (Lux), Feb. 7.—A rather broad farce. Sensitive people will count it just a bit vulgar, and truly much of it seems to have been made especially for the gallery. It is lively; people will watch it even if they see little in it to laugh over.

"WONDERFUL FRUITS" (Lux), Feb. 7.—No one with any sense of humor could possibly see this picture without laughing. It is on the same reel with the above and opens with a view of some animated and humorous pears. We are also shown some almost human onions, and many other strange fruits perform for our amusement. A very clever offering. It will be liked greatly everywhere.

"THE WRONG BOX" (Solax), Jan. 29.—A new punch has here been given to an old situation simply by looking at it freshly. The flowers are sent to the tailor to be pressed, and the trousers to the girl's house, with a loving request to wear them for her lover's sake. A farce tramp is now introduced in a way that is natural enough and is used to bring the situation around to its ending in a novel way. It has been carefully conducted, is cleverly acted and makes a very entertaining offering that will be liked. The photography is fair.

"FAINT HEART NEVER WON FAIR LADY" (Lux), Jan. 31.—The first impression that one gets from this farce is that it has been seen before, but this is not in itself a disqualification, for it is one of those farces lively, if a bit rough, in which trick photography and clever scene preparation accomplish the illusion of most marvelous happenings. Such pictures keep the eyes of even the hardened picture fan "glued to the screen."

"THE SCHEMING WOMAN" (Solax), Jan. 31.—One finds plenty to praise in this picture, though the story behind it is rather trite and very melodramatic. In it Darwin Karr plays a rich man, and Blanch Cornwall a scheming woman who succeeds in poisoning his mind toward the ingenue, his wife, played by pretty Marion Swayne. The changing of a loving letter so that it will convey to the husband an entirely opposite meaning is a better incident that the dropping of it afterward so that he will find it; it is also better than the husband's treatment of his wife merely on account of this, which didn't amount to much after all. The acting is commendable, though not especially noteworthy. Some of the scenes are not in perfect focus, but are clear enough and are not without beauty. As a whole, it will be liked, is entertaining.

"SAY, UNCLE!" (Gaumont), Feb. 4.—A clever sub-title renders one trite situation in this farce (which as a whole is fresh) quite acceptable. Such side play can safely be used in a picture like this; on one side it adds mirth without harming the impression on the other. The picture has a very slight story behind it, but is cleverly made, with first class acting and very pretty sets, and though it is not substantial, can be depended upon to give entertainment. The photographs are of high order.

"FRENCH FLEET MANEUVERS" (Gaumont), Feb. 4.—On the same reel this picture of the French Mediterranean battle fleet adds much to the value of the offering as a whole. It has much that is thrilling in it, though the photographs seem a bit foggy.

'DOGS WILL BE DOGS" (Gaumont), Feb. 6.—Produced as an ordinary farce, in which a man with a big dog follows and makes love to a girl with a little dog, it has been given an entirely new taste by the titles, which make the two dogs, not the people, the leaders. These titles are written in mock Shakespearean language, and of course, as coming from the dogs, are bombastic enough to be extremely funny. The trouble with it is that the animals now and then act in the opposite direction from the sentiments given to them, and this makes us lose touch with the thing we are laughing over. We commend the idea, though; it is something quite new. As for the farce, it is full of fresh atmosphere given to it by its new settings and backgrounds, which are perfectly photographed.

"DEEP SEA SHELLFISH" (Gaumont), Feb. 6.—On the same reel is a very instructive natural history subject. It is a good idea to include such films as this with farces; they give substance to the offerings.

Kinemacolor

"MAN'S BEST FRIEND" (Kinemacolor).—An interesting picture, showing nine breeds of dogs. Included in these are Yorkshire terriers, Great Danes, St. Bernards, collies, Yiououks, Pekinese, Japs, Poms and Samoyedes.

"LAUNCHING OF THE NEW YORK" (Kinemacolor).—This picture of the recent launching of the battleship New York at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, while short, will be of considerable interest. It is to be regretted that but one camera was used on the occasion.

"A VISIT TO JUNGFRAU" (Kinemacolor):—A series of mountain pictures of marvelous beauty. The first views are of a balloon ascension, with the Jungfrau in the distance. Following these are pictures of several of the principal Alpine peaks. There are also views of American tourists passing through a tunnel of ice in order to reach the top of the Jungfrau. Another remarkable picture is that of the Aletsch glacier. One of the best pictures of all is that of the valley of Lauterbrunnen, with Interlaken in the far distance.

"THAT HOUSE THAT JACK BUILT" (Kinemacolor).—This is a two-reel comedy that will amuse the lovers of slap-stick stuff. The young man, in order to obtain the hand of the girl he loves, agrees to build his own house. He does so, but the house fails to stand when put to use. The climax comes in a heavy rainstorm. The troubled affairs of the young couple are finally straightened out by the building of a real home by the father of the bride.

The special commission of twelve women appointed by Mayor Haynes, of Minneapolis, to investigate the condition of child employes in local picture shows and theaters in its final report praises the general character of the pictures, but severely criticises many of the songs. They find conditions good, with some exceptions. "The class of pictures," says the report, "may not always be in the best of taste, but we have seen only a few that we consider vicious and many that were pleasing and instructive."

"At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs."

By George Blaisdell.

IN a recent issue of the Dramatic Mirror my friend Gates, in an interesting article on "Picture Criticism and Its Purposes," says: "By reason of his position, a critic, whether of the screen or the stage, should refrain from close association with those whom he is expected to indirectly deal with in his writings." From a standpoint of absolute impartiality to all players there is much in this. There are, however, many angles to be considered. A film writer deliberately avoiding the society of players loses many sidelights of a work into which he cannot get too good an insight. Criticism should above all be just and justified. Undoubtedly many players have been criticised for doing those things they were ordered to do, compelled to do. Obviously under these circumstances blame placed upon the player constitutes a distinct injury.

Close association with players and also directors brings to the attention of a critic many of the difficulties and disadvantages under which an actor and producer are compelled at times to work. Again, fraternization with players has material advantages. Frequently it is the means of removing prejudice. It is all very well to say a critic should have no dislikes even if he do have likes. It is an indisputable fact, however, that everyone will feel a certain antipathy to some of the players on the screen. No one can "like" every one. It may even be the "color of the hair." Personal contact has been known to remove these intangible antipathies—to reveal a sensible, modest, earnest artist and manly man, far from a poseur and every inch a good fellow. Surely this is worth while.

Two of the licensed releases of Friday, January 24, contained players who have passed over the Great Divide in Essanay's "The Farmer's Daughter." Harry Cashman did fine work, playing father to Frank Bushman's son. In Vitagraph's "The Widow's Might" there was a "bit" by the late George Ober, in the role of a physician. How uncanny it is? And what a strange art this kinematography is? These posthumous portrayals bring sharply to mind the truth in the exclamation of the Blackfeet chief when he grasped the significance of the moving picture: "Why, it makes dead men live!"

An incident in Boonton, N. J., last week, inspires a news writer to coin the word "moviegram." It seems that in the absence at a picture show of the parents of sixteen-year-old Alma Brower, a burglar got into their house and severely mauled the girl. Her grandfather found her unconscious and telephoned the theater. The quick-witted proprietor threw on the screen a message that the Browers were wanted at home at once. The Sun remarks that "Hereafter any physician or other patron expecting a call during the performance may leave his name at the ticket booth and the call will be flashed on the screen." Perhaps this is simply bringing up to date a very ancient form of advertising to a community that a new Sawbones has hung out his shingle in the village. Exhibitors probably will be very careful as to how they interrupt their program for the sake of giving publicity. The Boonton exhibitor, however, deserves praise for his keenness.

There has arrived in the United States for a tour in vaudeville the famous Russian dancer, Mlle. Napierkowska. She is more than a great dancer. She is a great picture actress. Mlle. Napierkowska, a year or two ago, appeared in several Pathe films, and with marked success. Possibly the more notable appearance was with the splendid actor Ravet in "Robert, the Silent." Mlle. Napierkowska portrayed the dancing gypsy girl who charmed the brooding duke. The writer would walk a little further to again see "Robert, the Silent" than any single-reel drama he now recalls.

Word comes from Jacksonville that the Gene Gauntier Feature Players have completed two plays—a single reel and a three-reel feature—and already started another three-reel drama. This represents the work of just a month. Miss Gauntier, who besides her work as leading woman, is also writer and scenario editor, is said to be very busy.

So Eclair is to make some O. Henry pictures. Selig did one late last year—"Friends in San Rosario"—and it was fairly good comedy-drama. Right here is ventured the assertion that many admirers of the famous short-story writer are going to be badly disappointed in the filming of his tales. The strength of O. Henry was in description. He could so embellish the most ordinary theme as to transform it into a classic. His "punch" was in the last sentence—and what a way he had of putting over his climax! By all means give us the pictures, but let no one expect too much. The film may reproduce whatever of action O. Henry put into his stories; it absolutely cannot touch the lure of his language.

Walter Rosenberg is trying an experiment in admission price in his latest acquisition, the Park Theater, at Columbus Circle. Beginning January 20, he set 25 cents as the cost of a ticket to the entire orchestra floor in the evening. The result the first week was all he had hoped for. Advertising space is being used in the daily press. The writer has noticed one "ad" which costs $70 a week. It is Mr. Rosenberg's aim to bring to his new house those who have not heretofore been picturegoers. In his favor are several strong factors. First there is a beautiful house—great marble staircases and all the appointments and decorations of an up-to-date theater. The ticket office stays where it was. There will be no sidewalk booth. The program includes three first runs. There is an excellent orchestra. The projection is from the first balcony. The only variations from the picture program are two singers—a man and a woman. They are both good. Their work is not "illustrated." Lastly, the house is situated in a neighborhood of the well-to-do.

Bernard M. Corbett, for the last three years connected with the machine department of the Thomas A. Edison, Inc., has resigned from the service of that corporation to enter another line of business. Mr. Corbett is considering several propositions in connection with the motion picture industry, and expects to make an alliance within the next few days.

MONTGOMERY ENTERTAINS PLAYERS.

The visiting motion picture players, now wintering in Jacksonville, Fla., were given a surprise in the way of an impromptu entertainment, by Montgomery, the moving picture man, Monday evening, January the 20th. After the regular performance the actors and actorines now working in the city, and several professional and newspaper men, were given a private exhibition of the five reel subject "From the Manger to the Cross."

There was no time to send out invitations, but as Montgomery's Grand theater is the headquarters for all the visiting photo players it was an easy matter. As they assembled for their nightly chat or happened to pass by, they were informed of the treat that awaited them, and from the number in attendance it could be readily seen that nearly all of them heard of the affair in some manner. The telephones were kept busv, for when some one would happen to be told of it, they would immediately remember some member of his or her company who had remained at home, and phone for them. In this manner the merry little party was assembled.

At 10.30 p. m. the regular performance was at an end, and after the pay patrons had passed out the dead head troopers trooped into the theater. The lights were extinguished, yet through the darkness one could dimly see a number of white coated and white aproned persons carrying something down the center aisle toward the orchestra pit. When all was quiet and still the silence was broken by the well known voice of Mr. Montgomery, and in a few well chosen words he invited the guests to partake of the refreshments that were served. At this moment the lights flashed on, revealing a table laden with the finest of tropical delicacies.

After enjoying the repast the party once more seated themselves and the picture was shown. The five reel subject was greatly entertaining and wonderfully instructive, and at its conclusion every one present voted it a decidedly clever piece of work. Then with profound thanks to the host for his kindness and hospitality, for which, however, he is noted, with a great deal of handshaking and good-byes, the guests departed for their homes. No one but Montgomery the moving picture man would have thought of doing a thing like this, and no one could have carried it out in the successful manner he did.

Those present were: A. D. Hotaling, Mae Hotely, Walter H. Stull, Mrs. W. H. Stull, Ray McKee, Fred Chaston, Geo. Nicholls, Mrs. Geo. Nicholls, Earl Metcalf, Guy Coombs, Stone V. Boyd, Bob Vignola, Alice Hollister, Gene Gauntier, Jack Clark, Arthur Donaldson, John Vincent, Sydney Olcott, Allen Farnham, Martin Stone, Hiram Danley, Henry Bard, Mrs. Snow, Miss Ruth Snow, Miss Helen Lynn, Robt. Walker, Mrs. Wm. West, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Green, Herman Obrock, Mrs. Early, Mr. and Mrs. Berry, Master Geo. Nicholls, Mr. Raymond, Jack Andrews and many others.

EIGHTH CONVENTION OF OHIO STATE LEAGUE.

A Most Successful Meeting, and Several Important Measures, a State Censor Board Bill Among Them, Passed Upon.

By James S. McQuade.

THE convention committee of Columbus No. 4 is to be congratulated heartily on the arrangements made for the eighth state convention of Ohio and on the harmonious and happy manner in which the proceedings were conducted. There were no soreheads to be found on the rounds made of the convention attendance, and everybody was imbued with the spirit of zeal and of tolerance.

When President Neff several weeks ago advised the officers of Columbus No. 4 that the coming state convention was to be held in Columbus they immediately protested, on the plea that they had not the funds at their disposal to conduct the convention on a befitting scale. But, with his initiative, President Neff had also the resourcefulness to point out how the thing could be accomplished, and the boys set to work. How they succeeded every one who attended the convention knows.

On the convention committee were J. A. Maddox, president of Local No. 4 and manager of the Colonial Theater; W. R. Wilson, the newly elected state treasurer and owner of the Schiller Theater; Max Stern, treasurer of Local No. 4 and owner of the Exhibit Theater; J. W. Swain, manager of the Pastime and Hippodrome, and Clem Kerr, the indefatigable hustler from Dayton, Ohio.

A pleasing feature of the management of the state convention was the care taken to entertain lady visitors during their stay. Many compliments were heard on all sides from members of the fair sex who graced the gathering by their presence. The entertainment provided on Tuesday evening to vary the monotony of executive sessions was keenly appreciated and enjoyed by the large audience that filled the Southern banquet hall. The Euterpean chorus of thirty ladies with well-trained voices, the members of which nearly all hold medals received in various parts of the country for concert and solo work, made a big hit. Little Baby Fadley created enthusiasm in several singing numbers. During the evening "Sheridan's Ride" (101-Bison), "The Open Road" (Reliance), a Broncho Billy film (Essanay), a Kalem and a Biograph were run off and were highly applauded. All the leading makes of machines were included in the demonstrations.

The convention was opened about 1:30 P. M. in the Southern Hotel convention hall. This was an open session and everybody was invited. An address of welcome was given by Mayor George Karb of Columbus, who was introduced by the president of Columbus Local No. 4, J. A. Maddox. Mayor Karb stated that he was a great friend of moving pictures and that he had never found any perplexing problems to be solved concerning them. He esteemed it a great pleasure and a high privilege to have the opportunity of taking part in the annual convention assembled. He commended moving picture exhibitors on their high calling and considered that they should feel proud of furnishing entertainment of pleasing and educational merit to so many million people throughout the country. He assured those present that he and his family attended picture theaters many times weekly. He was satisfied that the exhibitors of Columbus would not think of exhibiting a picture that they would not show to their own daughters and wives. It was to their credit that they sought a capable and satisfactory censorship of pictures. "The keys of the city are thrown away; make yourselves at home and have a good time," said the Mayor in conclusion.

President Neff, in a happy response, said that the Mayor reminded him that his own father was born in Ohio in 1806, and that he also had been born in Ohio, and that all Ohioans were proud of Mayor Karb. "That Columbus will have a square deal means much to the business in Columbus and everywhere," said Mr. Neff. "The purpose of this gathering is to make moving picture history that will live for many years to come. Ohio is the parent organization, and the entire membership of the M. P. E. L. of America is watching what Ohio will do. Our motto and aim is for the uplift of the moving picture. It has suffered from abuse and ridicule, from unjust laws and undeserved criticism. Every member of our league is doing his utmost to make the picture worthy of the best support of our best citizens.

"On September 12th, 1910, the first meeting was held in this city, with only eleven exhibitors present. The second meeting was also held here, and one of the members had died, leaving only ten. Today thirty-three states belong to the organization. At this state meeting of Ohio we have representatives present from California, Texas, Missouri, Michigan, Nebraska, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, West Virginia and other states, sixteen states in all being represented. They have come to deliberate with Ohio members and try and get the best measures passed for the moving picture."

A rising vote of thanks was then given Mayor Karb for his hearty welcome, after which the meeting adjourned for fifteen minutes, until the opening of the first executive session.

Officers Elected.

During the executive sessions of Tuesday, Ohio state officers were elected; also the auditing and grievance committees, the committee on recommendation, and the Ohio delegates and alternates to the coming national convention in New York.

The new Ohio state officers are: M. A. Neff, president; O. B. Weaver, Dayton, first vice-president; Dr. Walter Prentice, Toledo, second vice-president; John H. Broomhall, Hamilton, secretary; W. R. Wilson, Columbus, treasurer, and W. A. Pittis, Conneaut, national vice-president.

The members of the auditing committee are: Max Stearn, Columbus; W. J. Slimm, Cleveland, and W. A. Pittis, Conneaut.

On the grievance committee are: S. E. Morris, Cleveland; J. C. Glassmeyer, Cincinnati, and C. Reark, Sandusky.

The members of the committee on recommendation are: J. M. Kaufman, Gallipolis; C. M. Christenson, Cleveland; Clem Kerr, Dayton; George D. Sprague, Bellaire, and W. C. Kitt, Cincinnati.

Delegates to National Convention.

Following are the Ohio delegates to the national convention in New York City next summer: J. M. Kaufman, Gallipolis; H. E. Vesal, Ada; G. D. Sprague, Bellaire; George Schenker, Lorain; F. M. Kenney, Cleveland; S. E. Morris, Cleveland; Mrs. Louise Schmidt, Cleveland; Lem S. Miller, Cincinnati; Otto Ludeking, Cincinnati; J. A. Maddox, Columbus; Max Stearn, Columbus; Clem Kerr, Dayton; L. W. Bettis, Toledo, and F. R. Reichert, Port Clinton.

The alternates to the national convention are as follows: John J. Huss, Cincinnati; Fred Botts, Cincinnati; W. C. Kitt, Cincinnati; W. J. Slimm, Cleveland; Ed. Kohl, Cleveland; W. Raynor, Dayton; J. C. Johnson, Troy; W. D. Clark, Marion; F. H. Stoup, Delphos; F. H. Tynes, Portsmouth; H. B. Locks, Springfield; W. D. Gandy, Lima; A. C. Cook, Steubenville, and John Gallagher, Newark.

Telegrams received from the following were read: From the board of directors of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, conveying best wishes for a successful convention; from P. S. McMahon, vice-president of the Connecticut league, offering congratulations and regrets because of inability to attend; from W. S. Kasper of Cleveland, expressing regrets over not being able to be present, and from E. C. Preston, vice-president of the Nebraska league, expressing regrets at being detained at home to prepare bills for the legislature.

The censor board bill for the state of Ohio was taken up at the executive session called to order at 7 P. M. Tuesday, and was continued over until the first executive session on Wednesday morning, at 9:30 o'clock. After the bill was thoroughly discussed it was accepted as read. Following is the official text of the censor board bill as carried at the convention on January 21st:

Official Draft of Censor Board Bill.

Section 1. It is hereby declared unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to exhibit or show any motion picture within the state of Ohio, unless it shall have been passed, approved and stamped by the Ohio State Censor Board or the National Congress of Censors, as hereinafter provided.

Section 2. There is hereby created a Board known as the Ohio State Censor Board, consisting of three members to be appointed by the Governor for terms of 2, 3 and 4 years.

Section 3. It shall be the duty of such Board to examine and censor all motion picture films to be exhibited and displayed in the state of Ohio, which shall be submitted to them, upon the payment to said Board of one dollar for each film to be censored.

Section 4. All and only such films, as are, in the judgment and discretion of said Board, of a moral, amusing or educational character, and not of an indecent subject, nor representing lust, shall be passed and approved by such Board, and shall be stamped or designated in an appropriate manner and consecutively numbered that the same may be projected upon the screen preceding the picture.

Section 5. A majority of the members of said Board shall constitute a quorum and in regular session may exercise all of the powers and duties of the Board.

During the absence or incapacitation of any member of said Board, the Governor may appoint a member to fill such temporary or permanent vacancy.

Section 6. By a majority vote of the State Censor Board hereby created, they may work in conjunction with Censor Boards of other States as a National Censor Congress and the action of said Congress in approving or rejecting films shall be considered as the action of said Board and so designated, and have the same force and effect as if approved by the Board hereby created in separate session.

Section 7. When films have been passed and approved by the Ohio State Censor Board or the National Censor Congress and stamped and numbered by the Board hereby created, as provided for herein, they may be shown and exhibited within the state of Ohio without restriction or interference, county or state officers to the contrary notwithstanding.

Section 8. Such censor board shall, before the 10th day of each month make a complete report of the amount of money received by them for censoring picture films and shall pay all money so received into the general revenue fund of the Ohio State Treasury.

Section 9. Each member of said Board of Examiners shall receive an annual salary of fifteen hundred dollars, except the Chairman who shall receive an annual salary of two thousand dollars. The Secretary of such Board shall receive an annual salary of twelve hundred dollars. All salaries hereunder and all expenses necessary to maintain said Board and carrying into effect the purposes thereof shall be paid out of the general revenue fund of the state of Ohio which, however, shall not exceed in any one year the revenue produced in censoring films.

Section 10. Any person violating any of these provisions of this Act shall, upon the conviction thereof, be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than five hundred dollars or imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than one year or both for each offense.

Other Bills Proposed.

Another bill touching on higher and more rigorous examinations for moving picture operators was read and discussed. It provides that all moving picture operators must be at least 18 years old and must secure 75 per cent. of the marks required in the passing of an examination. Each operator is allowed an apprentice, who will be paid by the manager. This bill will be introduced to the legislature at the same time as the censor board bill.

Another bill, relating to Sunday opening in Ohio, was next read and discussed in executive session. While theaters are opened on Sundays in various cities in Ohio, there is an effort made in this bill to prevent undue discrimination.

The following motions were then moved and passed: A state convention can be called only at the discretion of the state president, who has the power to name the place and the date; that the attorney of the state league be instructed to draw up a bill for presentation to the legislature, making the use of motors in connection with projecting machines legal throughout the state of Ohio.

Governor's Reception.

A recess was then taken for a march of all the exhibitors present to the State Capitol to pay respects to Governor J. M. Cox. The Governor stood in the corridor, under the great dome of the building with President Neff. As the long line passed the Governor, each exhibitor was introduced by Mr. Neff, the Governor offering his left hand, owing to the fact that his right had been already pretty well used at several other meetings during the day. As the exhibitors filed out of the building, they were arranged on the steps fronting the Capitol and photographs were taken. The convention afterwards was called to order at 1:30, and continued in executive session until 4:30, when it adjourned.

The Banquet, Wednesday Evening.

The banquet, in the large banquet hall of the Southern Hotel, was both notable and impressive. At the main table sat President Neff, Governor Cox, the Hon. Frank Monett, formerly attorney-general of the State; John J. Lentz, ex-congressman, and Charles Swayne, speaker of the State House of Representatives. Mr. Neff was toastmaster.

In the course of his most felicitous speech, the Governor created much enthusiasm, which found vent in long continued applause at the telling points. In referring to the censor board bill, the Governor said: "You bid the State full welcome, instead of antagonizing the State. If you see the importance of regulating your own business, you will also see the importance of regulating other businesses. During the summer, in Toledo, I spoke to some of you of a State censorship board for moving pictures. I hope before another summer passes, that we will have a practical, sane and sensible censorship board in Ohio."

Speaker Charles Swayne, of Hamilton County, was next called upon by the toastmaster. He asserted that moving picture exhibitors furnished the chief amusement for the people of the age. The character of the individuals can often be judged by what they like, and sometimes they are what their entertainments make them. Wholesome things beget wholesome thought and a better spirit. Exhibitors are held responsible for wrong pictures. An efficient censorship of films is what is needed. The people hope for visions of better things through pictures.

The Hon. Frank S. Monett followed. He began by complimenting the league on selecting Mr. Neff as president, both State and national. He praised Mr. Neff for his ability in planning, initiative and intuition. He called this age an age of illustration, and referred to the marvelous power of the cartoon in black and white. "The craving for education by the eye is tremendous," said Mr. Monett. He referred to the magnificent paintings in the Louvre, Paris, but reminded his hearers that these paintings were only imitations of nature. He placed the great fine art, sculpture, in the same class. Neither have motion; but pictures show life action. He dwelt on the great things in store for future generations, among them speaking pictures, and declared that history and learning would in the future be thrown on the canvas by photography and the voice.

Leo Kaufmann, national vice-president for California, in the course of his remarks, extended an invitation to the Panama Exposition of 1915, in San Francisco.

George H. Wiley, national vice-president for Missouri, during his address, stated that it is sometimes difficult to show exhibitors that it is a protection for them to join the league. He, in turn, wished his hearers to remember that St. Louis was out for the national convention of the M. P. E. L. of America, in 1914.

Joe Brandt, of the Universal, gave it as his opinion that the censor board bill for Ohio was good, and hoped that it would accomplish much good. On behalf of all manufacturers, he asked the aid and co-operation of exhibitors which would enable manufacturers to avoid great loss. The great expense incurred in making moving pictures might even ruin some manufacturers, if indiscreet censorship were followed. The hearty co-operation of exhibitors with manufacturers would do, in this respect, much to solve the difficulty.

The Monkey Nest Quartet rendered several vocal numbers, which were well received.

John J. Lentz was the next speaker and dwelt chiefly on the Sunday opening of picture theaters. "Science and civilization will travel hand in hand with the moving picture; you cannot stop it," was one of his pithy epigrams. "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath," was another which he drew from the New Testament.

The Monkey Nest Quartet then sang several enjoyable numbers, and President Neff closed by thanking all who contributed to the great success of the convention.

Meeting of National Vice-Presidents.

A conference of the national vice-presidents was called to order by President Neff, at 9:30 a. m., Thursday, January 23, on the 7th floor of the Southern Hotel, in the special assembly hall. The meeting lasted all day, and all routine business was taken up and thoroughly disposed of. Much time was devoted to the discussion of plans for the approaching national convention in New York City. President Neff named the following members of the national executive committee: M. A. Neff, chairman; C. M. Christenson, of Cleveland, secretary; J. J. Rieder, of Jackson, Mich., treasurer; O. L. Blumenthal, Newark, N. J., and G. H. Wiley, Kansas City, Mo.

The following national vice-presidents were present at the convention: Thos. A. Brown, Iowa; E. Wayne Martin, Kansas; Geo. H. Wiley, Missouri; J. E. Schlank, Nebraska; D. E. Morris, Ohio; F. J. Rembusch, Indiana; Leo Kaufmann, California; L. F. Blumenthal, New Jersey; T. P. Finnegan, Texas; Orene Parker, Kentucky; F. J. Herrington, Pennsylvania; G. H. Thomas, West Virginia; C. H. Phillips, Wisconsin; J. J. Rieder, Michigan, treasurer national board; M. A. Neff, president, and C. M. Christenson, secretary.

Exhibitors Present.

The following exhibitors were registered: C. C. Haddox, the Empress, Kenton; Sam Bullock, Erie Amusement Company, Cleveland; Leslie M. Beths, the Colonial, Toledo; Charles W. Snyder, the Parsons, Columbus; D. G. H. Widor, the Romfort, Chicago, Ill.; F. S. Sumsford, the Bide-a-wee, Columbus; H. R. Ashbrook, Toledo; Mrs. F. G. Wylie, the New Theater, Columbus; C. L. Passmore, the Palace, Dayton; J. E. Doeble, W. Carrollton; P. S. Rayburg, the Globe, Dayton; R. C. Newell, the Wonder, Columbus; Grant Snyder, the Empress, Dayton; G. W. C. Kolb, Cincinnati; Ted J. ### Exhibits Given Much Attention.

The exhibits at the convention were given their full share of attention. The representatives advised me that their efforts were well repaid, and all of them look forward to results of a gratifying character.

The Rudolph Wurlitzer Company was unusually well represented. Thos. P. Clancy, general sales manager at Cincinnati; L. S. Lockwood, inventor of the new Style H automatic musical instrument for moving picture theaters, from the factory at North Tonawanda, N. Y.; T. P. Grimes, of the Cleveland office; L. O. Hunt, of the Columbus office, and Dr. Rumfort, demonstrator, were in attendance. The Wurlitzer automatic musical instruments were at all times surrounded by crowds of exhibitors and created wide interest.

The Nicholas Power Company was represented by F. W. Swett and Will C. Smith, of New York; John A. Koman was on hand for the Enterprise Optical Company (Motiograph); the strenuous Eric Morison, secretary and treasurer of the American Moving Picture Machine Company, was never weary in demonstrating the merits of the Standard Machine, and J. E. Robin held up his end, with ever smiling front, for the Precision Machine Company (Simplex).

The Newman Manufacturing Company, of Cincinnati, had an attractive exhibit of brass poster frames, from ½-sheet to 3-sheet size, on the mezzanine floor, in charge of the urbane S. J. Newman; the C. R. Baird Company, of New York, was represented by Mr. Baird; the Fredericks' auto-rewinder by F. E. Fredericks, of Port Clinton, Ohio; the Exhibitors' Mutual Supply Company, of Cleveland, by Ed Cole, president and general manager, and Leo E. Dwyer, of Columbus, buttonholed exhibitors while he demonstrated his ability as an expert in rebuilding and repairing picture projecting machines.

Film Manufacturers Represented.

Joe Brandt, the untiring hustler for Reliance, made himself known to everybody, both through the columns of the Universal Weekly and in person. The Universal Weekly had two editions during the convention and its contents were eagerly read. "Joe" provided canes, decorated with Universal banners, for the parade to the Capitol, and covered the hat bands of the Columbus Battalion Band, so that they read Universal Band. A unique memento of the convention was also furnished by him to every visitor. This was in the form of a globe mounted on a neat stand, representing the earth. A miniature American flag hung from a spar fixed to the base, and, in another aperture in the base, a tiny card bore the legend, "Demand that Universal program." "Joe" was sure some pumpkin at the convention.

C. Lang Cobb, Jr., represented Reliance, and was always the center of an interested crowd. Great applause greeted the exhibition of the two-reel Reliance subjct, "The Open Road," which has a good story, full of interest, and is well produced.

H. Charnas, the Cleveland manager for Warner's Features, was a popular mixer with exhibitors, and did good work for his company. I. W. McMahan, of the Cincinnati Buckeye Film Company, made one of the hits of the convention by presenting every exhibitor with a handsome carnation. The Toledo Film Exchange Company was represented by D. J. Chatkin, and E. H. Klinck, traveling representative.

The newspaper men present were W. J. Page, special representative of the Billboard; Mr. Carr, local representative of that publication; L. Haase, of Motography, and J. S. McQuade, of the Moving Picture World.

Convention Notes.

During a conversation with Dr. J. M. Rhodes, president of the Indiana State League, Indianapolis, he told me that the affairs of his home league are in a very flourishing condition. It was only a short time ago that the treasury was very low, now it has $1,600 to its credit. He was proud to say that the members of the Indiana League are now full of vim and are vying with Ohio in doing things. He stated that the members of the Indiana League are working hand in hand with the Ohio State League, and that they are gratified to see the Ohio boys going ahead to improve the business. Other members of the Indiana League in attendance at the convention were F. J. Rembusch, vice-president of the Indiana League, and A. C. Zaring, the State treasurer. All three men are heart and soul with the members of the Ohio League in their policies.

L. J. Wittman, the man who is "dotty" on well selected programs, and who owns the Star, Hamilton, Ohio, was enthusiastic in his praise of the Ohio convention, which he pronounced well worthy of the standing and enterprise of the Buckeye State. "The Moving Picture World is my Bible," said Mr. Wittman.

I had a chat with W. T. Bettis, president of the Toledo branch of the M. P. E. L. of America, during which he informed me that he has already made plans for one of the finest and most expensive picture theaters in the United States, if not in the world. Mr. Bettis showed me an art colored drawing of the front of his new house. It is a model of architectural art. Mr. Bettis in describing the interior decorations gave me the impression that they will afford a study in beautiful and harmonious decorative design. It will surprise many to learn that the site on which the new theater will be built is worth over $250,000. That amount was offered for the property and was refused. The estimate for the erection of the new theater is $90,000. The furnishings of the house have been estimated at $10,000, and besides, $10,000 more will be laid out for a great pipe organ. This gives an aggregate value—for the site, theater, furnishings and organ—of $360,000. Mr. Bettis is one of our most enterprising exhibitors, and is always zealous for the good name and progress of moving pictures. He is an ardent believer in educational pictures, and strongly advocates their frequent use by all exhibitors, so that a demand for them will be made that will ensure the requisite profits to manufacturers for their production. He deplores the fact that exhibitors have permitted educational films to be on the wane, owing to the lack of demand for them. He believes that all intelligent exhibitors can so educate their patrons that they will welcome the presentation of an educational film. Mr. and Mrs. Bettis made a tour of Europe last summer, during which they learned a great deal about the moving picture. "One day, while taking a walk through the streets of Paris, and afterwards touring in an automobile, my wife asked me what I was laughing at," said Mr. Bettis. "Well," I replied, "I was just thinking of with what little concern we try to make ourselves intelligible to a gendarme, and with what little surprise we view all the sights and scenes around us in a strange country. Doesn't it strike you that it is singular for us to see all these things and undergo all these experiences without being unusually affected? Why is it that nothing seems strange to us? We have seen and experienced them all before. But where? Why, in our own moving picture theater at home! There we have seen the streets of Paris, the gendarmes and the people passing to and fro, together with this building and that building, and all are so familiar to us, that we are no more excited than if we were walking in the streets of our own cities at home." This little talk of Mr. Bettis gives one a better idea of the great educational value of moving pictures.

JEFFERSON COUNTY EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE.

The Exhibitors of Jefferson County, Texas, representing theaters in Port Arthur and Beaumont, have formed the Jefferson County Motion Picture Exhibitors League. John I. Pittman is president, Pat Lenox, vice-president, J. C. Clemmons, secretary and treasurer. The organization started out with eight charter members and is affiliated with the Texas State League.

EXHIBITORS' BALL AT PHILADELPHIA.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Philadelphia, will give a ball on March 26th, at Turngemeinde Hall in that city. Exhibitors throughout the Eastern part of Pennsylvania are cooperating with the Philadelphia local and everything points to a successful event. It has been arranged to run a special train from New York to accommodate New York exhibitors and photoplay artists who desire to attend the function. An elaborate souvenir program is being compiled. One of the big features of the ball will be the attendance of a great number of photoplay artists. The entire Lubin Company is expected to be present, and a large number of leading players from New York studios will also be there.

"Snow White" (Powers).

By George Blaisdell.

IN these three reels the Powers company has produced a charming fairy story. It will renew to the memory of older minds a well-remembered tale of their childhood. It is without doubt one of the finest picture plays that has been produced for matinee audiences—and there will be many in an evening gathering who will heartily appreciate it. Primarily will the little ones be delighted, for other little ones have important parts to play in this fairy story. They play them, too—play them with spirit and vim, and, best of all, with intelligence. There are seven of these small folks, and they are led by Matty and Early, best known to picturegoers as the "Powers Kids." The leading character is Elsie Albert. She is a winsome Snow White, and her sweetness of manner and her naturalness will especially appeal to the women of an audience. She plays her part for the part's sake, obliterating herself. She creates the illusion that marks the work of the good performer. There is a competent cast—the king and queen, pages and courtiers, and all the train that follows in the wake of a court, even to the jester, of whom, perhaps, more might have been made.

Scene from "Snow White" (Powers).

In the opening scenes there are fine views of a castle and of expansive balconies, with charming backgrounds. Some of these latter are unusually good. The larger interiors throughout the piece hardly compare with the outdoor settings, which are excellent. Some of these are big fields, one in particular, where the seven little men come trooping over the knolls at the close of their day's work in the mines. The character of the queen is well sustained. It is a hard part, and, of course, an unpopular one.

Scene from "Snow White" (Powers).

The story opens in the anteroom of the royal bedchamber. The good queen, Snow White's mother, dies. We don't witness the death scene—that is behind drawn curtains—for which all will be duly thankful. A year later the king brings home a new queen, the wicked queen, Snow White's stepmother. There is an elaborate ceremonial of investiture. Snow White is presented to her new mother. She is very sad. The queen sees in writing in her magic mirror a message to the effect that Snow White will be prettier than she. The queen is in a jealous rage. The king leaving for a short period, he confides to his queen the care of Snow White. No sooner is the king gone than the wicked queen, under threat of beheading, compels a hunter to carry Snow White to the woods and slay her. The hunter weakens at the crucial momet and sets Snow White free. The hunter kills a rabbit, and in the blood of the slaughtered animal dips his handkerchief, which he shows to the queen as a proof that he has carried out his mission.

Snow White, from the edge of the woods, sees a cottage in the distance. To this little house she goes. Finding it apparently vacant, she enters and searches through the rooms. In the fireplace a pot is boiling. The table is spread. The beds are made. Snow White is drowsy. She lies on one of the beds and falls asleep.

Up on the hill seven little men are at work in a mine. At the close of the day they stop their labor and in military order march across the fields to their little home. As they enter they discover that someone has been there. The leader searches the rooms and finds Snow White. He summons his mates and together they awaken the sleeper. Snow White agrees to keep house for the little folks. One of them gives up his bed to Snow White and he sleeps in a chair.

The queen through her mirror has learned that the hunter has played her false and that Snow White still lives. The next day in the absence of the seven men she goes in disguise to the hut. She gives to Snow White a poisoned comb. The queen departs. Snow White falls unconscious. When the dwarfs return they soon discover the trouble and remove the comb, restoring Snow White.

The next day the queen returns and finds the door of the hut locked. In spite of the warnings of the dwarfs the wicked woman is finally admitted by Snow White. The queen induces the girl to eat of a poisoned apple. Snow White falls dead. The dwarfs returning at night bemoan the loss of their princess.

The queen through her mirror learns of the death of Snow White. The glass tells her: "Oh, queen, there is none in the land so beautiful as thee." The king mourns for his lost daughter.

A prince now comes upon the scene. From a hill he sees a strange sight. He dismounts and approaches a casket of glass, surrounded by seven mourning little men. He leans over the casket and kisses the face of the still figure within. Immediately it sits up straight. It is Snow White.

The final scenes are of the king and queen at the head of their court assembling to greet a new prince and his beautiful bride. Of course, it is the prince and Snow White. The wicked queen is exposed and turned out. The king welcomes his restored daughter and her prince and gives the two his blessing. And—of course—they live happy ever after.

"Saved in Mid-Air."

Three-Reel Warner's Features.

In every well regulated melodrama there must be "papers" and the searching for these "papers" is always the most interesting part. "Saved In Mid-Air" is a genuine old-fashioned, superheated melodrama which, however, may be shown with perfect safety to children as well as to adults. Contrary to the run of these melodramatic features, "Saved In Mid-Air" is entirely free from objectionable features. The photography in these films is of the high standard of excellence; the acting of the principals leaves nothing to be desired, and the settings are well chosen. The action takes place in a Northern city of Europe, and the many glimpses we get of life in the foreign places count not among the least of the merits of this production.

The plot described briefly is as follows: Two wicked trusts are in deadly competition and the final victory depends upon the possession of certain "papers." These "papers" are sewn up in the lining of a coat belonging to and worn by the secretary of one of the trusts. The other trust dispatches its female detective to run down and get possession of these "papers." Womanlike the detective falls in love with the young man and declines to carry out her mission. Before, however, she has time to send the letter to her trust she discovers that the young man, who has the "papers," is in love with another woman and her jealousy is aroused. She hides herself in the room of the young man. A letter is placed on his desk while he is out and the young woman gets hold of the letter. The letter invites him to meet his associates at a certain time and place for further consultation. The woman alters the letter by inserting another time and another place of meeting.

Unaware of the deception practiced upon him, the young man opens the letter and presents himself at the meeting place indicated in the letter by the jealous woman. There, instead of his friends, he meets the directors of the hostile trust who proceed to "truss" him up and throw him into a room in an abandoned building after getting the "papers." The young woman, who has aroused the female detective's jealousy and who is in love with the man, is alarmed to find him absent from his hotel and, after a long and thorough search in which she climbs over various buildings, she discovers his place of imprisonment. She smuggles a note to him through the bars of the prison, telling him to break into the floor below and assuring him that she will come to his rescue. The young man complies with this direction and the heroic woman makes fast a rope, one end of which she throws to her lover, who makes it fast to his window sill. The rope is now drawn very tightly, and the young woman walks on the rope at a height of probably a thousand feet from her station to the room of her lover. She returns with him and supports him on the dizzy height as they together walk on the rope towards safety.

Scene from "Saved in Mid-Air" (Warner's Features).

The female detective, however, has discovered what is going on and with the aid of the henchmen of the hostile trust she burns the rope just as the lover and the heroine are about to reach safety. The rope breaks and the lover and the heroine still holding fast, fall from a height of several hundred feet. Happily neither of them sustains any fatal injury and, while the members of the hostile trust are on the spot getting ready to overcome the young woman and her lover, the friends of the latter rush in in automobiles and effect a happy rescue.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC MISSION IN CHINA (Eclair).

There will soon be released by the Eclair Company one of those educational films depicting foreign types, which kind of films are coming into popular favor once more. "A Roman Catholic Mission in China" is a hand-colored Eclair subject of great interest. The Mission offers a reward for all fondling babies that are delivered to it. These infants are raised at the Mission and educated to the Roman Catholic faith. There are scenes in which dozens of these shock-headed, squint-eyed babies furnish considerable amusement by the simplicity of their childish movements, especially when they eat with their long chop sticks, which they handle very deftly. There are scenes showing children of more advanced years at their studies, learning the Chinese language from native teachers and English from the Nuns. One scene shows the advanced girl pupils making lace, and another shows the boys making mats from rice straw. The children are also to be seen at religious devotion, singing hymns, saying prayers, etc. Oriental children are very cute and sometimes very funny. The picture is one reel in length and will be a sure fire hit with women and children anywhere.

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN IN TOWN.

Francis X. Bushman, formerly leading man of the Essanay company, and an unusually successful and popular photoplayer, is in New York. He visited the Screen Club on Sunday and on Monday and was given a hearty greeting by the members present.

The Love Chase.

A Sugar-Coated Scenic in Two Parts, by the Eclair Company, Covering Various Points of Interest.

ONE good way to make a scenic is to write an interesting story which brings in the geographical points of interest in a logical way. It has been done on a number of occasions before, and we hope it will be done many times again. "The Love Chase" is a scenic picture with a plot, similar in nature to the one Edison did some years ago entitled, "A Honeymoon at Niagara." Pictures like this seldom fail to please, because they have a double interest.

Miss Barbara Tennant and Mr. Lamar Johnson have a pair of good parts to play in this comedy, and they do them extremely well. Miss Tennant never looked prettier than she does in this film; it is quite noticeable that a year in pictures has done wonders for her. The stage settings for all the interiors are exceptionally good. The groupings are cleverly handled, and at no time does the stage appear crowded, an item that deserves mention in these days of crowding, where ensemble scenes bear close resemblance to the interior of an elevator at noon hour.

Scene from "The Love Chase" (Eclair).

The story is all about a blase young man whom the world has ceased to interest. He, having tasted all the joys of life, is finally surfeited with them. His mother is anxious to get him married off to a delightful young lady who arrives on a visit as the picture opens. The son refuses to meet the girl and it becomes necessary for those in the secret to set a trap for him. His would-be fiancee gets a position as stenographer in this young man's office, and when he sees her he becomes smitten with her charms immediately.

The girl pretends to have been insulted by his attentions and leaves a note that she is going away to Niagara Falls. He follows her there, and there are scenes around the Falls which are doubly interesting. She hastens back to his office in the Singer Building, New York City. With a friend she watches for his automobile by looking out the window to the street below. In this manner some excellent panoramas of New York City are shown, one in particular, showing the recently completed Woolworth Building, is particularly interesting. The Woolworth Building is the highest building in the world and, as the picture affords a definite idea of the immense size of this structure, it will be something long to be remembered, especially by those who do not reside around New York City.

There are other points of interest which are introduced in plausible ways, and the picture ends by the young couple meeting at last and becoming engaged. Incidental to the picture there is an adventure with a tiger in which the blase young man rescues the pretty damsel from the clutches of this ferocious beast, who is as tame as any cat and who has been borrowed from an animal trainer. The picture throughout is a lively one and distinctly a comedy, one that will probably set the pace for any bill upon which it is placed.

Foreign Trade Notes

BRITISH NOTES.

From Our Own Representative.

At last and after a much advertised preparation, Reinhardt's famous wordless play, "The Miracle," is being shown at the Royal Opera, Covent Garden. Obviously the success of the play at Olympia last winter is some assurance of the success of the film, but some of the Metropolitan daily journals go even further and have the temerity to assert that the pictorial production eclipses the stage setting. Considering the attitude of several newspapers (bound, of course, in faithful allegiance to the legitimate stage) towards cinematography in general, such unexpected statements come rather as an unexpected but nevertheless pleasant surprise to the trade. A week ago a small company of journalists and reviewers were invited to see the film run through. The stage surrounding the screen was decorated to represent the façade of the ancient cathedral. The plot of the play, which I summarized last week, will now be familiar to all and it should suffice to here mention that the leading roles are taken by the actual actors who appeared at Olympia. Madame Carmi as the Madonna, Florence Winston as the erring nun, and Mr. Douglas Payne as the knight, are particularly worthy of mention. In a picture play of this kind as, for comparison, in "Christopher Columbus," much depends upon the orchestra and chorus. At Covent Garden special attention has been paid to the latter, which consists of 200 picked singers. The orchestra has also been specially augmented for the production and is conducted by no other but the distinguished musician, Herr Schirmer, who assisted Humperdinck to compose the original score. As for the film itself the technique is very fine both in photography and finish, while the coloring of such a length must have been a herculean task for someone. Messrs. A. D. Rosenthal, W. Hyman and John Menchen are the producers and most of the scenes have been photographed in the vicinity of Vienna.

Only a street or two away we have the London Opera House, popularly known up west as "Oscar's Elephant." The first rehearsal here was held the other day and now the show will consist of a glorified program of animated pictures and variety turns. The image projected from the operating box is stated to be the largest in the United Kingdom.

A Midlands clergyman makes a novel suggestion for the adoption of the cinema to the requirements of the historian. "I expect," he states, "any day to hear of the appointment of an official cinematographer to the government who will record all great historical events on the film for the use of posterity and file them in the British Museum for the use of our 'historiographers' to come. If the Church of England appointed an official cinematographer merely to record events of interest to church work, it would be a greater agent in knitting churchmen together than are the numerous parish magazines which endeavor to do the work to-day. An interchange of films organized by a central office and shown at parish halls throughout the country would be quite a simple institution and would command audiences not only of women and children, as is the case so often to-day, but of the young men, who, as all church workers recognize, are the most difficult class to keep in touch with religious matters."

Taking the cue from the film depicting ex-President Roosevelt's life during the recent American elections, several English political organizations are adopting this means of propaganda. Notably the Socialist party.

Mr. Charles Urban, of Kinemacolor fame and exceptionally well known in the Eastern States of America, is giving 500 metropolitan children a free treat at his London show—The Scala Theater. He will give them "Santa Claus" in colors and will afterwards impersonate the children's god to the extent of presenting each of his guests with toys and sweets. By the way, Mr. Urban has improved and considerably economized his process and he now states that Kinemacolor films can be shown with the same light as ordinary monochrome films. The Panama Canal films showing the construction of the "big ditch" are the next on the program at the Scala.

Sir George and Lady Alexander opened the New Gallery Kinema in Regent Street, which is a unique distinction for any Kinema show in this country. Sir George thinks that the stage actor can learn much from the cinema film in expression and acting. He further stated that if the young student of drama graduated in acting under competent producers of picture plays a really good result should be accomplished. Mr. T. A. Walsh, the general manager of Gaumont's here, holds similar views. "Whilst most of the English actors and actresses are good elocutionists and have the true dramatic instinct, they are far behind the Americans and the French in the art of expressive gesture," he thinks.

The picture player popularity contest finds use in many forms to enliven the program of the suburban and provincial theaters here. The manager of a London show offered a prize to the patron who could identify the photoplayer whose portrait he had printed on the cover of his program. Of course everybody guessed and guessed right, so the manager was in something of a dilemma. Eventually lots were drawn for the prize. The portrait for identification was of Miss Ruth Stonehouse, of the Essanay Company. It is opportune to mention that throughout the departed year American players have maintained uncontested their popularity in the eyes of the English audience. Maurice Costello and John Bunny have to divide the laurels in the male section, whilst amongst the fair artistes, Dorothy Bellew, of the Clarendon Company, holds her own against all comers. Kathlyn Williams is a close second, while to continue the sporting parlance, Florence Turner, is the first runner up.

The Thanhouser film, "The Cry of the Children," used, I believe, in the States, officially as a revelation of the condition of child labor, is being used on a similar campaign in this country.

Mr. A. Woods, the proprietor of the American rights of "The Miracle," will arrive in New York to initiate his arrangements, the same time as this letter.

The ingenious short length film known as "Selig's Hats Off" has been exceedingly popular here. Mr. E. H. Montagu, their agent, announces he has sold recently over 500 copies.

That this is an age of specialization is evinced from the novel manner in which some theater managers here feature for three days or a week a program of films by one maker. In Leeds a "Flying A Week" has just been held in competition with a rival show that was running a "Bison 101" program. "All British" weeks have been quite common here both in London and Manchester during the latter half of the past year, and now in extension of the idea and ostensibly to popularize the cinema amongst the Hibernian community, the Kalem Company through their British representatives, the Moving Picture Sales Agency, are advising managers to try an Irish week. Perhaps the idea may appeal to Western managers. Why not St. Patrick's week in March.

The well known Tyler Industries Company is entering upon a new era in its existence. The name Walter Tyler is as well known as any in the industry and it is the parent company which Mr. Tyler began that is incorporating the following: The Cosmopolitan Film Company, Globe Film Company, Messrs. Holton & Co., the Tyler Apparatus Company, and the General Film Company. The new issue of stock is to the extent of £50,000 and the business of the incorporated companies, who are the British representatives of many American firms, will be carried on under the name of Tyler's Industries, Parent Company, Ltd. The only agency that has been relinguished is that of the Eclair Film Company (Paris), who are opening their own office here.

American manufacturers have at least to be thankful for one thing from the British showman and that is the friendly, not to say complimentary attitude taken by them towards the American film. Here the program of the most lowly slum theater is incomplete without a cowboy or a Western subject. In Germany, however, all foreign films, I am told, particularly American and English, are tobooed as much as possible by the police authorities. The defense is that they encourage emigration and are unpatriotic, or that they strengthen the admiration of the average German for things English and American. The latest move of the Berlin chief-of-police is to prohibit the admission of children under 14 years of age to picture theaters.

The exceedingly popular light opera of Straus, "The Merry Widow," has been filmed and is being produced with all the original music at a Liverpool theater. In extension of this idea I have heard a whisper that a very prominent American financier, who is closely identified with a New York picture theater syndicate, is actively engaged in this country in collaboration with an eminent musician in the production of a series of films illustrative of such musical masterpieces as "The Flying Dutchman," "Orpheus," "Tristan and Isolde," and "Electra." As yet the scheme is in its infancy, but from the meagre information I have been able to obtain, it is not yet definitely settled whether the films will be taken here or in Germany. The settings are to be most elaborate and quite in keeping with the importance of the music, but the real novel feature of the enterprise will be the system of hiring the films to orchestral societies in the country. The difficulty with such organizations, of which there are hundreds here, has been the expense of producing on their own account such works as those mentioned. Now there should be no reason why the cinema should not effectively dispose of the obstacle once and for all.

Mr. Fred Martin, the manager of the Monopol Film Company, is well known to America and after his handling of the first 5,000-footer, "The Mysteries of Paris," needs no introduction to showmen here. His newest feature is "Satan," and in describing this in an interview in a daily newspaper he asserts that the day of the short film is doomed. Many managers not only here, but across the pond, will, I think, concur that Mr. Martin is jumping too much to conclusions. There are several shows in London alone where a film over 1,500 feet is never screened.

Handle turning, as it affects the kinema-camera, is threatened with extinction. Last Wednesday, Mr. Cherry Kearton demonstrated a new invention whereby a small compressed air engine may be fixed in the mechanism of the camera. A tube of compressed air is fixed in position, the catch released and the motion is then automatic. When the tube is exhausted it can be easily detached and another slipped in just as easy as the changing of the spool boxes.

Mr. Paul Rainey, the hunter-kinematographer, who, by the way, is an American, has just exhibited a collection of pictures known as the "African Hunt" films. They are indeed a remarkable series showing striking adventures in the jungle.

LITTLE MARY HOLDS DAILY RECEPTION.

Mary Pickford plays the blind girl Juliet in "A Good Little Devil," David Belasco's production of the beautiful fairy play by Mme. Rostand and her son. The sweet personality and beautiful face of this clever little actress are familiar all over the world to patrons of the film shows, by whom she is intimately known as "Little Mary" and "the Maude Adams of the movies." Wherever she has appeared in the new Belasco success she has been besieged on the streets, in department stores, in fact everywhere by thousands of admirers, especially women and young girls. After every matinee performance crowds gather at the stage door of the Republic Theater waiting for her to come out. This picture shows "Little Mary" just as she is leaving Ford's Theater, Baltimore, after a matinee of "A Good Little Devil." David Belasco stands just behind

QUESTIONS WE CANNOT ANSWER.

A reader in Vermont wants our opinion of the following. In a recent release by a well known foreign film manufacturer, the events are supposed to have taken place about 66 B. C., but one of the settings shows a bust of Napoleon. In another release by a well known American manufacturer, a man is supposed to remain on a desert island for several years in Robinson Crusoe style and yet when picked up, he is as clean shaven as if he had just stepped out of the barber's. Our captious critic remarks that the "eats" must have been pretty poor if he could not even grow a beard in that length of time. A third recent picture showed a man starting out in a little skiff to rescue a girl from a burning boat, but when he reaches the boat and effects the rescue he is in a regular life-saving boat We are glad our friend has no more puzzles at this time and we respectfully pass these few along to the film producers for consideration.

"A WHITE ROSE" (Pathe).

A wife haunted by "The Green Eyed Monster" is a situation which will develop a great number of laughs at her expense, provided the story is properly handled. This, then, is sufficient to assure the success of a Pathe comedy entitled, "A White Rose," which will be released February 5th.

Mabel Barlow, a young widow, to avoid meeting a suitor of her father's choosing, goes to visit her friend, the newly-married Mrs. Jefferson. The widow gives Mrs. Jefferson her opinion of men, in general saying she will never marry again, as no man can be trusted. Mrs. Jefferson hotly denies this allegation, at least, insofar as her husband is concerned. Mabel dares her to test her husband's faithfulness, finally goading Mrs. Jefferson into allowing the test. Jefferson, the man on trial, while at his lunch, meets an old and long lost acquaintance, Captain Harding. Jefferson and Harding go from the restaurant to Jefferson's home, where the former finds a note asking him to meet a young lady admirer in the park and to wear a white rose for identification. Jefferson shows the letter to Harding, saying "I can't go, I'm married." Harding is anxious to satisfy his curiosity and he goes to keep the appointment. When he has gone Jefferson discovers that the Captain has forgotten the white rose, gets one from a bouquet in the library and starts after Harding. Mrs. Jefferson sees her husband going out with the white rose and her faith in him collapses. Harding meets the mysterious young lady, who immediately gives him her opinion of a married man who flirts. Perplexed, Harding returns to Jefferson's home. He finds Mrs. Jefferson preparing for the return to mother and upbraiding her husband before she goes. He is in a bad way, but the situation clears when Captain Harding enters, wearing a White Rose.

Scene from "A White Rose" (Pathe).

Careful directing of clever players make this film one of exceptional merit, and every exhibitor should see that it is on his program. It will be released on February 5th.

"BRONCHO BILLY'S LAST DEED" (Essanay).

This, one of the most pathetic Western stories ever released by Essanay, is portrayed in an exceptionally beautiful and clever manner.

Broncho Billy is seen smoking a cigar in a general store in the Far West. An Indian enters, and tries to force his attentions on a young girl. The Indian is ejected by Broncho. The Indian swears revenge. That same day, old Cy Jenners and his wife receive a letter from the bank, stating that their note must be paid at once. Further, it states that Jenners' son is a rich man and to get the money from him. Jenners and his wife call on their son, Clarence, and are told by the latter that he will give no assistance whatsoever. They leave their son's home and find Broncho Billy lying in the road, suffering from a bullet wound in his chest, inflicted by the Indian. They carry Broncho to their humble home and dress his wound. The following day Clarence Jenners calls on his old and feeble parents and tells them he has made arrangements for them to go to the poor house. Broncho Billy, in the next room, overhears the conversation. He gets up from the big chair he has been placed in and walks to young Jenners' home. He pleads with Jenners to come to the assistance of his aged father. Young Jenners orders Broncho Billy from the house. Broncho returns to Cy Jenners' home. He is about to enter the house when he is presented with a note. He opens it and reads, that should he carry out his threat to shoot young Jenners, the latter will pay a big reward for his capture. Broncho Billy goes to the doctor and is informed that he will not be able to live more than two days. Broncho Billy shoots young Jenners. That afternoon Broncho sees a reward notice of $5,000 for his capture. He goes to old Cy Jenners' home, tells the former that he must take him to the sheriff's office and claim the reward. This he does. The old man is given the sack of gold and Broncho Billy is thrown into jail.

Scene from "Broncho Billy's Last Deed" (Essanay).

Mr. G. M. Anderson, in his world-wide character creation of Broncho Billy, plays the part in a noble, aristocratic and genteel manner. Brinsley Shaw as Clarence Jenners, demonstrates his acting ability.

This production is booked for release February 8th.

"THE LOST NOTE" (Lubin).

There is an important argument illustrated in this picture; it is the danger of circumstancial evidence. The circumstances point very directly to the poor innocent girl and, but for a providential and accidental discovery, might have wrecked a sweet and worthy life. The picture stars Ormi Hawley, one of the valuable players of the Lubin stock, and will add to the prestige of this excellent actress.

Jennie, a poor girl, and Mrs. Manning, her blind mother, are ignored by the people in the village in which they live and the mother and daughter are reduced to abject poverty. The girl tries to get more food on credit, but is refused. The new minister, who has just arrived in town, tries to help the girl by giving her money. The girl being proud refuses the money. After two futile attempts, the minister drops a five dollar bill purposely where the girl will find it. Jennie finds it quells pride for mother's sake, and buys food with the rest of the money after the settlement of her bills. The interest heightens when the landlord loses a five dollar bill near Mr. Manning's home while calling for rent. The poor girl is arrested for stealing. She, however, is rescued from the village jail by the minister and his sister. They take Jennie to her home, where the money belonging to the landlord is found by Billy, the town half-wit, who has befriended the girl and who accompanies her home with the minister and sister. The girl's innocence is proven, the landlord's lost money is recovered. The girl's new found friends leave mother and daughter happy.

Scene from "The Lost Note" (Lubin).

LILY'S DAY (Eclair).

Lily is a little girl and the picture shows one day in her life, from the time she arises until she goes to bed at night. The innocence of childhood with all its lack of self-consciousness is here set forth. The purity of mind on the part of the sweet little girl relieves it of any suggestiveness. Lily takes her morning bath accompanied by her toy duck and her little boat. She dresses and goes to the garden to pick flowers. She is seen at her meals and later retiring at night. By her prettiness and sweetness of character this little girl holds the interest of the spectator throughout the reel, which is beautifully colored, and one that will surely delight every woman and child.

COMMISSIONER EDWARDS VISITS FILM SUPPLY.

A most interested visitor to the projection room of the Film Supply Company of America, during the past week was Street Cleaning Commissioner William S. Edwards. "Big Bill" was particularly interested in the Gaumont Weekly No. 47 which gives a most interesting view of the construction and operation of the new street cleaning wagon which was recently built at the Ossining prison for use in the New York Street Cleaning Department.

The Commissioner remained in the projection room throughout the showing of the Film Supply Company's features and expressed himself as being particularly pleased with the exceptional pictures shown him by that company. "Pretty clean products those," he remarked, "and it doesn't look as if there was much around that could beat you people to it."

"AN ORPHAN'S CONQUEST" (Great Northern).

The Great Northern Film Company long has prided itself upon the excellency of its comedy subjects and this latest regular release under the title of "An Orphan's Conquest" is said to be one of the most sprightly and engaging of all the comedies that have preceded it as a product of this company. It is said to be brimful of the sort of refined comedy that appeals from the beginning and the story is one that is calculated to hold intense interest. This is it in brief: Ann is an orphan who is attending a girl's seminary and there she wins the friendship of Minna, the daughter of a wealthy manufacturer. During the Christmas holidays, the orphan is invited to visit the home of Minna's parents and there she meets John Gerald, who is about to be bethrothed to Minna. Ann is obliged, by the parents of Minna, to don the garb of a maid in order that the attention of John Gerald may be averted, but the ruse of Minna's parents does not work out successfully. A plot is formed to have the orphan Ann arrested on a charge of theft, but young Mr. Gerald overhears this and arrives on the scene in time to frustrate the plans of the girl whom they are anxious that he shall marry. There are several exciting moments throughout the comedy and many humorous incidents, but in the end Ann, the orphan is announced to be the fiancee of John Gerald. The story is put on in excellent fashion by the Great Northern Company and is said to be up to the standard established by this concern.

Scene from "An Orphan's Conquest" (Great Northern).

LILLIE LOGAN JOINS SELIG.

Miss Little Logan, well known legitimate actress, has been added to the Selig stock company and will play leading parts. She succeeded the late Lotta Faust in Lew Fields' "The Girl Behind the Counter," and took leading parts in "The Girl Question," "The Time, Place and the Girl" and "Madame Sherry." During the past two years she has been studying grand opera in Berlin. Upon her return to America, Miss Logan took leading parts in a number of pictures produced by the American Film Company. She will be a valuable addition to the Selig forces.

HALLBERG EQUIPS NEW THEATERS.

J. H. Hallberg "The Economizer Man" reports the sale of a Simplex Projector to Pindar & Rudloff, Meriden, Conn. One Powers 6A with Hallberg Special A. C. Economizer, to Bender Theater, Utica, N. Y., and one Standard M. P. Machine with D. C. motor drive to G. G. Hayes, Austin, Tex. Many of the larger theaters are figuring with Mr. Hallberg on his A. C. to D C. motor-generator sets which have proven so satisfactory wherever used.

WARNING TO EXHIBITORS AND EXCHANGE MEN.

Pathe Freres have learned that two men, representing themselves as cameramen employed on the staff of Pathe's Weekly, have been trying to secure an advance of money on checks. Pathe Freres wish it known that their cameramen are well supplied with money from the New York office and would have no occasion to secure money from outside sources. They accordingly decline to be responsible for any money given to cameramen, whether in their employ or only representing to be.

"ODD KNOTTS" (Essanay).

This excruciatingly funny comedy is without a question of a doubt one of the most impressive comedy features ever released. The situations are screamingly funny and the portrayal or masterful interpretation of this remarkable piece shows plainly what the Essanay comedy company are capable of doing.

Skipper Knott, a bold, bad man, who makes everybody that comes within sight of him afraid, leaves his wife and young daughter and goes on a cruise. Some time later, Mrs. Knott receives a letter from an attorney-at-law, stating that her husband has been lost at sea and he will send her the small amount of insurance left. The settlement is made. The "Widow" Knott advertises in the local paper that she will take a few respectable gentlemen boarders. Some time later, Mike McCloskey, a boarder at the "Widow" Knotts, is requested to leave, unless he can pay his board bill immediately. He discovers an old bank book of his with a dollar deposited. He unhesitatingly writes $10,000 in the deposit column. He is about to leave when the "Widow" Knott discovers the bank book on the floor of McCloskey's room. She catches the schemer before he gets to the front door. His things are returned to his room and he is served with the best meal of his life, and a bottle of imported wine. A week later, the two announce their engagement. The day the wedding is to take place, Old Skipper Knott returns, and makes things hot around the house. With a big club he ousts all the guests and makes the bridegroom do a three mile race in nothing. This is the screamiest scream ever thrown on the screen.

Scene from "Odd Knotts" (Essanay).

E. H. Calvert as Skipper Knott is exceedingly funny. His portrayal of this character distinguishes him as a man of rare and talented ability. Miss Ruth Hennessy as Skipper's wife demonstrates her remarkable ability as an actress. John Steppling as Mike McCloskey plays the role with a punch.

This production is booked for release February 11th.

JAMES YOUNG WRITES.

James Young, who is with the Vitagraph Company, now on a tour around the world under the direction of W. V. Ranous, sends in a program from Yokohama, Japan, with a few words of information. He says that moving pictures are playing to capacity in that city in antiquated theaters, using many foreign subjects. He thinks that there is a great opportunity there for some one who would put up a first class theater showing American pictures. To use his words "The attraction of the 'movies' is weaving the spell of irresistible fascination upon the Japanese." The program which Mr. Young sends to us for the Yokohama-Kwan near the Kanenohashi Bridge, Isezakicho, Yokohama. The performance commences at six o'clock in the evening, excepting on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays when it commences at one o'clock and runs until 10:30 at night. Six reels are run, four of which are Italian and French and two Japanese. The admission price is 50 sen, which includes a chair. The program is changed three times a month.

---

The superintendent of the State Hospital at Massillon, Ohio, has obtained a moving picture projector for use in the sick-rooms of the institution so that bed-ridden patients will be able to see pictures as well as the convalescents who every Monday night flock to McKinley Hall to see a run of films.

CINES AND ECLIPSE NEWS.

George Kleine promises a first-class program of releases for the week ending February 8, 1913, consisting of two splendid dramas and a split reel made up of two comedies filled with humorous situations and plenty of vigorous action.

The Wednesday Eclipse release, entitled "Curing a Temper," is worthy of a special mention. It deals with a crisis in the domestic affairs of a young couple whose ship of happiness would have sailed in perfectly tranquil seas if the husband had not possessed an uncontrollable temper and the wife had not had many little habits which tended to irritate it. The plot is extremely well worked out up to a strong climax; the acting and photography are above reproach.

Scene from "Curing a Temper" (Kleine-Eclipse).

This story has a strong appeal and teaches a little moral lesson in a most interesting and effective way. The film is easily worthy to be featured on any program. The many beautiful lace dresses worn by the wife at the dressmaker's will prove exceedingly interesting to the women in the audience.

For the Tuesday Cines, "A Strenuous Courtship" is a regular "scream," describing the wooing and winning of the charming Leah. Her sweetheart, Bloomer, is madly in love with her, but before he can gain the stern parent's consent to the marriage he is put through a series of the most trying ordeals, many of which are extremely ludicrous, especially his attempts to roller skate. However, he is determined to win the girl and his persistence is finally rewarded in a most unexpected manner.

"An Invincible Sleuth" is on the same reel. This is short but extremely unique comedy containing a number of clever illusions, showing how a detective, aided by the police, captures a gang of burglars at their work. Just how he does it must be seen to be appreciated. His methods are as ingenious as they are comical.

For the Saturday Cines "A Deal in Stocks" is a pleasing society drama of the better class.

EDISON STUDIO GOSSIP.

Richard Neill, the popular young Edison "daredevil," who was one of the members of the Edison Western Company in Southern California, has returned to the studio at New York. He will be remembered as the cavalry officer who "broke his arm while being killed" in the "Charge of the Light Brigade."

Herbert Prior and Mabel Trunnelle, after a year's absence, are again appearing in Edison films and doing the same sort of finished work that has won innumerable friends for them in the past.

* * *

J. S. Dawley, in charge of the Edison Western players, writes that he has settled for the Winter with a finely equipped studio at Long Beach, Cal.

Barry O'Moore does a beautiful piece of work in an Edison film which traces his life from schoolboy days to old age. It is a wonderful exhibition of makeup and versatility of action.

Mary Fuller still continues to do marvelous things in her character of "Mary." After her many adventures in Europe, on shipboard and at home, it does not seem as though there was anything of a thrilling nature which has not befallen her, even to wrestling with a man in a burning house.

MAKE FILM OF OWN FIRE.

Disaster in no form can daunt Thanhouser. The other week they lost their Eastern studio at New Rochelle by fire, and behold! their cameras and players were busy producing a picture of the transpiring right on the scene of it, and while the embers were still warm. Since the birth of the Thanhouser business their producers have been on the scene of every fire round about without fail. Often they beat the newspaper cameras to it.

"When the Studio Burned."

So it was meet, in C. J. Hite's opinion, that the Thanhouser blaze be duly and properly recorded. A scenario embodying the story of the fire as printed in the newspapers was prepared by Lloyd F. Lonergan, and Director Marston produced it with a company headed by Marguerite Snow, James Cruze, the Thanhouser kid and the Thanhouser kidlet. The stirring rescue of the kidlet by Miss Snow, as narrated in the press, is a feature of the picture, which has been called "When the Studio Burned," released Tuesday, February 4th.

ROSKAM RESIGNS FROM "WORLD'S BEST."

Owing to the growth of the Commercial Motion Pictures Company, Inc., Edward M. Roskam, president of the company, had been forced to sever his connections with the World's Best Film Company in order to handle the orders received daily from various feature manufacturers, exchange men and camera men, for developing and printing at the factory, 102 West 101st Street. Mr. Roskam wishes to announce that the Commercial Motion Pictures Company, Inc., is in no way connected with Mr. Carl Laemmle or the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

H. T. Edwards Buys Picture Theatre Equipment Company.

The Picture Theater Equipment Company, 21 East 14th Street, New York City, has been sold by the estate of the late J. P. Chalmers to Mr. H. T. Edwards. Mr. Edwards has been manager of the business for nearly a year past and is well known in the trade. We understand he intends to enlarge the business along several lines and believe his many friends will wish him every success at the head of his own business. The location is one of the most central in the city and is quite near to most of the large film exchanges.

CHAINS OF AN OATH

Feb. 14, 1913 Vitagraph, Two Reels

The father of Donia, a pretty Russian Peasant girl, whom he has betrothed to Gregory, compels her before departing for America, to take an oath to return and become his wife. In America Donia falls in love with Ivan, a fellow countryman, who has become Americanized and is in every way a worthy young man. Ivan asks her to become his wife. She is reminded of her oath to Gregory and, heartbroken, returns to her native land.

Ivan follows her to Russia and is discovered by Gregory while pleading with Donia to return with him. Furious at Ivan's attentions to his betrothed Gregory dogs his footsteps awaiting an opportunity to kill him. During events which follow Gregory awakens to the realization that Donia does not love him, and placing Donia's hands in Ivan's, he revokes the oath and leaves them alone in the ecstacy of their love.

A DRAMA IN THE AIR

Feb. 10, 1913 Pathe, Two Reels

Ray Newell and Paul Van Arsdale, aviators, are in love with Betty Chapman. Betty announces that she will accept the winner of a race soon to be held. Newell, fearful lest he lose the prize, disables Van Arsdale's machine.

During the race, Van Arsdale's machine, slightly in the lead, suddenly drops to the ground and he is buried under the wreckage.

Newell's treachery is unearthed in a clever manner by Van Arsdale's friend Harry Wilson. Later Betty and her father visit Van Arsdale in the hospital and Betty naively informs him that he has won her heart, if not the race.

The Last Blockhouse

Kalem. Two Reels.

A vivid portrayal of Western Frontier days, based upon historical incidents.

A party of Western pioneers, while constructing a block house, are guarded by a troop under Captain Steele. Crow, a renegade half-breed, tries to become friendly. He annoys Dot, the wife of Jim, a young settler, and is quickly repulsed.

Crow, infuriated at her scorn, incites the Indians to attack the settlers. The block house is destroyed. Crow captures Dot before the attack and rides off toward the camp.

Jack, the sole survivor, manages to reach the young husband, who is away in the woods, while Jim and Captain Steele recapture Dot from the Indians and in a hand to hand struggle with Crow, Jim avenges the fate of the pioneers.

The Millionaire Cowboy

Selig. Two Reels.

A brilliant comedy which smacks of the clean humor of the Western Plains.

During a wonderful exhibition of horsemanship and cowboy skill "Bud," the foreman of the Diamond S Ranch, is handed a telegram summoning him to Chicago to claim a fortune left him by an uncle.

There he falls in love and marries the stenographer in the office of his attorneys.

After a year he tires of the monotony of the life he leads and wires for the entire outfit to come on to Chicago and wake the town up. They carry out instructions elaborately, much to the embarrassment of Mrs. "Bud." After they leave, "Bud" embraces his wife and to her great relief whispers "Never again."

A Tale of Old Tahiti

Melies. Two Reels.

Teria, the daughter of one of the most influential chiefs of Tahiti, falls desperately in love with a young French Midshipman.

She pleads with her father to secure him for a husband. The French officers laugh at the idea.

The chief orders him taken prisoner. He loves Teria, but loyalty to his country demands his return. He is held captive despite his efforts until an expedition from his vessel comes ashore and tears him away in the very height of his love, with only her last gift—a flower—by which to remember the sweetest experience of his existence.

January 27, 1913.

The Guiding Light

Lubin. Two Reels.

Peter Fife, keeper of the light at Casco Bay, lives alone with his 17-year-old daughter born blind.

Harry, the girl's lover, saves all of his scant salary and gives it to Fife for an operation to restore Marie's sight. Dick Drayton is caught in the act of stealing the money and soundly thrashed. Bent on revenge he extinguishes the light. Marie through her quick wit and fortitude restores the light, thereby saving Harry and his companions, who are in danger of being dashed on the rocks in the darkness.

The brave girl's reward comes in the form of a successful operation and her engagement to Harry.

VITAGRAPH.

A TRAP TO CATCH A BURGLAR (Feb. 10).—Mr. and Mrs. Miniver have in their household, a servant, who is a suffragette, Bedelia. Mrs. Miniver gets into an argument with her husband on woman's rights and Bedelia butts in and sides with the mistress taking particular exception to the dictum of Mr. Miniver that a woman has no inventive genius. A number of burglaries have been committed in the neighborhood and Miniver, being called away on business, purchases a patent burglar alarm for his wife to set in his absence.

Bedelia proposes to the mistress, anxious to show the inventive genius of her sex, that they shall themselves invent a trap that will catch the burglar. They get an old skirt of strong materials, sew it together at the top, put a barrel hoop around the bottom, weight it with flat irons and suspend it from the ceiling over the front hall door by a rope and pulley, so that when the front door is opened, it will descend and fall over the burglar like an extinguisher, putting him down and out. They carry out their plan. Mr. Miniver misses his train and returns to his home at 2:30 A. M., drenching wet, he lets himself in with his latchkey, starts the burglar alarm and brings the "trap" over his head and gets entangled in it. When the village constable, who has been phoned for by Mrs. Miniver, arrives, he finds the burglar is the head of the house. Miniver discharges Bedelia.

PAPA PUTS ONE OVER (Feb. 11).—The Dean family are now launched on the high seas of opulence and are prepared to break into society. Their one great ambition is to possess the famous Carmon jewels, which they have seen at Biffany's. A pair of precious rascals get news of this and try to pass off a fake imitation of the jewels on old man Dean. They call at his home, his wife as usual, pushes him aside, and decides in her eagerness, to take the bogus necklace. Fortunately, he is called up by Biffany's on the telephone and becomes wise to the attempted swindle. The police are notified, the men are arrested and Dean saves his cash. This bit of good luck, which Papa Dean announces to his family as an evidence of his great shrewdness, raises him as a hero in their estimation. His wife and daughters compliment and caress him and Mama Dean is obliged to acknowledge that he is a little more than mere man.

BUTTERCUPS (Feb. 12).—A widowed mother with her two little children, the poorest of the poor Irish peasantry, tries to make life cheerful and pleasant for her little ones. She tells them fairy tales from Irish folklore. The one that pleases them most is about the fairies who boil buttercups from the fields into gold. Her little children decide that they will follow the example of the fairies, gather some buttercups and boil them into gold. A generous huntsman coming that way, empties his purse into the kettle with the buttercups. They call their mother and she is soon possessed of sufficient means to relieve her needs. Surmising the source from which their wealth has come, she thanks God for his goodness. The little children are convinced that the good fairies have imparted to them an endless source of supply.

THE PANAMA CANAL (Feb. 12).—The construction of the Panama Canal by the United States Government is an enginering accomplishment to which the whole world is looking forward. Comparatively few persons know how it is being done. Time, distance, prevents familiarity with its workings. This panoramic film, giving a full and comprehensive view of the great achievement being performed there and depicting its general appearance, will enlighten those who are anxious to know more about it.

THE WEAPON (Feb. 13).—With a preference for Frank Lewis, Mr. Grey, an old man who has a passion for collecting precious gems, disapproves of his niece's lover, Darrel Young. He is incensed at Dorothy's refusal to marry Lewis and threatens to disinherit her in his will. Dorkins, the butler, observes Mr. Grey's antipathy for Darrel Young and determines to take advantage of it in his purpose to rob his employer of his jewels. He sees the old man admiringly looking over his precious possessions as he casts greedy glances toward them. While Mr. Grey is thus engaged Darrel enters the library, and Grey puts the jewels in his desk. Darrel frankly asks Mr. Grey's consent to his marriage to Dorothy. The old man becomes very angry and threatens to strike Darrel, who defends himself by raising his hand as if to strike the old gentleman. While in this aggressive attitude a maid in one of the adjoining rooms sees Darrel's hand raised, and she hastily withdraws to inform her fellow workers of what she witnessed. Darrel lowers his hand without striking Mr. Grey, and indignantly takes his departure from the house.

The butler has been watching the scene and immediately after the young man has gone he enters the room and seizes the jewels. Mr. Grey resists him, and Dorkins, grasping a sharp paper knife from the table, stabs the old man to death. Then he hastens to tell the other servants that he found his employer dead in the library. The police are notified. Suspicion, through the testimony of the maid, is fastened upon Darrel Young. Dorothy, hearing the maid's evidence, falls in a faint and is caught by the butler. The point of the knife which the butler hurriedly placed in the inside pocket of his coat penetrates Dorothy's shoulder and she utters a scream of pain, pointing toward the butler. The detectives seize him, tear open his coat and discover the blood-stained knife in his pocket, and the murder of Mr. Grey is fastened upon him. He is arrested, and Darrel's innocence is established.

CHAINS OF AN OATH (Special: 2 Reels; Feb. 14. Part I).—The life of the Russian peasant means hard work, with little opportunity for education, pleasure or refinement; one continuous grind and scant existence. Donia, a pretty girl, lives in the midst of these surroundings, and when she hears from one of her countrymen who has returned from America of the possibilities and advantages of liberty and advancement in the country across the sea, she asks her father's permission to return to America with their friend. At first he refuses to give his consent, but after some persuasion, however, on the part of the visitor he grants it. She packs up her few belongings and takes leave of her family and friends. Gregory, to whom she is betrothed, more through custom than love, is disturbed and asks her why she is going away when she is engaged to him. Her father assures Gregory that she will return, and she further assures him by making the same promise. In confirmation of this promise her father insists that she take an oath to that effect.

NAT. B. SMITH
LECTURER
68 Hudson St., Hoboken, N. J. Phone 1361 Hoboken

Donia arrives in America and secures employment as a servant with a family who take very kindly to her, and to whom she becomes very much attached. She attends night school and soon acquires a knowledge of English. At the school she meets Ivan, a fellow countryman, who has become Americanized and is in every way a very worthy young man. He falls violently in love with her, and she is very much pleased with his attentions. Ivan proposes to her, and Donia cannot hide her love for him. While they are discussing the matter she receives a letter from her father, telling her to remember her oath to marry Gregory and requesting her to return to Russia as soon as possible to fulfill her promise. This sudden reminder of her oath causes her to reel. Ivan catches her in his arms and asks her the cause of her distress. She then tells him about her oath. Ivan is heartbroken and she is very much downcast. He tries to induce her to disregard her obligation and points out its injustice. She, with that stolid and inherent idea of filial duty, refuses and prepares to return to her native land.

Part Two.—After Donia's departure Ivan is frantic with grief. Though he tries to withstand his love for her, he finds it impossible, and soon follows her to Russia. Going to her home, he again declares his love for her and tells her he cannot give her up. In this intense scene they are discovered by Gregory, who is already making arrangements for their marriage. He is furious when he sees the manifestations of Ivan's ardent love for her, and for the first time learns that he has a rival in a younger and handsomer man. His anger is not that of love, but of possession and rivalry. Donia pleads with Ivan to leave her, that she cannot and must not break her oath and can never be his. He goes with bowed head as she looks longingly and lovingly after him. Gregory, who has been in hiding, watching, draws a knife and dogs Ivan's footsteps to kill him. Donia suspects Gregory's purpose and she follows them. Ivan enters his lodgings and in the agony of his soul presses Donia's photograph to his heart. Gregory, peering through the door, watches him. Ivan, who has made up his mind that life is not worth living without Donia, takes a small vial of poison from his pocket and is about to drink it when Gregory rushes into the room and dashes the bottle from his hand. Fearing an encounter between the two men, Donia rushes into the room and stands between them. Gregory tells Ivan he realizes that Donia does not love him, confesses he does not love her in the true sense of the word, and that it would be folly for him to hold her to her oath when he knows Ivan's and Donia's love for each other is sincere and undisputed. Then, placing Donia's hand in Ivan's, he revokes the oath and leaves them alone in the ecstasy of their love.

THE MAN HIGHER UP (Feb. 14).—The man higher up than the patrolman is the captain, and the patrolman must obey his superior officer. Captain Binn and Bill Mackey, the patrolman, are rivals for the widow. Bill plans to win the widow by getting a tramp to break in the widow's house and then rescue her and arrest the intruder. The scheme is good, but the captain, who happens to come along at the psychological moment, gets there first, arrests the tramp and hands the prisoner over to Bill and orders him to take him to the station house. Bill obeys, leaving the captain to bestow him attentions upon the widow. Upon another occasion they both receive an invitation from the widow to call. The one doesn't know that the other has been invited, and when they meet at her house there is the devil to pay, and she tells they both to go about their business. Later the widow consents to marry the captain. The wedding day is set. Bill will not give the widow up without one more effort. He calls his old friend the tramp into service again, tells the captain that he has seen a thief enter an apartment house and make his way to the roof. The captain, as an officer of the law, rushes to the roof. He has no sooner gone out of the door onto the roof than the tramp locks the door. Bill, who has been watching the proceedings, goes to the widow's house and tells her that the captain has deserted her. She seems unconsolable until Bill offers to take the captain's place. She accepts him, and the wedding procession starts for the church. As it passes the apartment house the captain, in despair, watches his rival passing in a carriage with the widow. The captain is well nigh beside himself, when the roof door opens and a sure enough burglar appears before him. Seizing the yeggman, taking his pistol from him, he conducts his prisoner to the street below, where he hails a taxicab and instructs the driver to hasten to the church where the wedding bells are ringing. He reaches there as soon as Bill and the widow. Again he shows Bill that he is the man higher up by ordering him to conduct the prisoner to the station house. Bill dare not refuse and dejectedly starts on his errand. Gallantly the captain offers the widow his arm, which she cheerfully accepts. Together they gaily march to the altar, where they are pronounced man and wife.

POLLY AT THE RANCH (Feb. 15).—"Here she comes in an automobile, and she's a hummer, too!" This was the simultaneous exclamation of Art and Jim when Polly arrives at the ranch. Bob, a good-natured and bashful cowpuncher, is very much confused when Polly goes directly over to him and asks him to carry her suitcase and escort her over to her uncle's house. Bob is all confusion and hides behind a bale of hay. Art and Jim are highly amused at Bob's embarrassment, but they are not at all displeased; they think the coast is left clear for them in getting better acquainted with Polly. They go to the shack, spruce up a bit and start out to meet Polly. She ignores them and says she would like to know Bob better. They tell her she can find him at the shack. She goes to see him, and when she enters the door he jumps out of the window. She jumps after him and follows him. He runs to the watering tub, around which she chases him, very much enjoying his discomfiture. When she comes very near catching him he starts for a haystack, in which he hides. He sees her coming and starts to run around the stack, pursued by Polly. She climbs to the top of the stack and jumps down directly in front of the place where he is hiding. Art and Jim appear and have a good laugh at him. He makes a bolt for his shack. Polly peeps in the door and Bob again escapes through the window, hiding in the barn. Polly meets Art and Jim; she takes one of their revolvers out of its holster and tells them she is going to practice some sharpshooting. She goes to the barn and places a mark on the barn door. Bob, who has seen her coming, crouches behind the door. She shoots at the mark; the bullet goes through the door and pierces Bob's leg. He screams with pain. Polly is distressed to find she has wounded him, and assists him to her uncle's house. She nurses him with much tenderness, reads to him during the tedious hours, and in every way tries to make him comfortable. Art and Jim peep through the window, see her smoothing his forehead, and become furiously jealous.

Polly's vacation has ended. Before leaving the ranch she comes to bid Bob good-bye. She looks into his face; it is too much for Bob, who throws aside his crutches and clasps her in his arms. He proposes to her and she accepts. Bob tells her uncle. He congratulates Bob and Polly, tells them to jump in the machine and get to the parson's as quick as they like. Not needing a second invitation, they jump into the auto and are well on their way before we can take a second look.

EDISON.

BARRY'S BREAKING IN (Feb. 10).—Barry Remsen is a fine specimen of the idle rich youth of today. His father realizes thus, but sees no way of making the boy really of value. One day he happens to think of Bennett, the eccentric millionaire inventor, who works in his own laboratory with his men and who has no use for idleness in his house or his life. He sends Barry with a note to this man, asking him to break the boy in. Barry of course does not know the contents of the note, but he does know that Bennett has a remarkably pretty little daughter, whom he will be very glad to see again. Bennett tells him to come back for an answer to the note in three days. Barry comes, but more to see the girl than to get an answer, and again is put off. He manages to meet the girl at church, and finally, after a very brief courtship, proposes to her and is told to ask papa. Bennett, of course, has been waiting for this, and tells the boy that he has no use for idlers. He intimates, however, that if the boy really wants the girl he had better take off his coat and go to work. Much to his surprise, Barry takes up this offer, pulls off his coat and starts to work. Bennett and the other men put him through the hardest "stunts" that they can find to toughen him up, while the girl looks on, with her heart aching for him.

He sleeps on a cot in the workshop, and when he is late for work goes without breakfast. But he does harden up and toughen up to the job and begins to be of some value, and then one day an explosion takes place in the laboratory, and as the men run for the fire department and for the boss Barry realizes that one of the number is in the inner room, in danger of suffocation by the gases, and he goes into the room to rescue the man. He is overcome himself and dragged out by the foreman when he returns, but as soon as he comes to he tells them why he was in there and, breaking from them, dashes into the smoke and fumes again. This time he and the superintendent succeed in bringing out the man alive, and Barry drops in a heap on the floor, the girl on her knees beside him. After the firemen have gone Bennett starts to congratulate the boy, but the little girl will not allow him to speak to the lad because her father has allowed him to go into danger, and without reason. Then Bennett produces the letter, hands it to them and the two young people see that this has been the process of his breaking in and has made a man of him. Of course they forgive the old father.

THE CITY OF SAN FRANCISCO (Feb. 11).—Among the many interesting views we see the officials of the Japanese government, in conjunction with the officials of the Panama Exposition and municipal officials, selecting the site and turning the first shovelful of earth for the Japanese exhibit at the exposition. Beautiful panoramic views of the residential portions of the city, close views of the business portion and of the numerous statues which are of national interest, charming bits from the public parks and drives, the famous Seal Rocks and Cliff House, in the large dining room of which we see the Japanese and exposition officials at luncheon. In addition to the many other interesting scenes, which our limited space does not permit us to describe, we see the famous Sutro baths, which are known the world over, interior views of which we were especially fortunate in obtaining, showing hundreds of bathers and spectators. We believe we have obtained the most complete and comprehensive motion pictures ever made of this wonderful feature of a wonderful city.

DANGER OF THE STREET (Feb. 12).—The busy public witnesses accidents daily, but rushes on into identical mishaps tomorrow, because the lesson has not been brought home to them graphically. If a safe and sane Fourth saves hundreds of lives, a safe and sane every-day on the streets and highways of the cities and country towns will save thousands and prevent pain and suffering to tens of thousands of persons who would otherwise be thoughtless or ignorant of the dangers they face.

The scenes of the film were worked out from typical accidents that have occurred and are occurring every day, and includes those where street cars, automobiles, games in the street, roller skating, bicycle riding, "stealing rides" on wagons and street cars and a number of other causes that contribute to the list of dead and injured children.

A HEROIC RESCUE (Feb. 12).—Bragg, a member of a city club, who is one of those garrulous persons who likes to pass as something which he is not, is taught a most striking lesson while spinning one of his yarns. He happens along the street when a scrubwoman carelessly slips and falls on the ice in front of an automobile. She is not seriously injured, but Bragg is very persistent in giving his card, to appear if needed as a witness, and rather proves himself a nuisance.

When he gets to his club he calls several members around him and tells of a most wonderful rescue that he made of a beautiful maiden run down by an automobile, and how he himself carried her to the drug store and took out the proper drugs to administer, and rode home with her in an ambulance, and describes in glowing terms the profound thanks which he received from her parents. Just as he is about to finish, the victim of the accident forces her way into the club with a subpoena to appear as a witness. Fairly caught, the club members give him the laugh and their hilarity prevents him from attempting to explain.

THE DOCTOR'S PHOTOGRAPH (Feb. 14).—Dr. Gilderbrand has a large and remunerative practice in the East Side. He is very soon to be married. The doctor is to give up his East Side practice and buy one in the country, where his fiancee lives. Sybil is impatiently waiting for the day when the doctor will go to her father's house for a short visit. There are, of course, frequent letters exchanged by the lovers. A day or so before the doctor proposes to leave the city for his visit his office is invaded by Bill Smart, a burglar, who asks, begs and implores the doctor to go and see his dying child. The doctor is impressed by the man's excitement and leaves his patients in charge of an assistant while he goes to Bill's home. There Bill and his wife are in despair over the child's condition. The doctor, with his calm, business-like manner, soon reassures them and sits by the child's bedside all night. In the morning the crisis has passed and the doctor prepares to leave. Bill offers him a fee, which he refuses, and he leaves them surprised and happy.

The doctor, dismissing everything else from his mind, prepares for his visit to his sweetheart's home, taking with him his latest photograph as a present. Sybil meets him at the station and together they drive to her father's home. They have naturally much to talk about, and sit up quite late in Sybil's sitting room. The photograph is greatly admired and given a place of honor.

It so happens that Bill Smart has selected Sybil's home for his next "haul," and soon after Sybil has retired and the doctor has made himself comfortable in the smoking room we see Bill lurking in the shadows of the house. He effects an entrance through the window of Sybil's sitting room, and after selecting a few valuable gold ornaments he sees the doctor's photograph. He at once remembers the face, and in his agitation he drops the photo. The noise brings Sybil to see what has happened, and at the sight of Bill she screams. The doctor hurries to her assistance and decides to call the police and have Bill arrested, but Sybil is so full of happiness that she cannot bear to see another suffer, so Bill is released. He is so impressed with the goodness of these two people that he decides to reform, and as a reward is taken into the doctor's house.

LUBIN.

DOWN ON THE RIO GRANDE (Feb. 10).—May Simmonds and her sweetheart, Bob, separate one morning to go about their respective duties, Bob going to the operation of the ranch of which he is foreman, and May to the well. Captain Magee of the nearby army post sees May. It is evident that the captain is an ardent admirer of her. Returning to the house with her, he declares his love, only to be told of her engagement to Bob. Bob sees the two returning and resents the captain's presence. A quarrel between the two men is barely averted by May, but they separate bitter enemies.

Bob has had occasion to discharge two Mexicans, Pedro and his brother, for drinking. These two men declare vengeance and the next day wait in ambush for Bob. In the fight which follows, Bob kills the younger brother. Pedro goes to the nearest Mexican federal post and tells the officer there that his brother has been murdered without provocation by Bob on Mexican soil. The officer departs with a detail of troops and, accompanied by Pedro, repairs to the location of the fight. Upon finding the body of the dead Mexican the officer tells Pedro that Bob shall be arrested and punished. About this time May and Bob are starting for a horseback ride from the ranch house. While riding along they encounter the Mexicans, who call upon Bob to surrender. Bob, however, has no such idea and, putting spurs to their horses, he and May race away. They are pursued by the Mexicans and finally, coming to a narrow gorge, Bob sends May back to the army post for aid, while he undertakes to hold the Mexicans at bay. May goes to Captain Magee, who immediately sees the possibilities of the situation. If he refuses aid, which he could do and be entirely within his rights, his rival would be put out of the way. His better nature asserts itself, however, and, accompanied by May, he heads his troop back to the scene of the fight. Arriving there, they find Bob has been successful in holding the Mexicans at bay and has not even suffered a scratch. Bob realizes the obligation he owes to the captain and apologizes for his ungracious conduct.

THE HIGHER DUTY (Feb. 11).—Marie Dearborn, a nurse, is called into the house of a fashionable schoolmate to nurse her two-year-old baby. Marie is overwhelmed by her friend's home, her husband and baby. The baby is quite ill, but gradually improves. Marie soon notices how disinterested her friend is in her home. The husband is a young business man. He enjoys talking to Marie. The wife takes no part in these conversations.

Several days after Marie's arrival the wife receives an invitation to a house party which is to be given in a town thirty miles away. She leaves, charging Marie with the care of her child. The second day after her departure the child becomes quite ill again. Marie sends for the father. Together they watch over the child one whole night. The next day the child is so much better that the husband does not send word to the mother. The all night vigil together has brought Marie close to the husband. She grows alarmed at the signs of his interest in her. At last, worried by the state of affairs, she determines to write and tell the wife to come immediately. The wife answers that she must under no circumstances leave until she comes. That evening the husband leaves his club and comes home early. Marie must hold the child while the father plays "hide and seek" around her. At length the closeness to Marie and the charm she has for a lonely man overwhelm him and he attempts to take both the nurse and the baby into his embrace. Marie points toward the door. Finally he departs. Mrs. Hall arrives a few days later and accepts Marie's services to her as a matter of course, pays her well and bids her bood-bye. Marie is waiting for the train when she sees Hall enter. He comes to her and attempts to speak. At first she looks away coldly, but at length, compelled by the contrition in his tone, she looks only to see how ill and worried he looks. He tells Marie that she has taught him the higher duty. Marie puts her hand into his outstretched hand and they part friends.

THE REST CURE (Feb. 13).—Mrs. Hampton, a young widow, finds herself left with a fine house and three daughters, but no income. In her extremity she asks her friend, Dr. Caswell, to assist her in renting her home. He has a better idea and suggests that she open a rest cure, making the girls the nurses. He supplies the patients, and at the end of a few weeks the girls are engaged. The three couples are surprised by the doctor and Mrs. Hampton, but the tables are turned a few minutes later, when they catch the doctor proposing to the widow.

ORANGE GROWING (Feb. 13).—A very interesting educational picture showing the growth and marketing of oranges. Particularly wonderful is the scene showing the orange blossoms, which gradually turn into the golden fruit—small at first, but continuing to develop in size until the orange is ready to be plucked. Next comes the gathering, washing, drying and the packing. The ox teams carry the fruit from the orchard to the wrapping and boxing house, and from there to the shipping station.

THE REGENERATION OF NANCY (Feb. 14).—John Clancy, a young ambitious member of the police force, receives a commission to run down a band of thieves. Nancy Batterson's father is the leader of the gang, and she has been brought up absolutely without moral ideas. She has been assisting her father in his "work," but has been suffering from an instinctive revulsion of feeling in helping the gang, and at last fights against her father's wish. When he agrees that the job he wants her to do will be the last one she consents.

Meanwhile Clancy has been shadowing a notorious gangster by the name of Jim Hogan and discovers the rendezvous of the thieves. Hogan is in love with Nancy, and after the gang has left the house Hogan tries to force his unwelcome attentions upon Nancy. Clancy, who has entered the house after the departure of the gang, overhears the struggle between Nancy and Hogan and rushes in to save her. Hogan is beaten in the scuffle and escapes to find the gang. Clancy tells who he is, and in turn discovers that she is one of the gang. The gang returns and vows to get Clancy. That night Nancy is forced to go to the house selected for her to rob, and Hogan, fearing some traitorous action on her part, shadows her. Clancy is also on the job and shadows Hogan. Clancy follows Nancy and Hogan into the house and saves Nancy by making her leave before the owner of the house discovers them. Hogan is made the prisoner and Clancy takes them away. He turns the prisoner over to another policeman and goes to Nancy's home to make sure that no harm befalls her. Hogan trips up his captor and escapes to the house, where he surprises Clancy listening to Nancy telling the gang of her failure. The gang drag Clancy into the room and fall upon him, but with Nancy's help he drives them back and escapes with her into the adjoining room. Nancy escapes by the window, while Clancy holds the door until she gets the police. The police rush in just as the gang break down the door of Clancy's barricade. The gang are dragged away and Clancy takes Nancy in his arms and tells her that thereafter he intends being more than just her protector.

THE MAYOR'S WATERLOO (Feb. 15).—Mayor Lang, of Worthville, receives a shock. A woman has just been elected to the Worthville board of commissioners. The other three commissioners are also greatly perturbed. They determine to intimidate the new member. But the victorious candidate of the Women's Civic League, Madge Walters, goes serenely about the fulfilment of her strange task. At the very first meeting she orders out of the room forever a decanter of whiskey on the council table, removes the feet of one commissioner from the table, takes a "Police Gazette" from the hands of another and jerks a cigar out of the mouth of the mayor. The commissioners are dumfounded.

Mrs. Walters immediately announces her first reform, directed against unsightly billboards. Backed by the Civic League of four stern, sedate women, she announces her firm resolve to introduce the ordinance prepared. Two members immediately announce their intention of fighting the ordinance. The third male commissioner, a timid individual, is afraid to say no to the grim woman and consents to support the ordinance. All look instinctively towards the mayor, who is a little undecided but "thinks he will vote against the ordinance."

Two "loudly" dressed, bejewelled lobbyists for the billboard "trust" immediately secure an audience with the mayor, who holds the deciding vote. They invite him to a dinner party to "talk it over." But the crafty Mrs. Walters discovers the date and hires an adjoining booth at the restaurant. She sees the lobbyists flourish wads of greenbacks persuasively under the mayor's nose and fill him with good wine. The mayor returns home that night gloriously displaying the results of the dinner party. The next morning the mayor descends to find Mrs. Walters and the imperturbable committee of four. Mrs. Walters tells him coldly that unless he votes for the ordinance the world shall know that he was closeted in secret with grafting lobbyists for the billboard trust. The mayor stubbornly declares that they cannot force him into voting for the bill. The ladies leave, grimly determined, but the mayor suddenly orders the butler to call Mrs. Walters back. She returns and he agrees to her terms. When the humor of the thing is flashed upon him, he so admires the cleverness of the female politician that he takes her by the hand and favors her with a sweet smile. On the eventful day that the ordinance comes up the Woman's League committee of four and the lobbyists are on hand. It is up to the mayor to decide the vote. He looks at the lucrative smile of the lobbyists, at the reserved silence of the Woman's League committee, then at Mrs. Walters, and then votes a "yes" for the ordinance. Once left alone with Mrs. Walters in the council chamber he asks her to be his political adviser for life. She can no longer hide her admiration for the mayor and after a decorous period of mental debate, agrees just in time to have the mayor's secretary catch them in embrace. It is up to the quaint old couple to explain to the politicians, lobbyists and ladies in the the adjoining room. They announce their intention to wed.

ODD KNOTTS (Feb. 11).—Skipper Knott leaves his wife and young daughter and goes on a cruise. Sometime later Mrs. Knott receives a letter from an attorney-at-law stating that her husband has been lost at sea and he will send her the small amount of insurance left. The settlement is made. The "Widow" Knott advertises in the local paper that she will take a few respectable gentlemen boarders. Mike McCloskey, a boarder at the "Widow" Knott is requested to leave unless he can pay his board bill immediately. He discovers an old bank book of his with a dollar deposited. He unhesitatingly writes $10,000 in the deposit column. He is about to leave when the "Widow" Knott discovers the bank book on the floor of McCloskey's room. She catches the schemer before he gets to the front door. His things are returned to his room and he is served with the best meal of his life and a bottle of imported wine. A week later the two announce their engagement. The day the wedding is to take place Old Skipper Knott returns and makes things hot around the house.

THE GIRL IN THE CASE (Feb. 12).—Jim Rice, a traveling man, meets an old friend of his, nicknamed "Old Greaser." With Rice is Virginia Grant, an actress. "Old Geaser" is introduced to Miss Grant. Rice is called to the telephone. During his absence "Old Geaser" takes Miss Grant to the theater. Miss Grant suggests that "Old Geaser" go out and buy some cold lobsters and champagne and bring them back to her dressing room. Geaser departs for the hotel where he orders the desired luxuries.

In the meantime Rice has been informed that "Old Geaser" has taken his girl. He tells two or three of the traveling men around the hotel that he will get even. The waiter wraps up the lobster and champagne and sets them on a table just outside the dining room door. Rice sees the bundle and noticing "Old Geaser's" name on it substitutes for it another package. Greaser takes the package to his new acquaintance of the stage. Miss Grant invites her brother and a friend to dine with Geaser and herself. The package is opened and an old pair of shoes fall out. Geaser is thrown out of the theater.

The following day "Old Geaser's" niece, Ruth, arrives. Jim Rice is very much smitten with her. Ruth informs Mr. Rice that it will be impossible for him to continue his acquaintance with her until he gets her uncle's consent. "Old Geaser" refusese emphatically. A week later "Old Geaser" visits Miss Grant at the theater and promises her a diamond ring if she will promise to love him. Of course the young actress consents. Rice, suspicious of where "Old Geaser" was going, follows him. He bribes the passing policeman to arrest "Old Geaser" as a suspicious character. The officer is about to take him to headquarters when Rice interferes, tells "Old Geaser" he will "fix it" with the policeman if he'll consent to the marriage of his niece. The uncle consents. The two men return to the hotel. A note is handed to "Old Geaser" which states that his niece has eloped with Miss Grant's brother. Miss Grant appears on the scene and returns the ring to "Old Geaser," saying that she could never learn to love him.

ACROSS THE GREAT DIVIDE (Feb. 13).—Walter Jordan, with his invalid wife, new born babe, and daughter of three years, try to cross the valley of death to reach God's country. In the course of their travel they run out of water. Jordan, determined to get some, starts out on foot. Having been gone several hours, his wife, now in a serious condition, instructs the older child to find her father. During Jordan's absence a mail-carrier, taking a package of money across the valley, is held up and robbed. The outlaws find the child wandering far from the now destitute camp, the mother having died. They take the child, back to camp where the infant, clasped in the arms of its lifeless mother, is huddled. They then hitch up the horses and are about to drive away when a posse arrives and places the two men under arrest. Jordan returns to the camp and finds his wagon gone. A deputy is sent back to get Jordan. Jordan is then taken to the town where the two men have been put in jail. The children are returned to their father. Jordan sobs out his grief at the loss of his wife, but happy in the return of his motherless babies.

THE THREE QUEENS (Feb. 14).—Wilburn Blackburn spends most of his time at the club. His wife is waiting in the early hours of the morning for her husband's return. Previously their married life had been one of bliss. Two charming children have blessed the fond parents during their happy married life. On this particular night in mention the little girl, Dorothy, four years old, was very sick. The mother notices the baby, a girl of two, creep into the room. She takes the baby up in her arms and carries her back to bed.

The father arrives, looks into the room, decides not to disturb his wife, throws himself on the couch and goes to sleep. He dreams that Dorothy is very sick. He goes to the club and gambles, loses a lot of money and leaves. He then imagines that the baby has died and, rushing into the bedroom, finds his wife has committed suicide, by shooting herself in the head. He is prostrated. His wife enters the living room and finds her husband asleep on the couch. he awakens him. He is so overjoyed at seeing his wife and realizing it was all a dream, that he clasps her in his arms and promises her that he will never go to the club again. He seats himelf at a table in his living room and tries awfully hard to play a game of solitaire. The boys at the club call him up and ask him to come and play a game. The temptation is too strong, he cannot resist. He goes to the club, sits down and starts to play a game. The cards are dealt and he holds three queens in his hand. These cards dissolve and he sees the faces of his two loving children and his darling wife. This is too much for him. He rushes from the club, goes to a nearby florist, where he purchases an enormous bouquet of chrysanthemums and takes them to his wife, who is awaiting his arrival with open arms.

BRONCHO BILLY'S WARD (Feb. 15).—Broncho Billy, having received a letter from an old friend of his, Steve Brady, requesting him to take care of his child. Brady dies and the child, a young girl of eight, is sent to the far western country where her now departed father knew that she would grow up to be an honorable and true daughter of his native country. Bess, Steve's daughter, is welcomed by Broncho Billy with open arms and is promised the best of everything that he can supply. Art Diamond, a young boy about Bess's age, is her constant companion. Twelve years later, on her twentieth birthday, Diamond buys a beautiful solitaire for Bess. He proposes to her in his crude way and is accepted. Broncho Billy, having loved the girl from the first day he met her, feels an unexplainable desire to make Bess his wife. From the window of his living room he sees Art and Bess seated beneath an old tree. Watching them closely he discovers Art placing the engagement ring on Bess's finger. The couple return to the house where they ask Broncho Billy's consent to their marriage. Broncho Billy's heart sobs out its grief at the loss of his loved one, but realizing that he has grown too old, he is happy that he has made her happy.

CINES.

A DEAL IN STOCKS (Feb. 8).—Accidents will happen! While riding her bicycle one day, pretty Janet Waters runs into a young man, causing him to fall and severely injure his arm. At her home she nurses his wounds so tenderly that he soon loses all sense of pain, but meanwhile becomes fascinated with his nurse and gladly accepts an invitation to extend his visit. Friendship ripens into love, and before long he has wooed and won her.

One day, however, he learns that his fiancée is very rich, and regretfully explains to his sweetheart and her father that his principles will not permit him to marry a girl who is better off in this world's goods than he. The disappointed girl appeals to her father, who devises a scheme whereby the obstacle may be overcome.

Secret instructions are given to his brokers, who manipulate the stock market so that before long the young fellow is surprised to learn that he is rich.

With a light heart, he hastens to inform Janet, and arrangements for the marriage are soon completed. It is not until the happy couple are seated in their automobile, ready to start upon their honeymoon, that he learns the real cause of his sudden rise to wealth.

FOR MOTHER'S SAKE (Feb. 11).—Marie, a modest young milliner's apprentice, is devoted to her mother, and is always trying to make her happy, but, at the same time, reserves a place in her affections for her sweetheart, Alfred. Her future looms bright with prospective happiness, until one day her mother is suddenly taken seriously ill.

Poverty makes it impossible for Marie to provide the essential comforts and medical attention, but she is too proud to let Alfred know, who, unable to account for her changed attitude, terminates their engagement. Driven to despair in the face of these discouragements, Marie goes to some of her wealthier friends in search of help, but no one will listen to her plea.

At last she calls upon Alfred, who insists upon taking her to dinner. Suddenly, in the midst of their conversation, she has a presentiment that her mother is in great distress, and in a burst of tears reveals her secret. Alfred now understands all of her recent behavior toward him, and the two hurry home to care for the suffering mother, who with the proper attention soon regains her health, and rejoices over the restored happiness of the two young people.

ONE ON THEM (Feb. 15),—Jenkins and Jones, two famous lady-killers, cause much amusement in the smoking room of the hotel, over their arguments concerning the most efficient methods of heartbreaking. Jenkins loudly defends the "old school," with its characteristic chivalry and formality, while Jones upholds what he terms the modern ideas of making love. They finally agree to settle the matter by trying their respective methods upon the most charming woman in the hotel, and make a large wager upon the outcome. Their victim, suspecting that something unusual is "doing," enters heartily into the sport. She graciously accepts their invitations to dinners and delightful motor trips, and cleverly keeps each one under the impression that he is gradually distancing the other in the contest for her affection until, one day, the artful creature invites them to take tea in her apartments and, to their intense dismay, introduces them to her husband and little child, explaining that she has had a most enjoyable time, but must take leave of them now, as she and her family are returning to the city.

ECLIPSE.

A BUSINESS SHARK (Feb. 12).—Financial difficulties force Vernon, a banker, to ask his friend, Meyers, for a loan of $50,000. Meyers, who has a great admiration for Mrs. Vernon, gladly lends the money, believing it will gain him favor in her eyes. However, later, his advances are repulsed by her with scorn, and to get revenge he demands payment on the notes at the first opportunity. To save her husband, Mrs. Vernon pawns her priceless pearl necklace, replacing it with an imitation string.

A short time afterward, the Okasa Oil shares, in which Vernon is heavily interested are announced to be rising. Vernon telephones his brokers to increase his holdings. Meyers, in the meantime, hearing of his friend's good fortune, determines to ruin him, and sends a forged telegram ordering Vernon's brokers to sell the Okasa shares at once.

That evening, Meyers attends the Vernon's ball, and while dancing with Mrs. Vernon notices that her pearls are false. Suspecting what has happened, he angrily breaks the string, scattering the beads upon the floor. Mrs. Vernon informs her husband of the insult and reminding him of the forged telegram which they have just received, points with a finger of suspicion at Meyers. Unable to conceal his fury, Vernon vehemently orders the scoundrel to leave the house at once, while Mrs. Vernon seeks consolation in her husband's arms.

CURING A TEMPER (Feb. 5).—Gilbert Parker is furious; he has invited his wife to the theater, but she delays interminably at the dressmaker's. Finally she appears in her new garment, but a quarrel ensues, ending in his departure, leaving his wife in tears.

Soon afterward she is disturbed in her misery by a visit from her old friend Harold Moore, the artist. After hearing the story, he conceives a plan to teach the husband a lesson. Under his dictation, she writes a letter stating that his temper is unendurable and that she has gone away with Harold Moore. They then proceed to the studio, where they dress a wax model in the new dress, which has caused all the trouble, and seat the figure at the dinner table.

When, later, Gilbert enters the studio, he sees what appears to be his wife, in the artist's embrace, and discharges his revolver at her. Then, horrified at what he has done, he sinks upon the sofa. After permitting him to believe the worst for a few moments, the artist beckons to the wife, who quickly enters the room and is soon in her husband's arms. Gilbert is much relieved to know that it was all a joke, and promises to control himself in the future,

SELIG.

PIERRE OF THE NORTH (Feb. 10).—Pierre and Baptiste, French-Canadian half-breed trappers, are enamoured of Mary, the factor's daughter. Both men propose to the girl, both are refused. Baptiste, mad with jealous age, abducts the girl and carries her off to a lonely cabin in the wilderness. She defies him, throws his proffered ring at him and is chained to the floor to change her mind. Pierre trails them through the pathless forest, and sets a trap in the path of Baptiste. He traps the abductor, but before he can reach him, to wreak vengeance, is himself caught in a giant trap Baptiste has set for a cougar. The wolves make short work of the rivals, and Mary is rescued by the timely arrival of her father and other trappers the next day.

DON'T LET MOTHER KNOW (Feb. 11).—Rough and ready Tom Moran, discovers an inebriated individual, Dick Baird, who is getting the worst of a quelling fight against odds, and rescues the under man. Baird is about all in as the result of his previous dissapation and this last brawl. He confesses to Norman that he has not been at home or seen his mother for 15 years. He shows Tom the picture of his mother and sister which he carries in a locket that he has cherished through all of his wanderings. He has just written home saying that he will return on a visit, but it is too late; he is next day slugged to death by a robber, his last words to his friend being: "Don't let mother know." Tom Moran finds his way to Dick's home and falls in love with his sister. The mother is blind and thinks her own boy has come back to her. He is allowed to become a member of the family and bless her declining years.

HER ONLY SON (Feb. 12).—Jack Temple starts from a small town to find a fortune in a big store in New York. He is steady and industrious, but yields to the superior cunning of the dishonest idler, who shoots dice and spends evenings in the billiard halls. Young Temple starts to send his mother part of his weekly earnings, but soon gives it up and when he loses his position stops writing altogether. He drifts down from bad to worse as an idler lost in a great city. His poor mother comes to the city, tortured with the agony of apprehension, and visits his employers. Fortunately, at this time young Temple daringly rescues a young woman from drowning, and becomes a hero overnight through the medium of the newspaper. He has learned his lesson and returns to his mother a credit and is later restored to the confidence of his employers.

BILL'S BIRTHDAY PRESENT (Feb. 13).—Bill, in love with Lottie, essays to surprise her with a present of slippers on the occasion of a dance given in honor of her birthday. His mischievous partner discovers the package and exchanges the dainty slippers for dirty old cowpuncher's boots. The lovely lady resents this by thumping the donor on the head with his gift. Then Bill. suspicious of his partner, determines to kick him, and they have an elegant settlement. Bill has no courage to go to the dance; but, through the aid of his intelligent dog, discovers a fire that threatens the premises, and becomes a hero in spite of himself. This brings his partner around with the slippers and an apology, and Bill is restored to the good graces of his petulant sweetheart.

A LITTLE HERO (Feb. 14).—"Buddy" Farral, the son of a ranchman, is left in charge of his little sister when his parents go to town for supplies. The cigarette stub of a careless cowboy starts a prairie fire that mows down everything in its path. The boy gallops to the ranch house, finds his sister asleep, awakens her, lowers her into the well, and then slides down the rope to safety. How they are discovered and restored to their agonized parents is a most effective play in pictorial sensations.

BUDDHA (Feb. 14).—An educational subject showing the colosssal work of art made from bronze by the Japanese in 1252 A. D.

MELIES.

ST. JOSEPH'S TAPER (Feb. 20).—Pentino has loved and wooed Dolores for many months, but when he learns she has no dowry, he refuses to marry her. Dolores' step-mother is furious at her step-child and gives her three days in which to get married or go to a convent.

Dolores in her sorrow confides in her father, the beloved mediator of all his parishioners, and he advises her: "My child, pray to the good St. Joseph. Burn this taper before his shrine and he will grant your request."

Dolores at the shrine, meets Morales, the rich young merchant, who has come to offer thanks for his prosperity. But his taper will not light—his offering is refused. In his dilemma he turns to Dolores and she intercedes for him to the good St. Joseph with a prayer. Her prayer is answered. The taper is miraculously lighted. And so is her other prayer, for Morales asks her hand in marriage.

BIOGRAPH.

THE PRESS GANG (Feb. 10).—Herbert, a city chap, is in love with Caroline, a rustic maiden, whose father has a strong aversion for what he considers a ne'er-do-well. Hence, when Herbert arrives at the farm-house to put the momentous question to her father, dad decides to try him out as to his ability to do hard work. Through his cleverness, Herbert convinces the old gentleman that he is a wonder.

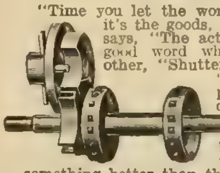
SUPERIOR PICTURES SOMETHING BETTER THAN YOU HAVE BEEN USING

There is no wonder of the satisfaction in using Lavezzi parts when you consider that Lavezzi was a builder of machinery that these highly important parts are made with.

Our machines cost four times as much to build as those ordinarily used by manufacturers and in general use. We, therefore, consider that we are able to give better results than anyone else in this particular line of business.

TESTIMONIALS IN BRIEF.



"Time you let the world know of your action and shutter, it's the goods, with a capital G," says one. Another says, "The action you sent me is OK. Will say a good word whenever an opportunity occurs." Another, "Shutter beyond my expectations." Another, "Must say shutter is a decided improvement over the old one." Another, "You fellows have certainly got the action." Another, "I install your action and would be willing to bet you that I have the best picture in town." Another, "You certainly have something better than the original make." Another, "Remarkable how your action stands the grind." Another, "Your action puts up the best picture I have ever seen in my life anywhere."

OH, WHAT A BOOB! (Feb. 10).—Miss Lavinia Binks has the misfortune of being loved by a fellow who for bashfulness is the limit. She tries to encourage him, but he thinks she is poking fun at him. The result is—two love-lorn souls who misunderstand each other. The boy in desperation determines to end it all by suicide. Here fate takes a hand and—"they live happy ever after."

A FATHER'S LESSON (Feb. 13).—The home was alternately a house of love and a house of fear, according to the mood of the father. It depended on how he spent the evening. On his return from the village saloon the father was another man. Then came the lesson. The wife was called away to a sick neighbor and he refused the charge of the children. His brutality and carelessness gave birth to a double anger, averted in time—but a narrow escape.

PATHE.

THE ARTIST'S TRICK (Feb. 12).—Dunbar Crane is an artist who believes that he has a touch of genius in his work, but it has never been recognized. He is also a firm believer in the fact that no man is great until he is dead. He decides to test the theory by leaving the impression that he has committed suicide. When it has become known that Dunbar Crane is dead, Crane masquerades as his own father. He offers his own paintings for sale and finds that there is a demand for them at fabulous prices. When the lot is depleted Crane finds himself the proud possessor of a considerable fortune and a reputation in art circles, and these he shares with the little girl who has been his only friend in time of stress.

THE CLUTCH OF CONSCIENCE (Feb. 13).—Pete, the bad man of a little mining town, sees Joe Fanwood at work in the latter's gold mine. A swift blow from a revolver butt and Joe is dragged into the shrubbery and relieved of his gold. Pete rides back to a gambling house, where he invests the ill-gotten gold. A fight ensues and Pete kills one of the gamblers. He makes his escape, but is soon pursued by the sheriff and his posse. When they are pressing him hard he enters a cottage, startling the woman of the house. By means of a locket he discovers that the woman is his sister whom he has not seen in years. She tells him that her husband is Joe Fanwood. She hides her brother from the sheriff and after the posse has gone Pete, too, departs. He goes to the spot where he left Fanwood to find him slowly regaining consciousness. He gives him back the gold he had stolen and a locket to give to Mrs. Fanwood. There are stirring scenes in this film and the action does not lag, not even for a moment.

FROM PEN TO PICK (Feb. 15).—Mr. Pennan Nink, an author, is waiting for the grand idea that will bring him fame. He remains cheerful through the flood of returned manuscripts and his good cheer is rewarded by the receipt of a letter asking him to come and qualify for the position of professor of rhetoric in a university. He fails to qualify, however, but rather than spoil his wife's dream of their success he gets a job as a laborer. While he is at work one day, earning his $1.75, he sees his wife fly past in a motor car, with two men. Hammer in hand he awaits the return of the machine and when it does come he is with difficulty restrained from demolishing the machine and the men, too, until his wife can explain that an aunt has willed her a fortune and that the suspected men are witnesses to the receipt of the money.

C. G. P. C.

THE ELCTROTYPING PROCESS (Feb. 11).—A solution of copper sulphate when charged with electricity produces a thin layer of copper. This is the principle of electrotyping used by printers and in this film an experiment is conducted, showing the making of a copper plate. Each feature of the process is demonstrated clearly and combines entertainment with education on a subject of universal interest.

THE SALT INDUSTRY IN SICILY (Feb. 11).—In Italy salt is secured from sea water by means of evaporating the water. It is quite a laborious undertaking and one of exceptional interest.

THE HEDGEHOG (Feb. 14).—The hedgehog is a very common little animal resembling a porcupine. It is not at all vicious and can be domesticated easily. It is rather difficult to catch them, as at the first approach of danger they roll themselves into a ball like a chestnut burr with iothing but the thick, wire-like hairs exposed.

STRICTLY BUSINESS (Feb. 16).—Chester Barnett is in love with Pearl White. Pearl's father will not consent to their marriage unless Chester can show that he has $5,000 in the bank. Pearl's father gives her $200 as a birthday present. She gets an idea from a book she reads, and she and Chester hatch a scheme. Pearl gives Chester the $200 and he buys some land from her father to that amount. She then has a friend of hers write a letter to Barnett on the letter-head of a pottery concern offering to buy all the clay he can sell. Mr. White sees Chester carting away some clay from this lot, and cannot understand it until Chester calls at his office and purposely drops this decoy letter. Father then entreats Chester to sell the land back to him, which Chester finally does for $5,200. Father immediately writes a letter to the Pottery Company, offering to sell them clay, and is dismayed when they reply that they have all that they need. He goes home and to' his surprise finds Chester and Pearl in each other's arms. He protests until Chester shows him his bankbook with the $5200 deposit, and father, remembering his promise, gives his consent to the marriage of the clever pair.

AN AWFUL SCARE (Feb. 16).—Holtz, Schultz and Schmaltz are three friends. They attend a meeting of spiritualists and discuss things pertaining to the other world. They separate and go home. Holtz upon his arrival is shocked to find upon his opening his door, a large black coffin. Frightened out of his wits, he runs from the house. He meets Schultz, and Schultz doubting his story, accompanies him home. He sees the same sight, and they both run away. They then go to Schultz's home, and the same thing awaits them there. They run again, and meeting Schmaltz, tell him of their strange experiences. He accuses them of having the meeting they attended on their mind, but agrees to go with them to Schultz's room. He goes, and he also sees this gruesome object. He takes them to his room and there also is a strange black coffin. They run out and get a policeman. All four come back, and after much hesitation on the part of all, the officer goes to the coffin to see what it contains. He finds a letter from a friend of Schmaltz, who is an undertaker, explaining that as he is retiring from business, he is presenting his friends with a coffin, in the belief that they will need it some day.

BILLY FOOLS DAD (Feb. 11).—Billy is in love with Lottie, the daughter of old man Smith, who does not approve of Billy as a suitor because he wants his daughter to marry Percy Meldon, the dude of the village. Billy is discovered sitting on the porch spooning with Lottie. The old man becomes so enraged that he picks up pillows, books and various other articles, and proceeds to the porch where he hits Billy on the "bean" with them. But this does not dampen the ardor of his love. When he learns that the family is going to a theater that afternoon, he decides to call on his sweetheart again, which he does. The door is locked but he climbs through the window. Unfortunately for him the old man forgot his theater tickets; he returns and finds Billy hid under the table. In trying to pull him from under he unconsciously pulls his trousers off and kicks Bill out of the house without them. Bill is now at his wits end what to do as he is informed that the father is going to place the girl in a convent that afternoon. He arranges with several friends to meet the old man in his automobile on the way to the convent, and pretend to hold him up and rob him when at the opportune moment Bill will rush upon the scene and defend the old man. The plan is successfully carried out, and he succeeds in fooling dad and gaining his consent to marry Lottie.

FRONTIER.

THE RANCH GIRL'S MEASUREMENTS (Feb. 12).—When Nell Rawling, who has been educated at an eastern college, returns to the ranch, all the cowboys, including Joe Willis, the foreman, and Tony Mendoza, an unscrupulous, half-breed Mexican, are so struck with her beauty that each one of them decides to win her. While at school, Nell had been in the habit of getting a new dress every so often. When she returned to the ranch her mother did not see any need to buy her clothes so promiscuously.

One bright morning Nell receives a catalog from a mail order house in the east. She takes the catalog and retires to the back porch of the ranch house. While there, the cowboys, who have come in off the range, see her seated, and, thinking it is his chance to propose to Nell, Dick Craig, a tenderfoot and cowboy, interrupts her dream of dresses and pops the question to her. She tells Dick to be on his way, that there is no chance. Dick returns to his cowboy friends with his head bowed down with sorrow, when Slim desides to try his luck. He is received in the same manner.

Nell becomes tired of so many proposals, so she sends Tony to saddle her pony. After enjoying her ride, Nell returns home and there she finds Joe Willis, the foreman of the ranch, and the only man she would accept if he would only propose; but Joe is of a very bashful turn of mind. Disgusted, Nell decides to try a scheme, and so places an order on the order-board stating that she will marry the first man who will deliver, or cause to be delivered, the exact number of yards for a dress for her, at $1 a yard. The cowboys notice her tacking this sign on the board, read it and run into town to purchase the goods.

Fatty decides that it would be a good chance to buy Kate, the younger sister of Nell, who has not had the same advantage, a dress also. There is a wild race to the village store, which is led by Tony, the Mexican, and the village storekeeper, who has been deploring the fact that business is so bad, decides to cut down the price of his cloth from $2.98 to $1.00. Just at that moment, the cowboys of the Widow Rawling's ranch, rush in town and they practically buy him out wholesale. Fatty is among them, and is laughing at the fact that there is such a rush, when he is in no hurry because he knows that he is the only one after the other sister.

Tony Mendoza, knowing that the hardest man he has to beat in this race for a wife is Joe Willis, decides to use trickery to beat him, and he places a nail in the hoof of Joe's horse, which causes him to go lame on the way back to the ranch. Joe, seeing this, has a quick bright idea to send his goods home to Nell by his faithful old dog, Jose. He straps his purchase of nine yards of cloth to Jose's back, and starts him for the ranch. Jose takes a short cut over the prairie, and gets there first with Joe Willis' goods. Just as Nell is marking this nine yards as the first delivered, Tony rushes in with the exact amount of nine yards; but he doesn't win the hand of Nell because Joe's dog got there first. At that moment Joe comes and, seeing his name on the board as winner, forgets his bashfulness and takes Nell into his arms, to the discomfiture of Tony and the other rejected suitors, with the exception of Fatty, who has delivered his goods to his sweetheart, Kate.

BILLY'S DOUBLE CAPTURE (Feb. 16).—Billy Jones, a detective, connected with the Pinkerton Detective Agency, gets notification from his chief to get on the trail of Jimsey Wharton, a social highwayman. Billy locates Wharton, and learns that he has become acquainted with Charles Batwell, a millionaire. Suspecting Wharton's real motive in associating with Batwell, Billy gets a friend to introduce him to the Batwell family. Billy watches Wharton closely; he learns that Wharton is a frequent visitor at the Batwell home, and also is carrying on a flirtation with Mrs. Batwell.

Billy meets Lois Batwell, the daughter, and falls in love with her. She returns his love. This gives Billy an opportunity to watch Wharton closely without arousing suspicion. He finds a wallet, which Wharton lost, and discovers that he has purchased a ticket to Montreal. Billy draws the conclusion that Wharton intends to get the Batwell jewels, and leave town. Billy returns the wallet to Wharton and immediately lays plans to effect his capture. Believing that the evening of the reception held at the Batwell home is the time, that Wharton has selected to get possession of the Batwell jewels, Billy, with two other detectives, goes to the Batwell home. While he is trailing Wharton, Billy does not neglect his love affair with Lois. Mrs. Batwell, realizing that Wharton is persistent in his love making, warns him that he has gone far enough. Wharton assumes the attitude that he is hurt by Mrs. Batwell refusing his proffered love, and leaves the house, but returns and enters the house secretly. He is seen by Billy, who has watched his every move. Wharton is surprised in the act of robbing by Mrs. Batwell. To cover his real motive for entering the house, he makes violent love to Mrs. Batwell, which she resents. The woman, terrified at the man's intrusion, begs him to go. Wharton has taken the precaution to lock the door, which was fortunate for him, as Mr. Batwell comes to the room at this particular moment. He is surprised to find the door locked. Mrs. Batwell prevails upon Wharton to leave, which in reality he is only too glad to do, as he has her jewels in his possession. He leaves the room by the window, but is captured by Billy and the detectives. Billy brings Wharton back to the room, where he is searched, and the jewels found in his possession. Wharton is taken away, and Billy, satisfied with his capture of the social highwayman, seeks to make another capture. In this he is successful also. The siege he has played on Lois' heart has resulted in her complete surrender.

POWERS.

THE MAN HIGHER UP (Feb. 12).—The magistrate and his son live alone in a quaint old village. The magistrate believes his son walks in the straight and narrow path. The son has the same reverence for his father. However, each is mistaken. By chance they meet one night in a fashionable cafe, each thinking the other at home. Father and son decide to make a night of it.

In the wee hours of the morning, the cafe is raided, the magistrate escapes up the dumb waiter and down the fire escape, arriving at court just in time to have the patrons of the cafe including his son appear before him. For lack of evidence, the prisoners are discharged.

HIS IDEAL OF POWER (Feb. 14).—The two children, Martin Steel and Helen Weston, are of totally different natures. Martin is a masterful, headstrong little fellow, who overrules his gentle playmate. He will not permit any other boy to hurt her, however. One day they are playing with their toy boats. Martin finds them too small for his ambitions. He tires of the game, and smashes Helen's little boat, and when she cries, he comforts her and tells her that when he grows up they will have great, big powerful boats and not "play" ones. He shows his gambling tendencies, for when his father gives him money, he matches him double or quits, and takes his losses or gains as a matter of course.

The children grow. The headstrong boy becomes a masterful, somewhat overbearing man. His love of gambling and big stakes leads him to the stock exchange. He loves the gentle Helen; he always loved her. He proposes and is accepted.

Steel puts through one of his tremendous coups, and with its complete success, his prospective father-in-law, Weston, is forced to the wall. The sudden fall from affluence to ruin is too much for Weston, but his foolish aim to destroy himself is stopped by the sudden presence of Helen. She goes to Steel's office, and with a new courage and a breaking heart, she throws down the roses he sent to her, and with them her engagement ring. She leaves him to face a dilemma for the first time. It is a fight between the love of power and the love of a girl. He meets the difficulty half way. He tells Weston to enter the market again and to sell. Steel boosts the market by buying at inflated prices and Weston regains his losses.

Again Steel has a mental struggle. He knows weariness now. He closes his eyes and sees a vision of himself on the stock exchange smashing fortunes and accumulating them with cold indifference—a man feared! The mystic presence of Helen forces this from his mind. He opens his eyes to see Helen. She sees a new man. She shows her empty finger, and he puts the engagement ring on again.

AUNT BETTY'S REVENGE (Feb. 10).—Tom Clark and his wife, Dorothy, visit Tom's parents. Whilst there the Clarks, father and son, receive an intimation that Mr. Clark's uncle has left them ten thousand dollars on condition that they provide for his beloved sister, Bertha. Aunt Betty arrives with a parrot, a kodak, several band boxes and a homely face. She soon palls and her lot is hard. The men are barely civil and the ladies refuse to discuss the fashions with her. In order to escape from aunty for awhile, the family go to the shore. Betty gets lonesome and follows them—the kodak goes too. Aunty sees Mr. Clark and Tom flirting with two persons on the beach. Aunty snaps. The Clarks see the proofs and are at their wits' ends to propitiate Aunty. It takes diplomacy and $2000 worth of gifts to accomplish this end and Aunty Betty is able to flaunt a magnificent gown and plumes as she steps majestically from the steps of the Clark resident.

IN TEMPERANCE TOWN (Feb. 10).—This is a tale of the wrongness of the Judge, whose motto used to be "Do as I tell you and not as I do." He was one of the leading lights of the Temperance Union. He was also a thirsty soul. He and Hiram repaired to the barn at times where the hay hid a suspicious looking little cask. This little cask got empty and the Judge drove to the railroad station where another one awaited him. It was labeled "Pickles," prophetic of what was to come. The Judge covered it with hay and drove it home.

Poor Weary arrived and looked for a soft spot on which to rest his cramped limbs. He found it in the Judge's yard in the form of an unloaded wagon of hay. He also found a little cask labeled "Pickles." He liked pickles. He tapped it and found whiskey. He also liked whiskey.

The Judge addressed the Temperance Union and was escorted in triumph to the courthouse. A very soused "shocking example," in the shape of Weary, was hauled before him and after a severe lecture, he demanded of Weary where he got the "vile stuff." A procession was formed as the repentant Weary led them to the spot.

Fortunately the denouement is not followed to detail, but it is safe to say that if any important boy asks his parents if he shall continue to take the Judge as his shining example, he will certainly get his ears boxed.

THE LITTLE PEACEMAKER (Feb. 12).—John Taylor and Henry Martin had been life-long friends. Their son and daughter are engaged to be married, but the old men quarrel over the water rights and forbid the marriage. However, Mrs. Martin helps the young people to elope, and they start housekeeping for themselves.

But even after the birth of a little son, which they have named, John Henry, the fathers remain obstinate and refuse to see them. The young father and mother have been planning how they can bring the former old friends together, so the son writes to John Taylor, telling him that his wife has deserted him, and asking Grandfather John to come for Baby John, and the daughter writes to her parents telling them her husband has deserted her, and asking them to come for Baby Henry. Both parties arrive at the same time, and ere they leave, the wonderful baby has succeeded in so far softening their hearts, that a reconciliation is easily effected.

THE MYSTERY CAVE (Feb. 14).—Down through generations of Mexicans, at a border town, has come the legend of the Grave of Miguel, which is in the mountains nearby over the entrance to a natural cave. Miguel, as the legend relates, was an early Mexican who was killed for evil deeds. His widow, until her death, during each full moon lighted many candles over the grave to drive away the evil spirits.

A band of Mexican smugglers see in the legend an opportunity, and use the cave as a place for smuggled goods, lighting candles over the old grave, thereby playing upon the superstition of the Mexicans and keeping them away from the neighborhood of the cave.

At this time a missionary preacher and his sister, Alice, are in the town. One of the parson's strongest hobbies being opposition to deeds of violence. Alice falls in love with Ed. Kirby, a young customs officer. Her sanctimonious brother, however, refuses to permit their marriage because Kirby is a "man of violence." Being called on an errand of mercy, the parson and Alice take the trail leading past the place where the smugglers are packing the smuggled goods. Thinking that the two will bear information to the customs officers, the smugglers seize the parson and take him to the cave to be detained until they can escape with their plunder. Alice escapes and rides to the customs office, returning with Kirby and a posse. They arrive at the cave in time to catch the smugglers and liberate the parson. The parson, from force of experience, is convinced that "deeds of violence" are sometimes justified, and consents to his sister's marriage.

BISON.

ON THE FRONTIER (2 Reels—Feb. 11).—Three settlers, Standish, Farley, and a companion, are hunting. They shoot at a bird in the trees. Two Indians shoot their arrows from behind trees at the same bird. They meet. The bird shows a bullet mark and an arrow in its body. There is an argument. Standish counsels giving the bird to the Indians, but Farley knocks one of them down and the redmen go, threatening revenge. They take the news to their chief, and the simple incident creates death and bloodshed.

Farley is enamored of Virginia, the pretty daughter of Standish. She does not encourage him. At her father's request she joins Farley in a ride and comes across the old squaw, Waving Grass, who is squatted on the ground waiting for death to come and relieve her sufferings. Waving Grass has been supplanted by a young squaw who can carry faggots and prove of more service. Waving Grass is given some water and food and sent out of camp amidst the jeers of the squaws and the braves. Farley dismounts and announcing that it is "only a squaw" gets on his horse again, to the indignation of Virginia, who helps the poor soul on her own horse and takes her to their home, followed by the sulky Farley. The old squaw tells them that the Indians are on the war path.

Standish takes Farley away with him to the settlement, where it is decded to send a request for a new fort. A messenger takes the request which is granted. Captain Brand is entrusted with the work and sets forth to the settlement with troopers and materials. The settlers are warned and flock to the trading post, where they pile up the furniture and boxes as a barricade in the narrow street. The Indians attack and a massacre is averted by the arrival of the troops. The building of the new fort is started and the wagons, manned by settlers and troopers, start to get logs. Farley tries to back out of going, but is made to do so by Standish and Brand and he secretly meditates revenge for the slights. He escapes and joins the Indian chief, Black Hawk, who is returning from a visit to Capt. Brand, whom he has warned to go and leave the Indian lands alone. Farley suggests that the Indians can prevent the building of the new fort by exterminating the men and wagons comprising the lumber camp. They attack and the troopers and settlers put up a magnificent fight against odds. They bore holes in the sides of the wagons and lie flat and reserve their fire until the Indians are right on them. The Indians twice repulsed, discard their horses and creep up on foot and a terrific hand to hand encounter takes place, the defenders using their augers, hatchets and the butt-end of their guns. Waving Grass, uneasy in her mind, has ridden out and has seen the start of the fight and has spurted back and secured the remaining settlers and troopers, who arrive in time to rout the Indians. Farley is killed by Capt. Brand as he is about to strike Standish down, the latter being in a death struggle with Black Hawk. Waving Grass sees the dead chief and the old loyalty returns. She requests his body for her services. The dead chief is removed and Waving Grass, refusing assistance, sits by the side of her old leader to welcome her own passing.

IN THE REDMAN'S COUNTRY (2 Reels—Feb. 15).—Captain Arden is ordered by Colonel Hampton, in charge of the frontier fort, to go under escort to Culvert's Corner and await a wagon load of supplies. He bids good-bye to his wife, Blanche, as she is talking to Lorimer. Passing the post trader's store, the Captain goes in for some tobacco. He sees an Indian, Still Foot, in the act of stealing a blanket, and beats him. Lorimer comes up and interferes, and the keeper of the store, Munson, and his daughter, Bonita, both make light of the matter. Not so Arden, who is very angry at Lorimer for his interference.

Blanche meets Lorimer outside of the store, and whilst conversing, he drops his glove, which is picked up by Blanche's Indian attendant, Oak Leaf, who conceals it in the bodice of her dress. Lorimer and Bonita go riding. Lorimer misses his glove, and proposes to Bonita, who accepts him. Still Foot harbors revenge for the indignity shown him by Arden, and Lorimer reproves him, when he sees the Indian stalking Arden with a knife. Arden meets the supply wagon, and at Culver's Corner spends some time in the saloon, and leaves it somewhat intoxicated and with a bottle of whiskey.

It is Lorimer's birthday, and his chums prepare a good natured reception for him when he enters the mess room. They belabor him with paddles. He frees himself by slipping out of his coat and escapes with his friends in hot pursuit. He dashes into the Arden home, and Blanche, entering into the fun of the thing, tells Oak Leaf to show Lorimer the stairway. Oak Leaf shows him, and Lorimer runs up the stairs and hides in the attic. The boys follow him into the house, and Blanche tells them Lorimer has gone out by the back door. They dash out, and not seeing him, divide up to prevent his getting away. Lorimer is in a fix, and while debating what to do, he sees Arden return, staggering, and in a bad temper. Lorimer recognizes his awkward position. Arden is seen entering his house by the sullen Still Foot. The Captain is insulting to Blanche and she and Oak Leaf leave him alone. Blanche scribbles a note to Lorimer, in which she describes her husband's ugly mood, and begs him to wait until it is dark, and then to get down by means of the rain pipe. Blanche returns to Arden, and upon her remonstrating with him for ordering more liquor, he flies into a passion and tries to injure her.

Later in the evening Arden falls asleep. Still Foot steals in and stabs him. Oak Leaf enters the door and sees this, but Still Foot gags and binds her and takes her away. In the struggle, Lorimer's glove falls from Oak Leaf's bodice.

One of the junior officers goes to the doctor and begs him to try and sober Arden up before the Colonel sees him. He breaks in upon Arden as Lorimer, hearing something and divining something serious has happened, is about to make his escape. The Colonel and Blanche are summoned, and the tragedy confronts him. As Lorimer slides down the water pipe, it collapses, and he falls stunned. The officers in the house hear the fall, and go out and investigate. Lorimer is brought in and

For over two years Sterling Terminals have been the acknowledged peer of all wire connectors.

Our latest style Type B is notched on one side for quick attachment and detachment without removing binding screw. The downward slope on the notch prevents any liability of the terminal becoming detached should binding screw become loose.

We quote the following by Mr. Richardson, Editor Projection Dept. (The terminal submitted is mechanically well made and will undoubtedly make an electrically perfect joint. * * * The terminal I can recommend as an excellent article for use either at the rheostat or inside of lamp house.) See issue of Sept. 21, 1912.

Price of terminals, $1.25 per set of four. For those who desire our type A, without the notch, we can supply them at $1.00 per set.

Sterling Carbon Holders

These holders are extra heavy, strong and substantial at every part and will withstand the worst kind of abuse.

If your dealer does not handle them we will be pleased to forward them direct to you prepaid at $3.50 per pair.

confronted with his missing glove. Horrified, he pulls out his handkerchief, and with it comes the note Blanche wrote him. Both are placed under arrest.

Bonita does not believe in Lorimer's guilt, and states her determination to stand by him. Still Foot brings Oak Leaf to his tribe, and demands protection. Bonita visits Lorimer in prison, and he tells her that he is sure the crime lies between Still Foot and Oak Leaf, and that without them he cannot prove his innocence.

Bonita gets a gun and rides to the Indian camp. She is told that Still Foot is not there. She is seen by Oak Leaf, who slips away and meets her by the stream. Oak Leaf promises to help Bonita capture Still Foot. They overpower him in the early morning. gag and take him away at the point of a gun. The Indians discover the absence of Still Foot and Oak Leaf, and give chase. Bonita and Oak Leaf eventually get Still Foot to the fort, where matters are explained and adjusted, and Lorimer is freed. He and Bonita are reunited, while Blanche's name is successfully cleared of all suspicion.

ECLAIR.

THE GUILTY HAND (Feb. 9).—As the last strains of the beautiful tenor solo from Rigoletto were drowned in a round of the heartiest applause, so was the very popular singer, Barusco, almost hidden by the rush of admirers who crowded about. The Baroness d'Esmont, at whose home the grand opera star was singing, seemed especially impressed and a moment later the singer and his hostess strolled out into the garden.

But as they walked, in the shadows following them was the figure of a man. It was—Viscount de la Mure—who had been invited by the Baroness herself. The night was beautiful. The Baroness, who remained on a bench in the grounds when Barusco returned to the house, was soon fast asleep. Suddenly out of the darkness comes a human form with a black hood concealing the features. Who is this person? The unfortunate woman, attacked by this villainous, masked person, fights back and finally after a terrific struggle manages to escape.

Meanwhile in the drawing room, Baron d'Esmont and some of his guests and playing cards when they are greatly startled by the arrival of a telegram which declares that the man calling himself Barusco, the tenor, is none other than a dangerous bandit. Immediately there is a great commotion. A party of ladies, strolling in the garden, find the Baroness apparently asleep on the bench, but when she fails to awaken when approached, they discover her condition and she is carried to the house. Barusco is accused and the police are called but the Baroness awakens and takes the tenor by the hands. Slowly she drops them and tells the officers to release the singer—"He is not guilty."

Looking about the Baroness notes that the Viscount nervously conceals one hand and walking slowly to him she demands—"Give me your hands." He offers one but she demands both and as she grips the right hand firmly, the Viscount winces with pain—"Here is the guilty one," she cries. In the struggle, the Baroness had bitten the hand of her assailant severely, which had caused him to give up the attack.

THE TRAIL OF THE SILVER FOX (Feb. 11).—Therese, whose lover, Clancy Marr, had her given a pelt, was wearing it with a two-fold pride. Yellowstone Dan, an outlaw, cast envious eyes upon it that day. Just as he was in the act of seizing it, there was a report, a puff of smoke and a thud. In the confusion little "Fawn Afraid," the Indian girl, slipped out of the saloon. When Sergeant Jack Daniels of the R. M. P. arrived, Clancy Marr, who had picked up the gun which lay beside the body, was led away in custody.

Therese returned in dismay to her cabin. But little "Fawn Afraid" followed her and declared that she, who had every reason to hate Yellowstone Dan, had fired the fatal shot. Therese lost no time in conveying the news to headquarters. She had hardly returned from this erand when Clancy Marr entered her cabin. He had escaped from his captor whom he imagined to be his rival, and left him at the bottom of the ravine with a fractured thigh. Little Therese's eyes flashed scorn at her lover. She turned about and fled from his presence without further words. All night long she plodded through the woods, half guesing at the trail for the snow was falling fast. In the morning she came where the wounded sergeant lay. Through her tireless efforts the troopers were notified and the sergeant is brought back to her cabin.

There it is learned that Yellowstone Dan was an outlaw and a reward offered for his body dead or alive. "Fawn Afraid" collects the reward and contritely leaves it on Therese's table in compensation for the trouble she caused. Therese nurses the wounded man back to health. Clancy learns from his sweetheart a wholesome lesson in humanity and is cured of his groundless jealousy.

A LARGE NIGHT (Feb. 13).—"Awfully busy today, hardly had time for lunch. Missed two cars tonight, that's what made me so late. I'm just all in. Can hardly keep awake You look tired out, too, Laura."

"Yes, dear; you are right. I spent most of the day shopping, and I'm so sleepy. I think the best thing we can do is to retire."

Neither of them meant what they said. They were far from feeling sleepy. In fact, Mr. Jones was thinking of the fellows at the Minx Club, wishing he was there at that very minute, and Mrs. Jones was planning a cunning scheme of how she would get to a certain dance which one of her friends was giving that evening. They were sitting in the dining-room, while Mr. Jones was eating his half cold dinner, which had been kept for him nearly two hours; but his mind wasn't on the dinner.

While Mrs. Jones was waiting for her husband to return from business, two letters were delivered. One was for her from a friend of hers, who was giving a dance that evening, saying that she would like very much for her to come, even though Mr. Jones couldn't accompany her. The other was for Mr. Jones, from the Minx Club, telling him that he is expected there that evening for a big game. What were they going to do? Mrs. Jones is exceedingly provoked at her husband's late return. He pacifies her with a $100 bill, which she puts in the drawer of the sideboard for the time being.

They both go to their rooms after dinner. Wifey gets out a ball dress, and hubby thinks he will find out whether his wife has really gone to bed, so he puts on his pajamas over his street clothes, and goes to his wife's room. She is all dressed for the ball, and hurriedly dons a kimona and cap, and allows hubby to come in. They both yawn and say good-night again. Each of them then hurries to get out, hubby going to his gambling and wifey to the dance. During the evening, Mr. Jones loses all his money, and even an I. O. U. for $100. Mrs. Jones enjoys the ball and there meets an old flame. At 1.30 a. m. she leaves, and is escorted home by the flame.

Meanwhile, hubby has arrived home, thought of the $100, in the sideboard, and is about to take it when he thinks he had better disguise himself as a burglar. Wifey arrives home, and just as she is getting ready to disrobe, she hears a noise downstairs, takes her umbrella, and goes down to the dining-room, where she finds the burglar. The old flame, meanwhile, is outside, and sees what is going on. At seeing the burglar, Mrs. Jones rushes upstairs for hubby, and finds he is not there. Being suspicious, she takes a revolver and returns to the dining-room, and leads her husband a merry dance. The flame, thinking himself a hero, hurries in to aid Mrs. Jones, only to be faced by the husband, who orders him out. The husband and wife stare at each other. Nothing is said. They retire to their rooms and bury the hatchet.

THE TERRIBLE DAUGHTER (Feb. 16).—Mme. Dumoulin is too vain to keep her grown daughter, Anais, at home, so she decides to send her to a boarding-school. But Anais has met a young student with whom she has fallen in love, and a short time afterward receives the following letter from him:

"Dear Miss Anais:—I adore you and I want you to marry me. I am now going to Paris to finish my studies, and I hope to see you again soon.

EDGARD DUROCHER."

Fate, however, at times, chooses to be somewhat ironical in her guidance of events, and when Mr. Durocher, the father, meets Anais, he, too, falls in love with her, and decides to ask for her hand in marriage. Having procured her address, he calls on the girl, but finds she has been dismissed from the school for her extravagances.

The mother, though infuriated with her daughter's conduct, at length decides to keep her at home, insisting, however, that she is to be considered eleven years of age and is to be dressed accordingly.

At about this time Mr. Durocher is shown in, and the astounded mother at first absolutely refuses to consider his proposal for her daughter, telling him again and again that Anais is only eleven years of age. The man persists, and impressed by his dignity and fine bearing, and also hoping that in this way she will at last be relieved of the girl, Mme. Dumoulin finally consents, telling him that her daughter is really seventeen years old. But Anais, wishing to spoil her mother's plan, persists in appearing as an eleven-year-old. She teases and torments Mr. Durocher with all sorts of pranks, thinking that through these means she will incur his dislike and that he will therefore withdraw his request for her hand; but love is patient and forbearing, and the ardent suitor is not at all discouraged.

Disappointed and disheartened, Anais finally makes up her mind that she will go back to the convent to escape it all, when suddenly Edgard arrives—and the rest may very easily be imagined.

BINKS DID IT (Feb. 15).—An Italian family are having a regular break-down dance, which causes the plaster on the ceiling below to fall in the dining-rom of the Irish family living there. They are just eating their supper when a large piece of plaster falls into the son's plate of soup. They all jump up and holler to the Italians above to quit the dancing, but they only increase their dancing. The Irish family get frightened, grab chairs, mortar hods, etc., to hold up the ceiling, sending the son to the lumber yard to get a plank to be used as a prop to hold up the ceiling. The Italians continue dancing more than ever. The son, having taken with him his two pet bull dogs, arrives at the lumber yard, secures a plank, and on coming out, knocks over an old washer-woman, causing the dogs to run away, dragging him and the plank after them. They get him all tangled up, spinning him around like a top; then dash off with him into a strange house up through the dining-room, where the family are just having supper, and up over the table, which crashes, upsetting everything. The boy is dragged out by the dogs, followed by the crowd, and a shower of plates. Meanwhile, the Italians are still dancing their heads off, the floor sagging and swaying. The Irish family by this time almost exhausted in trying to hold up the ceiling, plaster, etc., all over the place. The dogs still run away with the boy and the plank. They come down the street, followed by the crowd. The dogs drag the boy into another house upstairs to the next floor. As the crowd arrives at the foot of the stairs they are met by a shower of furniture, etc. The dogs have dragged the boy into an old maid's bedroom, who musses him up and throws him out, and just as the crowd at the foot of the stairs are recovering from the shower of furniture, the boy, plank, and dogs, come flying down on them. The dogs dash out of the house, and run away. The boy comes dashing out, still holding the plank, and beats it off for home. The Italians have danced till one of their number has fallen through up to his arms. The Irish below try to pull him through. Finding it impossible they shove him back up.

Just then the son arrives with the plank. He puts it up. All the Irish people say "Thank God" and take down the chairs, hods, etc., they have been holding up the ceiling with, and think all O. K. but alas! the poor nut of a boob son bought a plank eighteen inches wide, but only five inches thick, and it begins to bend, then breaks, and all the Italians, ceiling, plaster, etc., comes breaking through the ceiling. The boob son dives under the table while the Irish grab all the Italians and throw them out.

IN A WOMAN'S POWER (2 Reels—Feb. 13).—George, a young spendthrift, is cast aside by Cora after he spent his last dollar. As he leaves he reproaches her so severely that she is frightened and threatens him with a pistol. He seizes it and it is accidentally discharged and she is wounded. Horrified he is about to kill himself when the police enter and she accuses him of attempted murder. He is sentenced to prison for ten years. She is scarred for life and broods over it until she is warned that her reason will be affected.

George is released on parole after he has served less than half of his sentence. He falls in love with Marcelle and later marries her. She knows nothing of his criminal record as he has broken his parole and changed his name thus rendering himself liable to arrest. Cora has opened a gambling saloon. One night George visits the place and she recognizes him. She pleads for his love. He scorns her. She has him followed and sends him a letter threatening to denounce him. He decides to plead to her. His wife follows him and hears him denounced as a convict and she confronts Cora with deep scorn. Cora calls up the police and tells where they can find the convict who has broken his parole. The young couple go home and await the officers who go first to Cora and find her a maniac. The excitement has been too much for her. They go to George who clasping his wife in his arms is awaiting arrest. To their surprise the officers tell them the department has decided to pay no attention to the charge of a maniac and leave. Later, George and Marcelle attend the death bed of the repentant adventuress.

THANHOUSER.

HIS UNCLE'S WIVES (Feb. 2).—A young artist hears that an uncle in Constantinople has departed this life and left him his entire estate. He is pleased with the news as he is about to be married, and wires the executor to sell the estate and forward the proceeds. He hears nothing further until a letter arrives stating that the entire estate, excepting his uncle's wives, was expended to settle the debts, and that the wives are on the way to him. The artist is utterly dismayed. But, the wives arrive, and when he hears that his fiancee, too, is on the way to visit the studio, he poses the girls as models, and tries to hide the real condition of affairs from her. But the various wives persist in trooping around after him. Finally he reads of a theatrical company whose oriental dancers have deserted. He takes the wives to the theater, finds them ready work in the company, and proceeds to square matters with his fiancee.

SEVEN AGES OF AN ALLIGATOR (Feb. 2).—A nature study in film that will prove as entertaining as it is educational. It was produced by Thanhouser cameramen in California.

WHEN THE STUDIO BURNED DOWN (Feb. 4).—On the day the Thanhouser Eastern studio was destroyed by fire, one of the companies was many miles away, taking a scene in an important drama. The news of the accident finally reached them by telephone, but by the time they had returned to New Rochelle the building was completely destroyed.

On the long trip to the studio they were a prey to anxiety and the fear that friends, and relatives even, may have lost their lives. The Thanhouser Kid was one of the "outside company," while her mother was in the studio. As it happened the tiniest of the Thanhouser stars, "The Kidlet," was in the studio, and her mother in an "outside picture." The mother of "The Kidlet" when she left the studio, had placed her child in the care of Marguerite Snow, who, when the fire swept the building, saved the little one at the risk of her own life. The "Kidlet's" home, near the studio, was gutted by the flames. She was given temporary refuge by the slightly older star—the "Kid," of course—and that night "Kid" and "Kidlet" slept together and dreamt of the fine, new studio that was to replace the one that had been.

WHILE MRS. McFADDEN LOOKED OUT (Feb. 7).—Old Mrs. McFadden has a great leaning to looking-out-of-the-window, a harmless enough habit to be sure. But in Mrs. McFadden's instance, it was a menace and a danger. She would spend hours at the front window to the great hurt of her house duties and everything else.

One day the result of her dread weakness all came to a climax. While she kept her window-vigil in front, her daughter eloped from the rear. After she went out, the instalment furniture people came in, and took back the articles they had furnished her, although she had the money due them right in her purse, and would have paid them had she known they were around.

As the lady continues to "street-gaze," a blaze breaks forth in a rear room, and, as there are none on hand to quell it, spreads. The firemen come—by the rear way—and fight the flames valiantly with axe and hose. The latter give Mrs. McFadden her first intimation that she had better leave the window. A stream from the hose "gets" her in the ear. Then she comes in from out of the window.

LOS ANGELES THE BEAUTIFUL (Feb. 7).—The most interesting points about the California city, from an artistic and scenic standpoint, are reproduced with wonderful fidelity. The Angel's Flight, West Lake Park, the rare tropical growths that Los Angeles alone can boast, are all remembered.

AMERICAN.

THE FUGITIVE (Feb. 10).—The fugitive was reported in the vicinity and the sheriff, after a hasty call on his sweetheart, gathered his posse and gave hot pursuit. Over the mountains they galloped madly, the fugitive running almost in a circle.

In front of the cabin sat Grace Merriwell, the sheriff's sweetheart, when suddenly before her stood the hunted one. Instantly she recognized her brother and secreted him in the house. The sheriff, tracking his man unfailingly, stopped at the cabin. He entered and the excited girl made known her brother's presence in the house. The sheriff hesitated. It was love or duty and the sheriff chose love. Taking the fugitive by the hand he bade him secrete himself in another room. The posse entered and all felt satisfied with the sheriff's word but Higgins. He, suspicious, went from room to room and with lightning-like rapidity the hunted man changed his hiding place. When they had all gone, the sheriff bowed his head. Taking the star from his breast he threw it on the table for he knew that his day was over. Between love and duty he had chosen love.

PECOS PETE IN SEARCH OF A WIFE (Feb. 13).—A cowboy from New Mexico concludes his only requirement to complete his earthly joys is the acquisition of a wife, so he goes to market to seek his prize. How large a variety he would have to select from he little dreamt and once it became known about that he was in quest of a mate, he soon had a peck of trouble on his hands. Possibly all would have been well had Pecos not taken it upon himself to offer unqualified encouragement to many, only to take the liberty of changing his mind. From Widow Cotts he switched to Singing Bird, an Indian girl, only to transfer to Dolores, a Mexican senorita. The excitement grew in intensity from day to day and had its climax when Pecos ran into a party of school teachers on a vacation trip. The experienced eye of Widow Cotts, however, gave her the upper hand and she soon had Pecos Pete annexed to her sheep ranch, much to the disgust of Pete.

THE ROMANCE (Feb. 15).—At the Cliff Villa, Miss Brown and her maiden aunt were finding life anything but the beautiful pastime that the architectural and horticultural beauties bespoke for those fortunate enough in life to be able to command such comforts. On the contrary things were growing so monotonous to Laura Brown that she sought for and found enjoyment in tantalizing her aunt, upon whom Dame Fortune had never smiled long enough to make her either attractive or wealthy.

When the scion of a wealthy family made his debut in the circle of acquaintance that forms the leading characters for this very interesting portrayal, matters were not prospering as well as could be desired until idleness of mind led Miss Brown into mischief that led up to the unraveling of a beautiful romance.

SOME DOCTOR (Feb. 13).—Young Doctor Green's village practice is small and he finds himself in straightened circumstances. One morning the landlord calls for his rent and states that the doctor must pay up or vacate. The doctor has a fertile brain, however, and hits upon a scheme that he thinks will raise the wherewithall. He writes a note:

"I am a poor outcast, afflicted with small-pox. I die, rather than contaminate others.

Despairingly, JOS. SMITH."

Placing this note in the pocket of an old suit of clothes, borrowed from his gardener, he lays the clothes on the bank of the local river and awaits developments. An old fisherman discovers the clothes, alarms the neighbors, and in a twinkling half the population of the village is eagerly examining the clothes of the supposed suicide for a mark of identification. They do not find the note, as it is tucked in the small watch pocket of the trousers. At this point Dr. Green appears and finds the note, which he reads. Of course all are thrown into a panic through fear of contamination and rush the doctor off to his office, where he vaccinates all hands at one dollar per vaccination. When the landlord appears again for his rent he is paid instantly and also submits to a vaccination operation at the doctor's own rate.

THE STRIKE LEADER (2 reels) (Feb. 5).—In a large factory the boss, to lessen expenses, cuts the men's wages. The men hold a mass meeting. Among them is Larry, friend of all, and the leader. They appoint a committee to call upon Wingate, the boss. Their plea is refused. Wingate's ward, Margery, is well known among the poor for her kindness and charity. Joe, a burly workman, detains her one night; she tries to get away and is getting frightened when Larry happens along and comes to her assistance. He escorts her to a car.

The men vote to go on strike. Larry still escorts Margery whenever he sees her in the tenement districts. Nilson, Wingate's friend, is refused by Margery. He happens to talk to Joe, who tells him of Margery's meetings with Larry. Nilson brings Joe to Wingate and he is told what Margery has done. The two men know that a big meeting is coming off that night. Larry is the leader, and if he is present it will mean a strike. They evolve a plan. Wingate pretends to be very angry with his ward and insists upon seeing this strange man whom she has been meeting. He forces her to send a note to Larry. This note brings him to the mansion. He leaves his trusty friend, Red, outside. As soon as he steps indoors he finds himself covered by revolvers of the two men. He sees the plot at once, and realizes they are too many for him. The girl tries to help him get away but she is locked in another room. Joe is sent to the meeting to tell the men that Larry has gone back on them.

Red, who waits in vain, suspects foul work and jumps into a pasing motor car and rushes to the meeting; he arrives just as the men are about to believe Joe and do as he says. Red shows them the note from the girl and explains why Larry is away. They all pile into the automobile and hurry to Wingate's mansion. Larry has been making a terrible fight, but it seems hopeless. Just then his pals arrive. The disturbance brings the police. Larry tells his story, backed up by Margery. He demands the arrest of Wingate and Nilson. The girl pleads and Larry says if Wingate will raise the wages of the former scale he will withdraw. This is speedily done to the mutual satisfaction of all.

AN AMERICAN QUEEN (Feb. 8).—Karl, Crown Prince of Dania, gives up his right to the throne that he may marry Gilda, a peasant girl. With his young wife he goes to America, leaving his father, the king, very bitter. Twenty years pass. Both Karl and his wife are dead, but their daughter, Marie, lives and is working for her living. She never thinks of Dania. But out in that little kingdom, the heir apparent, always a weakling, dies and leaves the throne without an heir. At the king's death the throne of Dania will revert to the duke of the next principality unless some trace of Karl can be found.

The king sends ministers to America, where they find Marie and acquaint her with the fact that the throne of Dania is waiting for her. She does not want to go back at first for she loves Jim Dane, a typical American chap, and is loathe to leave him. But she is finally persuaded. Off in Dania she soon wins the love of all the little country. She makes the place lively with the latest American music. But, most surprising of all, she soon possesses the deepest affection of the bitter old king, who dies, content his country will be in good hands.

But the arrival of Jim upsets everything. The ministers cannot consider the match at all and inform the queen that she must marry a man of her own rank. She refuses and clings to Jim. Angered by their refusal to accept him, she says she will return to America and no pleading can alter her decision. But when all preparations are made, she stops to listen to the voice of the people and realizes for the first time that they are her people and they need her, so she agrees to remain and all objection to Jim is revoked.

MAJESTIC.

THE EXTRA BABY (Feb. 2).—Jack Brettone is jilted by his sweetheart, Helen; he goes West, a confirmed woman hater. He establishes himself on a ranch with a Chinaman. Helen regrets the quarrel with Jack and bored with society enters an orphan asylum as a nurse. A call comes to the orphan asylum for a number of children to be sent West for adoption. Helen is chosen as the nurse to go with the children to their new homes. Among them is a little girl named Bess.

When the train arrives at its destination, it is found that there has been a mistake in the number of children sent, there being one child too many. Bess is found to be the extra baby and there being no place to leave her, it is decided to return her to the asylum. Under the guardianship of Helen and Miss Miggs, another nurse, the return trip is started with the disappointed child. The nurses worn out by the long trip leave the child to her own amusement while they doze in another seat. Bess conceives the idea that somewhere in the great country there must be someone who wants a little girl to love. She decides to go in search of him. The train stops at a water tank and unnoticed, the child clambers over the suit cases and alighting from the train, hides behind a box until the train vanishes. The little feet lag and at last, worn out by the long walk, she pillows her head upon her doll and falls asleep. Jack returning from the village store, discovers the child and is startled at her sleepy inquiry, "Do you want a little girl to love?" Jack takes Bess home to his shack where he learns her story.

Helen discovers the disappearance of the child and hires a horse and returns alone in search of the runaway. She discovers the doll where Jack had overlooked it, and finding Jack's shack, creeps up to the door, to see the sleeping child in the arms of a strange man. She tries to gather the child in her arms but is repulsed by Jack. Helen lifts her eyes to encounter those of Jack. At their mutual cry of recognition Bess awakes. Helen explains that she has come to take the child away with her. Jack tells Helen that he intends to keep the child and make a woman, and not a flirt of her. Helen, proudly refuses to confess her change of heart. Jack signs a paper agreeing to provide for the child. Helen kisses Bess goodbye and a slender gold chain she wears becomes entangled in a button on the child's sleeve and, unnoticed, falls to the floor. Helen starts upon her return trip to the station. Jack re-entering the room is attracted by a gleam from the floor. He discovers the locket and discovers that Helen's love has always been true. He quickly saddles his horse and follows in her wake. Standing beside her horse he finds her, her slender form shaken with sobs. Gently whispering his love and perfect understanding he draws her into his arms. Slipping the bridle of her horse over his arm, he turns their faces towards the glowing West, where long golden shadows pave the way to their new life.

AN INTERRUPTED ELOPEMENT (Feb. 4).—Mabel and Tom are in love but her father objects and orders Tom from the house. When the young couple meet, the old man comes out with his gun and threatens to shoot Tom if he ever sees Tom around again. Frightened at this, the girl removes the bullets from her father's gun. That night she plans to elope with Tom.

Some painters have left a ladder against the house and Tom is to climb up at nine o'clock. A couple of tramps passing by see the ladder and decide to rob the house as things are arranged so conveniently. One of them climbs the ladder and at the top is surprised to have a suit case handed out to him. Mabel has heard the steps and thinking it Tom, she steps out. But once on the ground she discovers her mistake and attempts to run away. The tramps, fearing they may be caught, grab the girl and start to gag her. Her father hears the disturbance and runs out, gun in hand. He tries to shoot but sees that his gun is useless, the bullets are gone. The tramps laugh and one of them jumps for the old man. Just as he is being overpowered Tom drives up in his car. With one step he is at the old man's side and has knocked the tramps senseless. After that there is no need of an elopement for father is only too willing to bestow the blessing.

KAY-BEE.

SMILING DAN (Feb. 14).—Dan's magnetic smile wins for him the sobriquet of "Smiling Dan." He is engaged to Betty Brown, and stops at her gate every evening on his way home from work. In the settlement is a family named Carrol, who are always quarreling. Carrol keeps an inn, and Dan enters as the couple are in the midst of a terrific quarrel. Dan tries to act as peacemaker, and Mrs. Carrol mistakes his friendliness. One day as he is talking to the woman, advising her to be patient and try to win her husband's love back, he impulsively puts his arm about her shoulder, and is seen by Betty, who becomes very jealous.

Dan and Betty are married, and the Carrols continue their unhappy life. In the inn Mrs. Carrol is weepingly telling Dan her troubles when Carrol comes in. Hot words pass between the two men, and in the encounter Dan is wounded in the arm and Carrol is left ii a dying condition. Dan makes his way home, and when the posse comes to look for him Betty cleverly hides him under her ironing board, covering him with a table cloth. Dan keeps in hiding, and Carrol recovers from his wound. While Betty is at the store Mrs. Carrol goes to Dan and pleads with him to elope with her, but he gently but firmly tells her that he loves his wife dearly, and that his interest in Mrs. Carrol has been nothing but sympathy and friendship. Betty, listening at the window, has her jealous fears removed, and enters the house with a happy smile and a light heart.

THE WHEELS OF DESTINY (2 reels—Feb. 12).—The Sioux Indians capture a Cheyenne, and proceed to torture him. He is made to run the gauntlet, and in a sensational scene breaks through the lines and dashes away, hotly pursued. He clambers up the steep mountain-side, and as his pursuers gain on him he loosens huge boulders which come crashing down on the Indians below. He is wounded and exhausted and about to be captured when Capt. Gordon, at the head of a troop of cavalry, rescues him, and the Indian thereafter is as faithful as a dog to his master.

There is a game of cards at the post, and the officers are playing for high stakes. Gordon loses his temper and accuses Capt. Carter of cheating. A fierce quarrel ensues, the combatants are separated by friends, and the accused man leaves the room. The two men meet outside the post gate and the quarrel is resumed. Carter, in a rage, draws a gun. The Indian, from behind a clump of bushes, watches the fight. Fearing for his benefactor, the Indian fires, and Carter drops to the ground. Gordon escapes and makes his way to a secluded town, where he manages to send a message to his wife and little girl to join him.

She starts out, accompanied by the Indian, in a prairie schooner, and they join an emigrant train. The emigrants are attacked by Indians, and the friendly redskin manages to get Mrs. Gordon and her child through the attacking lines by the exercise of Indian cunning. They become lost on the desert, however, and Mrs. Gordon finally succumbs to her wounds, aggravated by her burning thirst, as the party is without water. Before expiring she puts her locket, with her picture in it, about the neck of the little girl, Ruth. While the Indian is searching for water Ruth is found by a trapper, and is adopted by him, growing up to be an attractive young woman. The trapper becomes a drunkard, however, and frequents a gambling house which is run by Gordon, who is living under an assumed name. The trapper is turned out of the gambling house one day in a drunken condition, and falls over a cliff and is killed. Feeling himself in a measure responsible for the man's death, Gordon takes Ruth to his home, wishing to adopt her. The good people of the settlement, however, call upon him and persuade him to let some church people in a distant town take care of her. Before leaving Gordon finds the locket, and hears from her the story of her mother's death. Knowing her to be his daughter he remains silent, as he does not wish to cloud her life with the shadow of her father's alleged crime, and he pays for her board and tuition.

Carter has fully recovered, and is now a colonel. His son meets Ruth and the two fall in love and become engaged. Ruth writes to her foster father, and he comes on. When he learns the name of the man she is to marry he breaks down, tells her who she really is, and forbids the wedding. She tells young Carter, and he informs his father, who comes to Gordon. The meeting is dramatic, old Carter telling Gordon that the Indian confessed before dying that he fired the shot, and freely forgiving Gordon for the old quarrel.

GAUMONT.

A REGRETTED RESIGNATION (Jan. 23).—Mr. Heeza Boob, with his employer, is as popular as the smallpox. His employment as a clerk doesn't afford excitement, and one evening in excess of enthusiasm he goes forth upon a liquid skate. While in this condition he writes a letter to his employer, which reads: "Bossiest of Bosses—Consider yourself fired from the job of being my employer. HEEZA BOOB." After reaching home he realized that he had forgotten that he had a large wife and a small family on his hands (and on his bank-account). His wife is not at all pleased that he has resigned his perfectly good job and she felt like arguing with him with a broom or a rolling-pin, only she reflected that she was a perfect lady. "We must recover that letter before your 'fired' boss gets it," she exclaims. Accordingly, Mr. and Mrs. Heeza Boob and all the little Boobs go round to the mail-box to wait for the postman to come to collect the letter. By hook or by crook they hope to induce him to return it to them. They try many cajoleries. They offer him a little loose change, in fact, excruciatingly loose, but he says: "You can't bribe me—besides 50c is no inducement." They tell him what a handsome brute he is, how he has a shape like Mary Garden, how he looks like Venus at the Sink, how he has a face that would give a cannibal an appetite. He couldn't be jollied.

Little Osucha Boob has a toy gun and the Boobs arrange a diabolical scheme to bring about the fall of the adamant postman. They sick little Osucha Boob onto the postman and have him push the gun in between the legs of the man of letters as on he walks with the pride of a head waiter. The gun does its fell work and the postman sprawls in the dust of the road. "Did you enjoy your trip?" asks Heeza Boob, as with great suavity he pounces upon him and tries to take the letter from him by main force. The postman, however, fights them off and continues on his way somewhat broken in spirit.

A happy thought enters Heeza Boob's head. They had noticed that the postman's shoes have been much trod upon. Heeza Boob runs into a shoe store and emerges with a beautiful pair of brogans. He dangles them in front of the postman's nose. The latter's heart is in his feet, and he couldn't be moved except through the raptures of a new pair of No. thirteens, double D. He gives back the letter and all the little Boobs and all the big Boobs wallow in their joy. Heeza Boob hands the youngest Boob the letter, which would have cost him his job. The younger Boob holds the letter in his cutie-cute hands, and he is so Truly A Boob in name as in action that he thinks the letter is to be mailed. As he passes a post-box he drops into it the letter.

The Boob family forgot about the matter, and next day Heeza Boob reports to the office. "What happened?" is his agonized thought as he tumbles down the stairs under the impetus and encouragement of a pointed toe. Of course, the boss had received the letter and from thence the source of his "kick."

RAGUSE, THE PEARL OF THE ADRIATIC (Jan. 23).—Panoramic views of one of the most beautiful cities of the Mediterranean. There are scenes of the church of St. Blaise, the Old Mint, the Franciscan Cloister, an embroiderer's shop, the Governor's Palace, the Gate and Bridge of the Ploce, the Harbor, the Door of the Pilles, and a view of the Adriatic.

IN THE CLAWS OF THE LEOPARD (Special Release).—John Waring, a prospector, receives discouraging news regarding his lands in the wilds of South Africa. The drought has ruined the harvest. There is no food for the cattle. Fever has broken out among the men, who are being attacked by wild beasts.

Waring determines to go to the property and examine conditions for himself. He sends a letter by a postrider to that effect. Only too true was the message from the manager of operations—the postrider is devoured by a leopard as he passes through the forest. Waring on arriving at the property, examines loose shale and finds traces of minerals. Before he has time to act upon his discovery he falls a victim to the "fever" and dies.

Simpson, the manager, finds on the table in the dead man's room a letter which Waring had been writing. The letter reads in part: "I am certain that there is a gold bearing vein . . . ." The manager and another man agree to keep Waring's discovery to themselves. They plot to obtain possession of the claim. In writing to Waring's widow they depreciate the value of the property and offer her $5,000 for it. Mrs. Waring is suspicious, and thinks that if it is worth $5,000 to them, it must be worth more to her. She says that she will have an expert make a thorough survey of the property and that she cannot accept their offer until this has been done.

Accompanied by Jack, her late husband's friend, she goes to the mine. The manager and his accomplices are at a loss to know how to get rid of Mrs. Waring. A letter to the foreman, saying that another man had been carried away by a leopard and that the beasts attack the camp every night suggest a means. To get Jack out of the way is then a problem. They lead him into a card game and induce him to drink. They had written an anonymous letter to Mrs. Waring which read: "The manager has hidden in the house at the mine, specimens of ore which he intends to omit from the inventory. If you go alone at night and enter by the little door you will see for yourself. A Well Wisher."

The mine house mentioned is some distance from Mrs. Waring's home, and has been long empty. It is in a wild country and wild beasts swarm around it. A leopard with a healthy appetite smells human food and enters the mine house. It attacks Mrs. Waring, who had gone there. From room to room she fights it off, and although wounded by the claws and teeth of the savage beast, prevents it from killing her.

Jack is still engrossed in his card game. Suddenly he realizes that a deeper game is being played. He sees Simpson surreptitiously refill Jack's glass for the tenth time. There is a fight. Suspecting that the mine house might be the scene of an unknown plot, Jack quickly gallops there and enters just in time—Mrs. Waring, her strength exhausted, is at the mercy of the leopard. Jack shoots it. After a day of careful nursing Mrs. Waring is able to go home. The mine manager and his accomplices endeavor to escape but Jack overtakes and deals summarily with them.

LUX.

TICKETS, PLEASE (Feb. 7).—Pat is collecting tickets on the Creepy Crawley Express. He succumbs to the charms of a fair young thing, who sets his heart thumping so loudly that it can be heard above the roar and rattle of the locomotive. He tried all the artful little blandishments he knows of, but the fair creature regards him with a sphinx-like gaze. There is also another admirer of the lady on the train, and he promptly casts Pat out of the carriage window for presuming to rival him.

Under these trying circumstances Pat's stout heart fails him not, and he makes his way to the baggage wagon where he hides himself in the lady's dress basket. Upon arriving at her destination, the fair one has the basket taken to her hotel, and Pat soon finds himself hidden in his beloved's bedroom. He has a cautious peep around, and discovers that his rival has also surreptitiously entered the apartment. Pat cannot restrain his indignation, and thus betrays his presence to his rival, who promptly draws a revolver and opens fire upon him. A deadly duel follows, and the two bloodthirsty villains entirely wreck the bedroom. The noise caused by their violent efforts to wreak their vengeance attracts the other guests who, with the able assistance of the hotel staff, proceed to give them a lesson in the conduct of their future love affairs.

WONDERFUL FRUITS (Feb. 7).—A clever trick film which will amuse and please your audience.

LEOPOLD AND THE LEOPARD (Feb. 14).—Leo is one of the lads that adorn the promenade at Southend. He sees a pretty girl, and promptly follows her home. Mary resents his intrusions, but he is so persistent that she determines to give him a lesson which he is not likely to forget. She promises to marry him if he will carry a note to a friend of hers, and bring back to her whatever may be given to him. The letter is to her fiancé and instructs him to send back by bearer his pet leopard.

Leo is somewhat alarmed by the ferocity of his charge, but sticks valiantly with the beast. The leopard goes for poor Leo, and gives him a very warm time, and, after passing through as much excitement in about five minutes as the ordinary individual meets with in a lifetime, poor Leo is oblged to emulate the example of Charlie's Aunt—he is still running.

A MODERN ARCHITECT (Feb. 14).—Having decided to build a house after her own ideas of house building, Arabella draws up her plans and sets to work. The workmen do not hurry sufficiently to suit her ladyship and she makes them work at a very high speed. Finally her house is finished in a down-right-Jerry-built fashion, and it does not prove capable of containing the crowd of guests whom Arabella invites to attend the house-warming. The house collapses under its burden and causes the guests to receive many hard knocks, which they do not omit to return to the unfortunate architect with interest.

AN ORPHAN'S CONQUEST (Feb. 8).—Minna Mark is a pupil at a girl's seminary and her best chum is Ann, who is an orphan. Just before the holidays, Mr. and Mrs. Mark pay their daughter a visit and impart the joyous information that she is to return home for a short vacation. Minna insists that her friend must be of the holiday party and accordingly she is invited. As the days pass, it is evident that the two young women are enjoying their holiday to the fullest extent and then arrives a note from a friend of the family announcing that his son John Gerald is about to pay them a long promised visit, Mr. Mark and his wife are overjoyed, because they had long wished that John and Minna might be drawn to each other and the families be united. In order to take no chances on the future happiness of their daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Mark decide that during the stay of John Gerald, Ann, the orphan chum of their daughter should assume the role of a serving maid. Mr. Gerald arrives and notwithstanding the elaborate precautions taken he falls a victim to the charms of the pseudo servant. Seeing the trend of affairs, the parents of Minna come to the conclusion that unusual efforts must be resorted to if they are to bring about an alliance between their daughter and John.

The old gentleman engages the services of a private detective and arranges that the sleuth shall abduct Ann during the festivities in connection with a fancy dress ball which they are about to give. The plan agreed upon is that the detective is to appear as a policeman and arrest Ann on a charge of theft. On the night of the ball John and Ann saunter through the grounds and the former takes occasion to declare his love for her. He is overheard by Minna, who interrupts their tete-a-tete with the announcement that Ann is wanted on another part of the grounds. She complies with her girl friend's request and is promptly placed under arrest. Fortunately, however, John has overheard the plot and he appears on the scene just as the detective is about to lead Ann to jail. John enters unexpectedly and pulls the police disguise from the detective and announces that the orphan, Ann, is his affianced wife, The Mark family stands aghast and the detective retires in confusion.

SOLAX.

THE EYES OF SATAN (Feb. 12).—A conjurer, by mental suggestion and tricks, known as slight-of-hand, and optical illusion, changes the habits and disposition of an inebriate and a grouchy old father-in-law.

Throught his efforts, the grouchy old man becomes a gay old blade, and the inebriate son-in-law becomes a teetotaler. This change brings satisfaction to the young man's wife, and the wife of the old grouch.

The story starts with a big artistic insert, of a neglected young wife, looking at a clock at 3 a. m., and hubby still at the club. Wify, the next morning, immediately goes home to mamma upon whom she inflicts her tale of woe. Papa is an old grouch, and he does not encourage the protestations of his daughter. The mother, however, sympathizes with her child and plans to engage the conjurer, by whose advertisement she has been attracted. The conjurer's services are enlisted and the merry time begins. A remarkable scene takes place in the conjurer's laboratory, in which a skeleton goes through many grotesque and comic stunts.

THE THIEF (Feb. 14).—Colonel Beverly Spottiswoode has fallen upon lean days. With his wife and daughter he is living in poverty in a dingy tenement, and having a hard struggle to make ends meet. At the time the story opens the last cent has been expended, and there is nothing in the house to eat. In addition, the daughter Rose, has fallen ill.

When affairs are at this pass the Colonel receives a letter from an old schoolmate bidding him to a college reunion dinner at a fashionable restaurant. He is at first loath to go, but his wife and daughter prevail upon him to accept, for he will perhaps come upon something to relieve their distress among his old friends. The old evening clothes are brought out, sponged and pressed, and the Colonel sets forth.

In a restaurant he finds Alex Henderson, his old school chum, who is giving the dinner, and ten or a dozen others of the old crowd. At the dinner the Colonel with the others is given the opportunity to examine a remarkably fine diamond Henderson is wearing. The stud is passed about from one to the other, when suddenly the lights go out. When they come on again the diamond is seen to be missing. A search is made everywhere but the stone cannot be found. Henderson locks the door and telephones for the police. Two officers appear and the situation is explained to them. They suggest a search of all present be made. All agree except the Colonel, and he is at once suspected. The party breaks up and the Colonel is shadowed home by a detective and Henderson, who climb on the fire escape to spy into the Colonel's rooms. Immediately is seen the reason why the Colonel would not permit a search. From his pockets he brings forth portions of food he has concealed there and brought home to his starving family. Henderson sends the detective away, and, descending the fire escape knocks at the door. The Colonel is at first cold, but as Henderson explains that he has come to apologize, he is admitted, and as he walks across the floor, the daughter catches a glimpse of something sparkling in his heel. The diamond stud is found imbedded in the rubber heel of Henderson's shoe, and Henderson thereupon presents it to Rose.

SILVER BLAZE—Silver Blaze was the favorite! And a beautiful piece of horseflesh she was. Colonel Ross was expecting a lot from this wonderful animal on Derby Day. And then came despair! Early in the morning the stable-boy is aroused from a deep sleep caused by a drug, to find Silver Blaze gone—and the jockey, Shraker, dead, with a crushed skull, in the open field nearby.

Sherlock Holmes had first-hand information of this case since he was at the home of his old friend Ross, when the Colonel's beautiful horse disappeared.

An investigation by the great detective gives him a sure clue to the whereabouts of the animal and he acts promptly.

Colonel Ross insists that he must withdraw the favorite from the race program, but Holmes says "No!" and his command is emphatic.

Rather bewildered but trusting the wisdom of his old friend, Colonel Ross goes to the track on Derby Day, but is dismayed when he can find no trace of good old "Silver Blaze."

But Holmes bids him wait and insists that his horse will come through a sure winner, despite his apparent mysterious absence.

The race is finished and the winner comes to the Stables—and here to the nervous and astonished Colonel Ross, a little water and a soft cloth remove from the forehead of the winner a dark stain which had covered up the great blazing white mark which had given the beautiful animal the name of "Silver Blaze."

Holmes' investigation had trailed the Derby favorite to the home of trainer Brown and he forced Brown to admit having the horse. The jockey, Shraker, had attempted to steal the animal and had drugged the stable boy, but he was thrown and kicked by the racer and so his villainous plans were suddenly halted.

Brown found "Silver Blaze" in the open field and thought to make him unreconizable by painting over the great white "blaze," but he had not calculated on the genius of Sherlock Holmes.

KINEMACOLOR

THE HOUSE THAT JACK BUILT (2 Reels).—Jack loves Milly but her father will not have him, as he has not even a home to offer her. The father's taunt stings Jack and he declares he will build the home himself. After the wedding the young couple go to Jack's house and their troubles begin. The windows will not move. The front door declines to shut. When the door bell is pulled the entire wiring comes out. The chimney smokes and covers everything in the room with soot, including Jack and Milly. The roof leaks during a heavy rain and deluges the room and its occupants. Jack climbs through the skylight to fix the roof, but only succeeds in falling from the top, tearing the shingles as he falls. Torrents of rain come through on Milly, who by this time is drenched to the skin.

She is furious and determines to leave for her mother's home. To her mother drenched Milly goes with her story. The mother puts dry clothes on her and father goes for carpenters. The rain has stopped, and they all arrive at "The House That Jack Built" to find poor soaked Jack sitting on his steps determined to catch cold and die. Father consults the builders, whose advice is to tear the house down and begin over again, and this they do. The husband and wife "make up" and Jack swears never again to build a house.

MAN'S BEST FRIEND.—A reel in which Kinemacolor shows some nine different breeds of dogs. The breeds shown are the Yorkshire Terriers, Great Danes, St. Bernards, Collies, Yiourouks, Pekinese, Japs, Poms and Samoyedes.

LAUNCHING OF THE U. S. S. NEW YORK.—The launching of the U. S. S. New York, which took place at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, October 30th, 1912, created an unusual amount of interest as this is the largest war vessel now afloat. The New York is 565 feet in length is 95 feet in width.

A VISIT TO THE JUNGFRAU.—The Jungfrau, one of the most magnificent of the Swiss mountains, is 13,670 feet high and is situated inn the Bernese Alps twelve miles from the important centre of Interlaken. The film opens with a marvelously clear picture of a crowd of people watching a balloon ascent being made for a cup offered by the London Daily Mirror. In the distance is the Jungfrau, its snow-clad peak clearly outlined against the blue sky. We see the preparations for the ascent and when the balloon is fully inflated it rises rapidly, the camera following it as it mounts the heavens.

Next we see a panorama including views of the following peaks in the order named: Sulverhorn, Snowhorn, Jungfrau and Monch. The sky is dark and full of presage of an approaching storm. Then come close views of the Monch and Eiger as seen from the Jungfrau. We next see a couple of American tourists passing through a tunnel of ice in order to reach the top of the Jungfrau. A splendid view of the Aletach glacier is next brought before us. Eternal snow is on the ground for we are now 10,500 feet high. Next is visualized the saddle of the Jungfrau. Four tourists are here seen crossing an expanse of snow into which they sink heavily at every step. The flag flying a few score yards away marks the position of a sheer precipice 3,000 feet down. And last, but not least, we see the Valley of Lauterbrunnen, with Interlaken in the far distance and close views of the Schreckhorn.

THE BLACK VEILS (2 Reels—Jan. 4).—Old rancours have made Nora's mother and Jack's father enemies, but this does not prevent the boy and girl from falling desperately in love with each other.

Unfortunately, Jack's father discovers them together and to break the great love his son has for Nora he sends him to the naval college. Before leaving Jack contrives to send Nora a letter in which he expresses his immutable love for her, and also bids her farewell.

Three years have passed. Jack has come home a brilliant officer now and master of a fortune, his father having just died. He is still in love with Nora and informs her immediately of his arrval. They meet in the park where she is able to embrace her sweetheart again. Her mother had done her utmost to marry her to a young and very wealthy young man, but without success.

While Jack is returning home he is assaulted and receives a knife wound in his back. The knife is found near him and bears a strange mark on it. He is carried to his home in a very dangerous state and Nora runs to assist him. She is a strong-minded woman and her one desire now is to discover the would-be murderer of her lover.

For this purpose she goes to a girl friend who introduces her to a secret organization of women called the "Black Veils," and before a large audience she solicits their help in locating the criminal. She is given a knife, the sign of the society, and is surprised to find on it the same mark as on the fatal one in her possesion. So the criminal belongs to the secret society.

After many investigations their efforts are at last rewarded. Nora's mother is the guilty one. Nora, however, saves her from the severe judgment of the secret society.

Luckily, Jack is steadily recovering from his severe illness, and all ends well in forgivenes and happiness.

ROMANCE OF A HEART (2 Reels—Jan. 25).—Ida, a poor but beautiful girl, is desperately in love with Jack, a student at the Medical University, who is merely infatuated with her and forgets for the time all about his family. He receives a severe telegram from his father calling him home, and he leaves the tearful Ida with many promises of a speedy return.

Many months pass by. Jack is now engaged to a beautiful young heiress, and during the time he has spent at home amid the pleasures of his fashionable surroundings he has completely forgotten his first love Ida, who is struggling hard for a livelihood and who cannot forget him.

Jack is going to take the examinations for his doctor's degree and for this purpose returns, but how changed! He enters the operating room with his instruments ready to prove hsi skill on the dead body lying on the operating table. When with his hand he removes the white sheet which covers the body, what is is surprise and sorrow to see the face of Ida, who had ended her life which was made so hopeless by his desertion.

BETWEEN LIFE AND DEATH (2 Reels—Feb. 1).—Henry falls in love with a girl, who with her true lover, plots to squeeze money out of Henry. The latter writes to his rich uncle for aid, but it is refused. He ruins himself at play, and deserted by the woman, he is about to end his life when he is stopped by the president of the Suicide Club, who makes him a member of his organization. Henry is told that he will die within three months, for he has drawn the fatal ace.

Upon arriving home he finds a letter stating that he uncle is dead, and that he has inherited a fortune. He tells his troubles to the girl, who after having made him sign a will in her favor, instals her lover in Henry's house disguised as a detective. The lover attempts to kill Henry time after time, but he is always prevented by the members of the Suicide Club, which is controlled by Henry's uncle, who uses this means to save his nephew from the woman. Finally the woman and her lover accomplice are arrested, and Henry realizes his narrow escape.

THIS IS THE TEST

Seeing is believing, your eyes can't deceive you.

We shipped 67 Mirroroide screens within the past 8 days—32 per cent. were repeat orders.

Mirroroide is water proof. It won't crack, peel or turn black. It is backed up with a solid five year guarantee. Mirroroide made day light projection possible.

IT IS THE ORIGINAL, THE ONLY Matte Surface Curtain in the world so highly endorsed by the world's greatest authorities.

It eliminates glare, haze, eyestrain and that terrible out-of-focus effect so peculiar to other metallic surfaced screens.

Pictures are soft and pleasing to the eyes—200 brighter and clearer. At the same time you can keep your theater brightly illuminated, obtaining perfect moral conditions, resulting in the better class of patronage.

Gundlach Projection Lenses

The Only Lenses Which Guarantee You The Best Pictures
The Only Lenses Giving The Greatest Possible Illumination
The Only Lenses Exact in Focal Length To Within 1 100 of an Inch

There were no high grade Lenses on the market until GUNDLACH LENSES were made and none now that equal them in optical quality and illuminating power.

The GUNDLACH NO. 2 PROJECTION LENSES made the long throw possible and already hundreds of theater owners have taken advantage of this opportunity to increase their theaters in length and seating capacity adding to their profits at the same time.

The superior quality of GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES is recognized by the leading makers of machines and they will be supplied to order in place of the ordinary lens equipment at very little increase in price.

No matter how well satisfied you are with your picture we invite you to order a GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENS for trial to see the difference. Nearly all our lenses are sold to exhibitors who have ordinary lenses, but are looking for something better. In many cases a customer orders one lens for trial and then re-equips all his machines, sometimes the machines of several theaters.

GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES are used by the Kinemacolor Company of America because they must have the best.

DIXIE THEATRE

Mr. J. H. Hallberg, Punta Gorda, Fla., January 23, 1913.

Dear Sir: After having used your 220 volt, D. C., Economizer for the past four months, we wish to state that same has done more than we expected, and all you claim for it; in fact, the saving has been over 50 per cent., and we might add that the objectionable heat in operating room has been entirely eliminated. Thanking you for past favors, we wish to remain,

Very truly yours,
GOLDSTEIN & PERKINS,
Per H. C. Goldstein.

This is the verdict of all users of Hallberg Economizers.

I make them for all circuits—Hallberg Standard A. C. Economizers, Hallberg Direct Current Economizers, Hallberg A. C. to D. C. Economizers.

Write for price list of "USED MACHINE BARGAINS" and also second-hand current saving devices of all makes

I EQUIP THEATRES COMPLETELY

Hundreds of exhibitors, in all parts of the country have benefited by my advice, without any charge, saving money in their original equipment, and by purchasing from me securing only the right goods and the best made.

FULL LINE OF M. P. SUPPLIES

The Hallberg Ticket Dispenser—Takes all standard tickets. Write for circular giving full description and price.

Free Circulars on all makes of M. P. Machines, but Hallberg's Big Catalogue, 100 Pages, costs you 25c by mail.

J. H. HALLBERG, 36 East 23rd Street, NEW YORK

I have been appointed distributor for all makes of motion picture machines under the new Sales plan. Dealers should apply promptly for contract.

FEATURE FEBRUARY

(Second Week: A comedy of the Courts, a tale of the Ticker and an essay on the Easy)

Sunday, February 9

"Good Morning, Judge!"

A young man received a note from his sweetheart, making an appointment, and he carelessly left it in a coat that was sent to the tailor. The note fell out of this and the tailor put it in the pocket of another man's coat. The other man was a Henpeck; his wife discovered the note, and kept the appointment. In the mix-up, the wife and the first young man were arrested and arraigned before the—father of the latter's sweetheart! Oh, it is to SCREAM!

Tuesday, February 11

A Mystery of Wall Street

He was a great financier and he fell in love with a girl whose father was also on 'Change. She rejected his suit. In a rage, the financier got busy with the market. Aiming his strength at the securities of the girl's father, he reduced the man to penury. But there was a turn in the market. With it, the father regained his wealth. How was it accomplished? Through the financier's absence. Why was he absent? Ah, there's the reason for the title!

Some Fools There Were

Men guests at a summer resort meet a real "charmer" there and are—charmed! Each does not know, though, that the other has met the lady in the case, who, in loving remembrance, has taken a snapshot of them all. Then they learn she was a writer collecting data and photos for a magazine story on "Fools You Meet at a Summer Resort!" This is the SECOND comedy of the Three-a-Week's second "Feature February" week!

"THE RACE FOR THE MILLIONS"

An equal power is the other Gaumont State Right feature "In the Claws of the Leopard," which in two reels tells how South African miners use savage beasts to "put out of the way" the widow of their one time employer. To steal a gold bearing "claim" is their motive. How superhuman strength came into weak feminine arms when Mrs. Waring felt the leopard's keen fangs pierce her flesh, felt its claws slash her clothing. "The Human Vulture," a two reel feature, is noteworthy because of its typifying the American love of gold which wreaks woe upon the weaker ones.

State Rights Sales are continuing on

"The White Glove Band" a three reel detective story, in which love and adventure weave a curious crochet.

Also to be mentioned are

"In the Grip of the Vampire"
"The Bridge of Sorrow" (2 reels)
"The International Conspiracy" (3 reels)
"Perils of the Atlantic" (2 reels)
"The Vengeance of Egypt" (3 reels) and
"In the Land of the Lions" (2 reels—hand-colored.)

An Opportunity

The Gaumont Co.'s advertisements have aroused interest, and they have received much correspondence regarding exclusive rights to Gaumont Weekly, being open in parts of the United States. Mention that disappointment would be avoided by the immediate sending of inquiries was timely.

Watching Copyrights

As a guard against unprincipled persons who seek to duplicate film they could not otherwise buy or produce, the Gaumont Co. have their lawyers active at Washington.

Through Film Supply Co.

Shipments of all Gaumont releases will continue to go through the Film Supply Co. of America.

Direct your inquiries to Flushing, New York City.

NESTOR

"WHEN A MAN MARRIES," & "TOURNAMENT OF ROSES."
Split
Released Monday, Feb. 17th.

Eddie didn't want Lee to know that he was married and vice versa. The ridiculous situations which resulted will cause spasms of laughter. On the same reel a floral tribute of rare merit.

"THE HARVEST."
Drama
Released Wednesday, Feb. 19th.

When her sight was restored to her, she realized the perfidy of her husband. He paid the wages of sin with death. A wonderfully dramatic climax.

"THE PURCHASE PRICE."
Drama
Released Friday, Feb. 21st."

A set of unscrupulous mining operators seek to swindle a purchaser. The way in which a young mining engineer protected the purchaser's interest is exciting and highly entertaining. You will like it, so will your patrons.

101 BISON

"THE SONG OF THE TELEGRAPH."
Two-reel Feature
Released Tuesday, Feb. 18th.

No western feature has ever had so many thrilling situations and so many beautiful passages as this story of the trials and tribulations of the army corps that stretched the first telegraph wires across the frontier.

"THE BUGLER OF COMPANY 'B.'"
Two-reel Drama
Released Saturday, Feb. 22nd.

His father being a colonel in the army, insubordination to him was a joke. He was finally court martialed and driven from the ranks disgraced. The final sacrifice he made showed the grim determination and bravery that was born in him. A military feature that will set them wild with enthusiasm.

POWERS

"SNOW WHITE."
Three-reel Feature
Released Wednesday, Feb. 19th.

A most gorgeous interpretation of one of Grimm's fairy tales. The old folks will be delighted because it will recall the tender memories of childhood, the children will adore it because it is beautifully staged and the little tots enact their parts most cleverly.

"TWO SIDES OF A STORY."
Drama
Released Friday, Feb. 21st.

Jealousy had prompted him in deserting his wife. Years later he met the man he had suspected—it was her brother. The reunion is highly emotional.

CRYSTAL

"THAT OTHER GIRL," & "SCHULTZ'S LOTTERY TICKET."
Split
Released Sunday, Feb. 23rd.

Again Pearl White strikes the hundred per cent comedy mark. Two comical skits that will provide mirth and merriment.

VICTORIA

"THE APPEAL."
Drama
Released Friday, Feb. 21st.

In this picture you have the acme of picture perfection. The theme is sublime, filled with dramatic situations, a very superior cast and photography par excellence.

FRONTIER

"THE GIRL OF THE RANGE."
Drama
Released Wednesday, Feb. 19th.

The story deals with the characters of the days of the early 60's when cattle rustling was carried on without regard to law or the ranger scouts, men who were always anxious for a clue that would lead them to a desperate battle with the cattle thieves. Alive with thrilling situations.

MECCA

"THE CALL OF MOTHER LOVE."
Drama
Released Saturday, Feb. 22nd.

Here's a theme that will touch a chord in your heart. It will thrill with emotionalism—fascinate with its grandeur. It is a tender missive sent to you in a way that you will appreciate.

ECLAIR

"THE TELEGRAPH OPERATOR."

Drama

Released Tuesday, Feb. 18th.

From the moment Jimmy ticked the message of distress on the window pane, the acting is spirited and the situations daring.

"THE GREAT UNKNOWN."

Two-reel Drama

Released Thursday, Feb. 20th.

He stumbled into the saloon, an ill-kempt old man, marked with the scars of the deserted life in the wilderness. The story that was unfolded of love, bravery and devotion in the search for gold is as pathetic as it is beautiful. A wonderful dramatic feature.

"WILLY WANTS TO CURE HIS FATHER," & "A DEAD TOWN." Split

Released Sunday, Feb. 23rd.

You never laughed as much in all your life, as you are going to laugh at the comical way in which Willy got a chicken for his dad. On the same reel a scenic subject presenting some remarkable and beautiful views of an unusual city of ruins—Baux.

UNIVERSAL FILMS

REX

"BELOW STAIRS."

Comedy

Released Thursday, Feb. 20th.

Of all the funny stories ever filmed this is the funniest, and there's an occasional punch interspersed. Here a laugh, there a grip. An ideal sort of comedy-drama.

"TWO THIEVES."

Drama

Released Sunday, Feb. 23rd.

From the very start it will grip you tight and as the thrilling, startling scenes pass before you, you'll hold your breath with expectancy until the enthralling finale has sent the blood pulsating through your veins.

UNIVERSAL FILMS

IMP

"HELLO CENTRAL, GIVE ME HEAVEN."

Drama

Released Monday, Feb. 17th.

A pathetic theme handsomely staged and most cleverly enacted. The kind of picture that the women will rave about and the children glory in.

"AN IMP ROMANCE."

Drama

Released Thursday, Feb. 20th.

The leading lady of the moving picture company becomes a model for two sculptors. The cowardly act of the one to win the prize will amaze you, and the heroism of the model will delight you. An original sort of story, enacted in a very original manner.

"BINKS, THE STRIKEBREAKER," & "A STUDY IN CRAYON."

Split

Released Saturday, Feb. 22nd.

Binks was just released from the lunatic asylum, but they needed a waiter. You will howl with laughter when you see how Binks served the guests at the hotel. Along with it a novel idea. An entirely new form of entertainment.

A WOMAN'S DARING

Positively the most thrilling THREE REEL melodramatic feature production in the history of the feature business.

Released About February 18th

The Moving Picture World says:

" 'Saved in Mid-Air' is entirely free from objectionable features. The photography in these films is of the high standard of excellence; the acting of the principals leaves nothing to be desired, and the settings are well chosen."

MONA LISA

(Eclectic Film)

Undoubtedly one of the most beautiful, hand-colored TWO-REEL subjects ever brought to this country. Staged in Sunny Italy, where the original Million-Dollar painting was conceived.

A short while ago the civilized world was startled by the news that this masterpiece of art had been stolen from the Louvre in Paris. The incident is still fresh in the public mind.

There's going to be a rush to see the film-story woven around this weird canvas that has wrecked men's lives and incited them to crimes and violence.

As a love story of lofty ideals and noble achievement, it is greater than "Romeo and Juliet." As a supreme act of ideal devotion and self-sacrifice, for love's sake, for duty and for honor, its theme is nobler even than that of Dicken's "Tale of Two Cities," which is based on the lines "Greater love can no man show than he who lays his life down for another."

Monday, February 17th

John and George Nolan are brothers. John is inclined to be wild and frequents pool rooms. One night, in a quarrel, he hits Ed. Jennings with a billiard ball. The man falls. John rushes home and tells his parents. The shock kills his father. The mother implores John to make his escape. He does so. George prospers. One day he is sent to a neighboring town with a sum of money belonging to his firm. He is robbed, and, in desperation, tries to win the money back on a long shot at the races. The horse loses, and he offers his watch to a bookmaker, begging another bet. The bookie, his long lost brother, examines the watch and sees a picture of his mother, whom he has not seen for many years. The family are reunited and all are happy.

The Fire Coward

A Stirring Drama of the Kentucky Hills

Houston, a young revenue officer, is sent into the hills to locate a band of moonshiners. He establishes a warm friendship with Dot Hillman, little knowing that her family is engaged in illicit distilling. Through an hereditary fear, Houston proves a coward when the woods adjoining the Hillman cottage take fire, and the family sends him a white feather. Later Houston locates the moonshiners and redeems himself by rounding up the law-breakers, although it costs him the love of Dot.

Facts and Comments

NEWSPAPER reports on the panic in a moving picture theater in this city are most instructive to all who have watched the attitude of the press toward the electric theater. The report of the panic in practically all the big dailies is fair and correct. There is no wholesale denunciation, and the "flimsy" reporter's favorite phraseology such as "death trap," "holocaust" or "official negligence" and other fossilized rot is conspicuous by its absence. For once the papers tell the truth. There was a panic due to the idiot's cry of "Fire" and in no way whatever due to the moving picture. The presence of mind and quick action of the operator, who turned on the house lights to quiet the people, are mentioned at length and duly commended. The panic was one which might just as easily have occurred in a church or a school or a theater. The press quotes the Fire Commissioner as saying that the theater had complied with all the regulations of the law and the commands of the department. It is beyond human prudence and foresight to prevent the explosion of an idiotic mind in the midst of a crowd.

*

One lesson, however, exhibitors all over the country may well draw from this deplorable disaster. If the audience had been thoroughly enlightened as to the nature of a moving picture machine and the absolute safeguards with which it is surrounded there might have been less probability of a panic. It is the unknown which inspires fear and panics. Any man or woman or child who has been shown that the film on its way through the machine is protected against the possibility of an explosion will pay no attention to the fool cry of alarm. A small two page folder, briefly and plainly setting forth the facts, illustrated by a cut and thoroughly distributed among the audience will do much to prevent panics. Slides demonstrating the same fact would likewise be of decided value. It should be pointed out to the audience that noises in the booth or out of the booth such as the burning out of a fuse or the dropping of a heavy object are perfectly harmless and not to be feared.

THE question of grading film service according to the class of patrons is troubling many exhibitors. Some little grading can be done even under present conditions, but there seems to be room for much improvement. There are neighborhoods in which the so-called Western drama falls flat and positively annoys the patrons and, then again, there are sections where the Western drama will fill the house as no other attraction could. A recent visitor to the offices of The Moving Picture World told of his success in catering to all classes by judicious selections of programs. As he pays an enormously high figure for his film service he is allowed some choice in the selection of his programs. If a certain subject does not meet with his approval he is in a position to reject it. The small exhibitor rarely enjoys even so much freedom of action. He has not even a right of veto. Manufacturers and exchanges would do well to consider this point.

WHEN it comes to upholding the good name of the motion picture every exhibitor has it in his power to be a missionary and a press agent. The Moving Picture World prints in every issue much valuable material of general interest and thus saves the exhibitors the trouble and the time of preparing good press matter. We must root out prejudice and widen the circle of friends. The best way to bring this about is a systematic and intelligent use of the daily press. In other countries the manufacturers sustain the burden of educating the press. Here the exhibitors do this most important work. It is a labor of love in most cases and the exhibitors are satisfied with the knowledge of good work well done. We would like them to realize that the columns of this paper are intended to make their work more easy and more effective.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has been giving proper prominence to the doings of the Ohio state convention. In reading the accounts of the proceedings one is struck with the spirit of harmony and co-operation which characterized every important step. Ohio has been one of the pioneer states in the matter of organization and has steadily maintained its progressive spirit. Whatever legislation will be written into the statute books of Ohio affecting motion pictures has had the attention of the men most vitally interested, i. e., the exhibitors. That is the ideal state of affairs. Many other state conventions of exhibitors are about to be held and we recommend to them the Ohio meeting as a model worthy of consideration and imitation.

FREAK legislation is one of the evils from which exhibitors of motion pictures suffer quite frequently. Of all the preposterous laws ever devised or enacted the so-called "five minutes intermission act" in Massachusetts and other New England states is probably the worst. By a process of reasoning wholly unfathomable to the ordinary understanding the law-givers have arrived at the conclusion that five minutes between reels will prevent panics, fires or untoward happening of any kind. If there is any thing that patrons of moving picture theaters hate it is the long wait. Five minutes between reels seems like fifteen minutes to people who have come to see and enjoy. Of course in many places the law has been nothing more than a dead letter, but it made exhibitors feel mighty uncomfortable to know that an inspector might drop in at any moment and insist on a literal enforcement of the law. This happened but recently to a prominent exhibitor in a large city. The inspector made him stop the full five minutes between reels. The next day there was a drop of almost fifty per cent. in the attendance.

The Moving Picture World believes that even unreasonable laws should be substantially complied with while they remain on the statute books. The proper remedy is agitation for the repeal of the law. It is therefore with great satisfaction that we record the action of Massachusetts exhibitors who have addressed the legislature in a petition urging the repeal of the obnoxious law. A bill has been introduced in the legislature doing away with the five minutes' intermission and there are favorable prospects for its enactment into a law. The organized exhibitors in Massachusetts are a strong and intelligent body of men under capable leadership. We earnestly hope they will succeed in effecting the proposed appeal.

Baker's Commandments.

By W. Stephen Bush

WHO is Baker? I did not know myself until I read a set of rules which he has set down for producers of motion pictures under pain of coming in conflict with the police force of the City of Detroit. Whatever limits his fame may reach hereafter, for the present his power over motion pictures through the enforcement of his rules is strictly confined to the municipal confines of Detroit.

Right here let us recognize this fact and gaze upon it steadfastly for a minute or two. A very small and a very short-sighted minority of motion picture manufacturers, together with occasional lapses of "National Censorship" are responsible for Baker. Baker is an effect, not a cause. Baker is the police censor. Baker is the man, who acts as a policeman, or attempts to act as such, in the realm of motion pictures. At the present time there is but one Baker and he is limited to Detroit, but if some of our producers, prominent and otherwise, go on favoring the crime-film every little village will have its Baker and censorship will carry the policeman's club in its coat of arms. Keep on showing hold-ups and burglaries and murders, spread sickening and gruesome spectacles upon the screen such as public executions for instance; depict more opium dens and gambling hells and you will Bakerize the standard of censorship all through the country. Each Baker will then be a little czar in his own domain, each constable will be a Dogberry to moving picture men. The making and showing of motion pictures will be hampered in a hundred petty ways and incalculable damage will result.

I do not believe for a moment that police censorship of motion pictures will hold in the courts, but why conjure up this evil when the veriest mite of prevention will afford a cure?

Do you realize what the Baker brand of censorship means? I have read his rules through carefully, just as they are printed in this issue of The Moving Picture World. I want to say that Baker's ideas are not all bad, on the contrary some of the rules he seeks to establish are much to be commended and have time and again been commended in these columns. As long as Baker confines himself to suggestions for the scavenger his rules are sound and sanitary. It is only when he goes beyond his jurisdiction as a scavenger that he fails utterly.

If we understand the functions of the police they have nothing whatever to do with the teaching of ethics and morality. Outside of Russia they have never been allowed to set up the standards in literature. Woe to the nation that has to call in the police to approve of its books and its works of art. Such censorship is repugnant to every American instinct and violates every American tradition.

The moment the police censor, as at present embodied in Baker, attempts to enter the field of morals and the drama he begins to labor like a rudderless ship or like a man struggling on the quicksands. Baker says every film story must have a moral. Why not have the moral set forth in words in say the last hundred feet of a reel or have it distributed by the ushers, while the operator is changing reels, "One moment please, here's the moral." Is there not a moral in every story, Mr. Baker? There are sermons even in stones. Does Mr. Baker realize that his standard of morality would empty the shelves of our libraries of some of the greatest masterpieces of human genius? None of the great tragedies of the world have, in any Bakerized sense of the word, a "moral" ending. Mr. Baker thinks that every film drama ought to end with virtue richly rewarded and vice duly punished. As Mr. Baker puts it: "a story must balance and contain just as much goodness as badness." How will Mr. Baker weigh the good and the bad? What scales has he found to perform this most delicate operation? Who has given him the vision of angels? What about life as it really is and as the film must mirror it? Even the little children know that the world is full of injustice. The films must have a moral, to be sure, but only as they reflect man and his little world. An artificial moral, a moral made to order, gets tiresome even in the nursery. Eliminate, aye, eradicate crime and immorality, but after crime and immorality have been banished let the utmost liberty prevail. The dramatic muse as she speaks to us in pictures must be free from such clogs and trammels as Baker would fasten on her.

From prescribing that every film must carry a moral duly certified by the police department there is but one step to prescribing what kind of a moral it must have. Mr. Baker says that wrongs committed by "the agents of the law or the agents of religion must never be shown in films." This reads like an extract from the Russian penal code. What would Mr. Baker have us do in a case like that of the New York Police who have been committing wrong for years and systematically? Would he allow the newspapers to print pages of words and pictures and suppress a film drama making this notorious state of affairs an object lesson to all the public? Failures of the law and miscarriages of justice are matters of history and have from time immemorial been considered legitimate subjects for the novelist and the playwright. Would Mr. Baker forbid us to produce films showing, for instance, the intolerant superstition and the cruel persecution of by-gone ages? Were not these wrongs against humanity committed by agents of religion? The annals of mankind are full of Dreyfus cases. Victor Hugo's masterpiece "Les Miserables," now shown in films all over Europe, could not be tolerated in Detroit, for the hero is a victim of the hardness of the law and the villain is the perfect type of a good and zealous officer of the law. Whom do you admire most, Mr. Baker, Jean Valjean or Inspector Javert? We cannot pause for more examples. The absurdity of Baker's Court of Films is too plain to need another word of comment.

Scarcely less ridiculous is Mr. Baker's position in the matter of dress. He wants everybody dressed "up to date" and nothing bare but the face and the hands. Morality like beauty is often in the eye of the beholder. Without going too deeply into the subject we would remind Mr. Baker of the anecdote told of Dr. Samuel Johnson. The great lexicographer was standing in front of a statue representing a nude woman. An old lady stopped beside him and after looking at the statue turned to Dr. Johnson with the words "Oh Doctor, don't you think this statue is indecent?" "No, Madam," replied Dr. Johnson, "the statue is not indecent, but your question is." If Mr. Baker prefers his Apollo in pants and his Venus in a Mother Hubbard, that is a matter between him and his taste or his conscience, but he must not try to impose his notions on others and threaten them with suppression if they venture to hold other opinions and dare to express them either in films or otherwise.

This attempt to arrest the eternal pendulum that swings to and fro in the moral universe and hold it in the police department of Detroit until it has been duly synchronized with the Bakerized code of ethics for motion pictures is enough to make a man sing in the presence of a new tax bill or laugh while an amateur is operating on his pet corns.

Baker's Rules for Censors.

Royal A. Baker, Censor of Amusements for the Detroit Police Department, has issued the following rules for the censoring of motion pictures. Three examples of how Mr. Baker works precede the rules:

"Billy's Burglar" (Vitagraph Special).

1. Educational to crime.
2. Detrimental to law and order; causes mistrust and lowers the dignity of the agents of law and order.
3. Heroizes a child with firearms.
4. Heroizes burglar (his cleverness over others).
5. Moral's value lost.

"His Last Performance" (Pathe Special).

1. Containing no moral.
2. Murder in first degree.
3. Premeditated murder.
4. Murder by scheme.
5. Success by murder.
6. Carrying out revenge.
7. Successful revenge, without reverse.
8. Successful crime, without penance.
9. No value educationally or otherwise.
10. Educational to crime.

"Reincarnation of Karma" (Vitagraph Special).

1. No effective moral.
2. Highly suggestive.
3. Female character indecently costumed.
4. Story immoral and suggestive; ridiculous even as a legend.
5. No value educationally or otherwise.

Formula.

The use of this formula will eliminate much criticism of motion pictures:

1. Picture must contain a moral ending.
2. To make a story moral, have person or persons committing crime detected, prosecuted or serve a penance by loss, devastation or accidental destruction. Show that all wrong committed is paid for by reversed conditions or law.
3. Always have law supersede crime.
4. Don't show the miscarriage of justice.
5. Don't show agents of the law committing or assisting depredation.
6. Don't show agents of religion committing depredation or violating rules of their creed.
7. Don't show suicide (ever) or auto-suggestion of.
8. Never show strikers rioting, destroying property or committing depredation or violence.
9. Don't show arson, bombing or infernal machines or their use.
10. Kidnapping, seduction, Black Hand; avoid tricks educational to crime.
11. (a) Taking impressions of keys on wax, putty, etc.; filing keys, stealing keys.
    (b) Cutting telephone and telegraph wires.
    (c) Turning railroad switches, putting logs on tracks, throwing wrenches in machinery, tampering with devices which peoples' lives depend upon.
    (d) Criminals using autos as an instrument to assist depredation, escape; using empty freight cars for means of escape.
    (e) Picking locks, blowing safes, using a "jimmy" or a pinch bar, cutting out screening in doors and windows or breaking and entering, climbing porches, using ladders; avoid masking criminals.
    (f) Badger game, white slavery, street soliciting, vulgar flirtation.
    (g) Blackmail, swindle (unless impossible to be practiced).
    (h) Banding of criminals, gang rule, gang gunning.
    (i) Avoid showing gain or possibility of gain through crime; avoid dress suit burglars (Raffles).
12. (a) Having convicts escape from prison.
    (b) People assisting convicts to escape, smuggling into prisons saws and other tools to convicts.
    (c) Having people protect convicts after they have escaped.
13. People misinforming agents of the law as to the whereabouts of criminals.
14. Tricking agents of the law.
15. Don't show anything that will lower the respect of people towards the agents of law and order, as it is detrimental to furthering justice.

Weapons.

Firearms must be used with sense and reason, and not spontaneously.

16. (a) Avoid showing burglars using firearms to cover persons.
    (b) Using firearms on women.
    (c) Children handling or using firearms.
    (d) Never show the use of blackjacks, knuckles, etc.
    (e) Avoid stabbings and knife fights.

Murder.

There must be great cause for murder, motive; otherwise avoid.

17. (a) Avoid the use of more than one murder to a story.
    (b) Avoid premeditation, novelty, schemes, alibis by trickery, etc.
    (c) Murderer must always come to justice or penalty.
    (d) No dripping blood or ghastly wounds, extended pictures of dead people or enlargements of dead people.
    (e) Gang murder, choking, beating or kick, or any other violent manner of murder, such as the use of axes, etc.
    (f) Avoid the murdering of women.
    (g) No deliberate murder by criminals or burglars (have such murders in a scuffling fight).
    (h) Poisoning.
    (i) Premeditating crime so suspicion will fall upon innocent people (such as the use of another's weapon).

Dressing Scenes and Figures.

Nothing artistic is added to a scene by having characters lacking wardrobe, such as full tights, etc.

18. (a) Extremely low-cut gowns which show women's breasts when they stoop over in the picture.
    (b) Large nude figures in pictures (of no art value) as part of a stage setting.
    (c) Avoid pictures of completely nude savages, particularly nude babies.
    (d) Low drunken female denizens of the underworld.
    (e) Settings of scenes such as dens of vice (exaggerated pictures of underworld).
    (f) Narcotic dens, smoking opium, sniffing cocaine.
    (g) Houses of prostitution (show by auto-suggestion or one or two very quick scenes, no detail).
    (h) Avoid exaggeration of low dance halls, few scenes; have them quick.
    (i) Women smoking cigarettes (unless characters are staged in accordance).

Brutality.

19. (a) To animals, especially horse kickers; make branding scenes fast.
    (b) To women (without strong moral).
    (c) To children (without strong moral).

Dancing.

20. (a) Perfect tighting.
    (b) Correct stage settings for Egyptian and Russian dancing (if slightly suggestive).
    (c) No "Kootch" or suggestice (without strong moral, and then no enlargements).
    (d) Girls dancing on tables in cafés and saloons.
    (e) Women smoking cigarettes while dancing (scenes are always misrepresented).
    (f) No underworld dances, without moral; then make all scenes fast, short.

Torture.

21. (a) Perfect settings and costuming in accordance with the times of particular torture.
    (b) Make all scenes short and fast.
    (c) Avoid enlargements of agonized faces, and what torture machine is actually doing.
    (d) No slow death scenes.
    (e) Burning at stake, burning sticks put in eyes (very dangerous example for children, as they often practice in their play what they see in Western pictures).

Producers' Features.

22. (a) Exaggerated fights on edges of high cliffs and the throwing of persons off, unless powerful moral.
    (b) Avoid enlargements and slow scenes of sensational gun play and other acts.

Hold-up.

23. (a) No attempts or hold-up of trains, citizens; all other hold-ups must be done by auto-suggestion (avoid close detail and long scenes).
    (b) Avoid leaders like "He Stuck Him Up." Let picture or auto-suggestion be enough to tell the tale.

NOTE.—Attempts of murder and other crime is just as bad as the actual crime in regards to law and order. A story must balance so a moral will be effective. Many producers have an idea if a story comes out all right—meaning the police arrest the thief—they can sandwich as much sensation as they desire into the story. They are mistaken, for a story must balance and contain just as much goodness as badness. I advise studying character cutting and the use of character stories, social dramas, moral dramas, educational dramas, travelogues, comedies and so forth.

ROYAL A. BAKER,
Censor of Amusements, Department of Police, City of Detroit.

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN ON LECTURE TOUR.

Mr. Francis X. Bushman, until recently leading man of the Essanay Eastern Co., is now in the midst of a long distance lecture tour, taking in the largest theaters in the largest cities of the United States. He arrived in New York City this week, having finished his January engagements and is making his headquarters at the Screen Club, 163 W. 45th st. Mr. Bushman is open for engagements to appear at photoplay theaters for the next few weeks, prior to his return to studio work as leading man of one of the larger feature film companies.

This well known actor has been a tremendous drawing card all along the line. His engagements, according to the testimonial letters of exhibitors, have broken house records in every city, both for money and attendance. Mr. Bushman put in three weeks in and around Pittsburgh, and in Rochester, N. Y., he put in a whole week at one theater, The Victoria. Appearances were made by him also in Sandusky, Cleveland, Columbus, Youngstown and Camden, N. J.

Mr. Bushman is giving a brief talk on how moving pictures are made, after which a picture showing himself is thrown upon the screen and he proceeds to elucidate it with interesting remarks and dramatic lines. His popularity is not confined to his stage appearance alone. In every city visited he has been somewhat of a social sensation and has been obliged to attend banquets given in his honor by local societies and lodges, almost every night. He has been leading grand marches, making after dinner speeches, holding receptions and working overtime in similar fashion to such an extent that he has in every case earned the large sums that his contracts call for.

Mr. Bushman's presence in a city is good for many columns of newspaper space, and has the effect of popularizing a theater in a way that lasts for many days after he has gone. Licensed exhibitors who are desirous of stimulating business should get into communication with him through the Screen Club.

---

On a complaint of the Rev. Mr. Bird of Norway, Mich., J. O. Bergeron has been found guilty by a jury of having his motion picture theater open on a Sunday evening. The jury levied a fine which in its judgment seemed to fit the crime. Six cents was the amount.

A Dangerous Invader

By Louis Reeves Harrison

THE Allied Arts met one night last week in the Plaza rose room. Vocalists, violinists and pianists charmed the assemblage with melody and harmony, orators declaimed, Hiram Maxim, bold and original constructive inventor, challenged discussion of the essential differences and aims of art and science. Much-venerated and loved poet Markham took up the gauntlet with earnest enthusiasm, novelist Rex Beach sat silent and observing; beside me was an artist fresh from a productive sojourn in Europe, and J. Stuart Blackton, aided by his beautiful wife, welded the dissimilar elements into sympathetic relation.

Like the brilliant novelist directly in front of me, like the talented artist at my side, like the silent and appreciative guests gathered there, I enjoyed the varied features of the entertainment, but these seemed to lose their old-time flavor when a richly dressed young intruder focused attention and held an audience of nearly a hundred intelligent people spellbound by a vigorous presentation of his claim, his demand, that he be accorded high place in the alliance. To sweet music he sang, yet uttered no sound. The resources of invention, the investigations of science, the unfoldings of nature, all furnished him strength, yet he covered his power with a mantle of beauty.

The Fine Arts trembled. He instilled blood into the veins of Sculpture. He simulated Architecture in destructive as well as constructive form. Painting gasped at his activities, then vented relief in a cunning smile at his lack of color, forgetting his tone. Literature bowed his head in reverie. Here was a powerful medium of thought transference, swift, easily understood, not shackled by vernacular, already so close to the universal heart as to menace the use of letters for the promulgation of knowledge.

"I am your sponsor," said Drama.

The Invader laughed. "You are mainly responsible for my defaults," he accorded. "Centuries ago, more than a score, you were the foundling of Aristotle and have scarce gained since then. That I am a half-grown boy, uncouth and badly-dressed at times, makes people smile, but I count my friends by millions. They laugh at your vanity, sneer at your stupidity, wonder that you cannot keep up with the times. You hold out all manner of false hopes, but you are too old and too set in your ways to please more than a few. You would not be so poor if you were not in the hands of the money-lenders. While you are so sour on me, I am rousing interest in you."

"Are you of Night's brood," asked Fiction, "that you always creep in under cover of darkness?"

"I am a Child of the Sun," replied the Invader proudly. "I do not blame you for guessing wide of the truth but why do you pretend to be prosaically real instead of entertainingly romantic. It is not for you to tell people how dull they are, but how attractive they might be. I have revived interest in the best you have done in the days gone by, and I am looking forward to the time your fancy will brighten my way. You, Poetry, History and Science, will some day find me to be a useful friend. Watch the screen and I will show myself in varied guise."

Fiction recorded this converse with customary accuracy and the show went on.

Immortal words appeared, the Battle Hymn of the Republic by Julia Ward Howe, like handwriting on the wall. Not only the stirring verses written in camp before Washington in 1861, but many views of the poet and philanthropist herself were presented to our eyes, a dream at once vivid and consistent, glimpsing her creative mood, portraying the torrent of her thoughts. All intelligent members of the audience seemed to be enthralled, and even those vanity boxes who sport eyeglasses on black tape appeared to understand. At least they looked wise. By their insignia, not their works, ye shall know Americans addicted to this second rate British affectation.

Lincoln came into view, not a strutting actor in make-up, not a lifeless portrait, but Lincoln of our ideals, of mournful dignity, his eyes of sorrow forecasting tragedy, whose immortality is assured if the unending existence of a great soul depends upon the grateful remembrance of a people. Living and moving before us was the Man of the Hour in the nation's agony, when a vital change for better or worse hinged upon the wisdom and courage of one creature so human that he was loved for his errors. How our minds were turned back to those dark days of struggle! How poor and weak our present efforts to attain complete liberty for our people!

The parting of wives and husbands, of mothers and sons, the march to the front, the crash of battle, even the rising of spirits from the battlefield's dead, all these were pictured in action, virile illustration of the poet's inspiration. We saw Lincoln remove the fetters of one form of slavery only to be reminded of how little has been attained in social justice since then, to realize that man does not yet enjoy that freedom to exercise his natural faculties so essential to his welfare and happiness.

"Movement!" cried the Invader. "Achievement is not possible without it. What I am accomplishing may prove a remedy for your paralysis. If I am a victim of error, it is through ignorance, but my mind is not planted with weeds of prejudice—I am open to reason and conviction—whereas you will be a long time finding your way to the truth if you cannot give up your false opinions and bad habits. I seek strength in this alliance, but your betterment is equally concerned. I am not established in the hearts of countless millions all over the earth because of their adherence to convention, but because of their heresy. They are reaching a faith in what is to be through doubt of the present utility of what was. This is my first appearance in the palatial home of a privileged class. I will show myself in another light, then I will return to the common people much beloved by Lincoln because God made so many of them."

Presto! A story by Rex Beach was visualized. It dealt with that wildest of derivative passions, jealousy, aroused in a husband by the attentions of an artist to his wife and fostered after the latter's tragic death that her daughter might be made an instrument of vengeance. The scheme reacted upon the author of it, and the futility of revenge was shown in dramatic scenes of great power and beauty. The artist at my side gasped at the exquisite selection of exteriors and pronounced them more fascinating than any still landscape she could paint. The author of the story sat entranced at this view of his creation or as if keenly enjoying the materialization of a vision. The sprightly inventor became rigid with intense interest. The poet nodded grave approval, then the end came, and the Arts looked around for the Dangerous Invader. He had vanished as silently as he came.

"The Wages of Transgression" (Eclipse.)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE Eclipse people have turned out a film subject of more than average dramatic merit under the title "The Wages of Transgression," which will be released by George Kleine on March 5. The story reveals the attempts of a man, who poses as the friend of a business man, to bring dishonor to his friend's home, and necessarily requires delicate and skilful treatment to avoid giving offense to sensitive minds. The producer has accomplished the task with good taste, and in this he has been much aided by a comedy element in the story which relieves the somber tints of an impending tragedy.

The wife in the case is a woman of lofty virtue who is devoted to her husband and their only child, but the false friend is making an important loan to her husband, which is essential to his success in business, and she forbears to denounce him to her husband, for her husband's sake. The advances of the would-be home-wrecker are repelled by her with well bred contempt and chill dignity, although her feelings are outraged by the persistence and attempted liberties of the man. The impersonation of this character throughout is marked by excellent art, both in the repression and expression of feeling.

The husband and the villain have also been well cast, and the characters are presented with talent and force.

It remains for little Baby Roudes, a child actress of the Eclipse forces, who has already won a wide circle of admirers in this country, to furnish the sunshine of the production. As tiny Dolly Adams she creates a mirthful fuss when forcibly removed from the supper table by her nurse, as it is bedtime for her, and her mother's word is law. The nursery scene, while she is being undressed, is another exquisite bit of child characterization. But the crowning part of Baby Roudes' work in this film is seen when she determines to dress herself and rejoin the party from which she has been carried by force. She gets out of her cot and glides noiselessly to her mother's dressing room, where she contrives to array herself in odds and ends of that lady's apparel. The result is a fascinating picture of child life, and one laughs heartily as she adds the finishing touches to her appearance by using her mother's powder puff and eau de cologne, squirting, by poor aim, a little of the latter into one of her eyes, causing her dimpled baby cheek to pucker in sympathy. The accompanying illustration shows little Dolly Adams as she appears before the surprised members of the party.

Mr. Adams and Mr. Palmer are old friends; at least Mr. Adams, who is married, thinks so. Mr. Adams is in the manufacturing business and needs about $50,000 to develop it successfully. What more natural than that he should look to his friend, Palmer, who is wealthy, to advance the money on a mortgage of the property. Adams writes a letter to Palmer, requesting him to call at his home.

Palmer arrives before the appointed hour, in order that he may have a few minutes conversation with Mrs. Adams. In the scene that follows we learn that he is infatuated with that lady and it is also seen that she is cold and distant. Then he hands her the letter from her husband asking for the loan referred to. She is perturbed and ill at ease after reading it, but hides her real feelings and thanks him for his promise to lend the money. Adams arrives and it is decided upon to visit the factory before the loan is made. A check for the amount is turned over to Adams, who soon afterwards gives a supper party in honor of his friend, Palmer.

During the evening, Palmer attempts to pass a note to Mrs. Adams. She indignantly refuses to accept it. Then he goes stealthily to her dressing room and places the note in a finger of one of her gloves. This same glove is worn by little Dolly Adams when she surprises the party. She tells her father that she cannot get her finger in a certain finger of one of the gloves. He searches and discovers the note placed there by Palmer. He reads it. Then, hiding his anger, he motions Palmer to join him in the study. Soon afterwards a pistol shot is heard, and all members of the party rush to that room. A huddled up figure lies on the carpet. Palmer has paid for his transgression.

Sauntering With Kinemacolor

Critical Review of the Work in Progress for Popularizing a Unique Idea in the Photoplay.

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

IF we only look at one side of a two-sided fact, it is not difficult for any of us to be convinced of the superiority of color photography over that of black and white. To argue for it is to be without an opponent. The facts on one side of it are too numerous, too familiar, too easy of demonstration to be worth discussion. Getting around to the other side of the matter and away from that to which most intelligent persons avowedly or tacitly subscribe involves dispensing entirely with We,-Us-&-Co. forms of enthusiasm.

I come in contact with too much self-aggrandizing talk in "Studio Saunterings" to be in the slightest degree impressed by assumptions of individual importance on the part of those who regard this New Art as merely a business proposition rather than as a wondrous medium of expression evolved by the patient toil of persistent genius in many men, rivaling written and spoken language in beauty and power, and as free to all who know how to use it with judgment and good taste as any other manifestation of what is created in human minds.

The fundamental error of those now engaged in the development of moving pictures is that of ascribing the charm exercised by a new method of representing thought and emotion to their highly profitable connection with it. The commercial men now profiting by early exploitation of what is really a means of giving forth facts, feelings and sentiments are so overcome by the reception people are according this new form of communication that only a few grasp the necessity of having something to communicate.

Henry J. Brock, President of the Kinemacolor Company.

As one who has ranged the wide field of future possibilities in the latest manner of promulgating ideas I did not visit the Kinemacolor people to learn from them what might be done in color photography of action, but what they were really doing. The facts of their actual accomplishment are the only ones of live interest and worthy of attention, hence I concluded to make a study of these on the outside before going to headquarters for data that has to be distilled from offerings of obviously biased information.

In search of the truth I visited a theater in my residence neighborhood and a lyceum further down town, the first with no propitious results, the second with an impression decidedly favorable. The audiences in both cases were intelligent and ready to subscribe to any advance in the quality of moving pictures. There can be no more dangerous mistake made than that of underrating the mental quality of a democratic American audience, of confounding people in the New World of to-day with those in the Old World of last century.

Americans have been taking the initiative in nearly all advanced forms of human effort, are assuming tremendous responsibilities in solving problems of the moment, are undertaking vast enterprises and carrying them to completion where others have failed and are as a mass decidedly superior to those individuals who provide entertainment and only see our workers in their moments of mental relaxation. Those generous and good-natured people, who are marching forward in one irresistable direction, have no superiors in the audiences of the world. Not to believe in them is to declare one's self in the rear of the procession, and a camp follower at that.

There were Greeks as well as Americans at the Lyceum, not the conquerers of ancient times, but the conquered ones of to-day just taking on new spirit. Those who have lost in the clash of nations are the most enthusiastic and demonstrative in their patriotism, hence the Greeks applauded wildly at the sight of their people in the Balkan War pictures. What a contrast with the cool and critical Americans present! Any one who imagines it to be an easy matter to get at the drift of American opinion in an audience or elsewhere has another think coming to him. Our people reveal themselves to no superficial observer.

The highest educational value of the lyceum entertainment was that afforded by contrast between actual scenes of the Balkan War and the wondrous presentation of constructive work on the Panama Canal. Where there is a governing class, as in the Balkan nations, there will always be a discouraging waste of vital energy in the spoliation of one by another for no real intention on the part of those in power to benefit the people. The farmer of one tribe in that section of Europe derives no benefit from destroying the farmer of another tribe, and it is not to the interest of those who work and produce to have houses burned, fields laid waste and the interchange of industry made ineffective.

To every intelligent and disinterested spectator the presentation of these war scenes is an object lesson. Most impressive feature of them is an animated map of the Balkan States, showing the political changes that have taken place since the Fourteenth Century. Nothing more remarkable and instructive has been exhibited in historical geography. The same beautiful method could be used in our schools to show the territorial acquisitions in our own country from the time King James granted a little strip or two along the Atlantic coast to the Plymouth and London companies, through the French and Indian wars, the Early Colonial Grants, the Thirteen Original States and so on in the development of the United States of America.

The same method could be applied to the changes in France and Britania, to the partition of Poland, to the Empire of Charlemagne, to the Roman Empire, to the Persian Empire and to all the earlier powers in their alteration of boundaries and political divisions. Powerful lesson in showing the advantages in early times and undesirability to-day of those forms of government which crush out the life blood of the people in the pursuit of robbery by force of arms, waged on so large a scale as to seem honorable to those unaware of its real purposes.

We are confronted with problems of progress in the contrast between territorial invasion—though it is in this case a measure of retaliation for past wrongs—and the voluntary human effort made at Panama in the interest of all mankind. We are suddenly transported from the primitive gropings of desire to a widely different method of attaining an end, that of utilizing science, inventive art and manly vigor in constructing a work of permanent value.

I do not know of any sermon that would so deeply impress the idea of human progress as this presentation of what is going on in the Old World and the New World. I have no time at present to review it in detail, but those who do not see what is now being exhibited at Carnegie Lyceum will miss a delightful and edifying entertainment, one that is thought-inspiring, man of whose features are worth storing in memory.

The entertainment is already in its sixth week and bids fair to have a long run. The seat prices—all are reserved—range from 25c to $1.00, and the place was crowded when I was there. Think it over! Nothing but educational pictures and music. It may be said that New York City accommodates any form of entertainment, but how about the busy season at the Buffalo Museum of Natural Sciences, where thousands of children are attending educational lectures that would be much more attractive if illustrated by moving pictures? Educational pictures of the right sort will draw in any part of this country.

Kinemacolor has been more successful thus far in presenting historical and geographical facts of live interest than it has with photodramas. Moving picture enterprises of all kinds start from the commercial side. The medium itself is developed before much attention is given to what is to be conveyed through it. That is like hiring a theater and a company of actors and telling them to go ahead and cat. Act what? It has not yet reached some men in the business that recording and presenting natural scenery and facts simply replaces publications devoted to similar subjects. The moment they enter the dramatic field quality of what is to be recorded and presented is absolutely essential to success.

"It is a curious thing," remarks Charles Klein in the Saturday Evening Post, "that though everybody knows one must go through a regular course of training to become an engineer, only a handful of men seem to think it necessary to discipline themselves for work as dramatists." Equally curious is the idea that any old pointless story will do for motion picture audiences. But for this error clogging the wheels of moving picture progress the exhibitions would be attended by millions of people who now regard them as not even worth the small price of admission.

I have been reviewing some splendid Vitagraphs, some artistic Edisons, some thrilling Italas, some strong Pathes, some stirring Kay-Bees, some classic Thanhousers and others without fear or predudice, but I have watched in vain for a Kinemacolor photodrama that would measure up to the best products of its kind. I did not hesitate to say this to Mr. Brock when I invaded Kinemacolor headquarters, and the result was what might be expected. We came into collison, but I found him broadminded in the long run.

I was in pleasant frame of mind when I made the invasion, and this satisfied condition was very largely brought about by the courtesies of Mrs. Leist, one of those winning personalities who do a great deal of silent and effective work towards making a business enterprise generally popular. I found the manager, Mr. Brock, an intensive worker of large vitality and tremendous energy, with a fault on the side of fanatical devotion to duty. He is so saturated with Kinemacolor that it is a wonder his coat does not turn red and his waistcoat green.

The intense manager and I harmonized as long as I sat still and absorbed color, but he was promptly up and in arms when I attacked the quality of his photoplays. It is always a battle of brains for the honest critic. He has to have courage as well to go at a producer in his own stronghold. The Balkan War pictures paled when Manager Brock and I opened all our batteries in deadly conflict, but his diplomacy suspended hostilities. He conducted me into the finest exhibition room I have ever seen and softened my ferocity by having some enchanting pictures of travel shown.

Rambling in Paris put me at my ease, views of the bold and piratical coast of England where Cornwall juts out into the Atlantic Ocean soothed my feelings, then came the most beautiful of all natural scenery ever thrown on the screen, that taken in color from a boat plying the upper part of Lake Geneva. Scene after scene of beauty in form and color, of humble as well as majestic and romantic charm, greeted my eyes until I could not help thinking how John Ruskin would have enjoyed the picturesque panorama of Turnerian topography of mountainous crags and dark towers looming up into sky calm that softened their bold outlines.

The limpid water, the pleasantly cool greens of foliage, the solemn twilights, the hues in which Nature paints her enduring and matchless landscapes, all the exquisite truth of the sun's revelations were so recorded and transmitted that all the world might enjoy them at home. With Kinemacolor at its best, I saw what was being accomplished and realized that color gave the pictures the power of truth in the lights and shadows, that power of truth for which I have always been contending. The perfection of this method means an important contribution to human betterment.

I quote from my Ruskin in conclusion: "All men completely organized enjoy color; it is meant for the perpetual delight and comfort of the human heart. It is richly bestowed on the highest works of creation, and the eminent sign and seal of perfection in them."

SOME GOOD KINEMACOLOR PICTURES.

At the weekly showing to the press on Wednesday morning the Kinemacolor company put on the screen two dramas, one topical, and one scenic. The latter is one of the most beautiful pictures yet produced by Kinemacolor—"Lower Lake Geneva, Switzerland." There are views of yachting, taken from the deck of a fast and steady craft; in panorama the viewers pass the city of Geneva, of Versoix, Nion and Rolle; in the distance are the snowclad peaks of the Savoyan Alps, a scene long to be remembered; views of Lausanne, and, best of all, sunset on the lake. This is a picture that will remind Kinemacolor followers of the famous "Sunset on the Nile." The photographer had the instinct of an artist. The dramas were "A Romance of the Canadian Wilds" and "Fifty Miles from Tombstone," both well produced and well acted. "With the Servian Army Before Adrianople" completed the program. There are many fine camp scenes, the last of which will prove of special interest. It shows the Servians running through a great redoubt to take up positions to repulse a Turkish sortie.

John Bunny as Pickwick

Episodes from the Celebrated Humorous Book of Charles Dickens Enacted at the Original Scenes.

Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman.

IT has long been a question here in America as to why there have not been more and better motion pictures emanating from England and environs. We have been told that atmospheric conditions are against it. Anyone who has ever inhaled a London fog can well believe that explanation. But it seems, nevertheless, to be a fact that whenever an American desires to take a motion picture with an Irish or English background he simply goes over there, takes his picture and comes back again, and photographically it turns out to be as good as could be done in America.

Mr. John Bunny as Pickwick.

If there exists anywhere a land that teems with artistic possibilities in the virgin state, that spot is England. There also are the original settings of the great wealth of English literature. English actors, speaking broadly, are much better trained to their profession than are their American brothers. Yet with all these advantages in favor of the English, it has remained for Mr. John Bunny, a bloomin' Yankee, to conceive the idea of doing Pickwick amid the original scenes described by Dickens. These pictures will be circulated as widely in England as in America; Englishmen will see and applaud them; many of them will say "Bravo," go home happy, and the incident will be closed, but England will still be open to American invasion of the enterprising kind.

Mr. Bunny got the Pickwick bee in his bonnet about one year ago. He went with the idea to Messrs. Smith and Blackton, of the Vitagraph Company, and from the very beginning they were 99 per cent. en rapport with the scheme. The idea was that Mr. Bunny should go to England and play the part of Pickwick with a supporting cast made up entirely of English types, these to be selected by him according to their especial fitness for the work. After six months of quiet preparation the Bunny party, consisting of your "Uncle Jack" (J. Bunny), Lawrence Trimble, director, George Bunny and Mr. Arthur Ross, cameraman, set sail last July for Merrie England; all of which has been duly chronicled in former numbers of this publication.

The pictures made by this expedition are about to be released and an advance view of them has been accorded. The report cannot be anything but favorable. To a lover of Dickens they are a treat to be dwelt upon much as a connoisseur of tobacco lingers over the smoking of a good cigar to prolong the enjoyment of it. The pictures are saturated with local color and in every instance they live up to the very letter of the word of Dickens. There are three distinct episodes in three separate reels. These episodes are taken from the first part of the book of "Pickwick Papers," the idea being that if the pictures meet with public favor, more episodes will be done later with the object of completing the entire book in motion picture form. The first episode is the meeting of the Pickwickians with Alfred Jingle, up to the denunciation of Jingle by Dr. Slammer after his duel with Mr. Winkle. The second episode is the shooting party and Pickwick's nap in the wheelbarrow on Capt. Bolding's land. The third episode is Pickwick's misguided effort to prevent the elopement at Miss Smithers' Select Seminary For Young Ladies. The first two reels will be released at the same time during February, and the third will be released a few weeks later.

Mr. Bunny as Pickwick needs hardly to be described. Nature endowed him for the part, and one who cannot imagine him as Pickwick must have imagination poorly developed indeed. In the first reel, however, Mr. Arthur Ricketts, an English actor, as Alfred Jingle, gave Mr. Bunny a close run for first honors. He is the Jingle of the artist Cruikshank to the very life, and when Mr. Bunny selected him for the part he had an inspiration. At the beginning Mr. Pickwick is seen leaving his lodgings; the very lodgings in Goswell Street that Dickens had in mind. An old fashioned cab bears him away to his friends. This cab was specially built from the only survivor of its kind; now in the British Museum. The great man is delivered to the meeting-place of the Pickwickians, where an altercation with the cabman results in the four truth-seekers being pummeled by the driver until the timely arrival of the eccentric Jingle.

The coach ride to Rochester, with Jingle in the party, is authentic up to the very door of the Bull Tavern. We observe the Pickwickians that evening dining and wining and being entertained by Jingle, the shabby genteel. When Mr. Pickwick, Mr. Snodgrass and Mr. Winkle become hors du combat and their heads are bobbing in heavy sleep, Jingle and Mr. Tracey Tupman, the great admirer of voluptuous womanhood, prepare to attend the charity ball. Tupman borrows the dress suit from the room of the unconscious Winkle for Jingle and the two fare forth. The incident of Jingle stealing the widow, Mrs. Budger (Minnie Raynor), from the explosive Dr. Slammer (Arthur White), is then taken up. The challenge is given and in the morning Mr. Winkle (Fred Hornby), is called upon by Dr. Slammer's second. The duel is arranged between Dr. Slammer and the bewildered Winkle, who thinks he must have insulted someone while in his cups the night before. Winkle and Snodgrass proceed that evening to the scene of the near-duel. When the mistake is explained, all hands proceed to the Bull Tavern to make merry. There Dr. Slammer and his seconds come face to face with Jingle and Tupman (James Pryor), whom they denounce with great scorn, all of which is wasted upon Jingle, who smiles his weary, knavish smile.

The second episode begins with the departure of the hunting party from Eatanswill; Pickwick, Winkle, Tupman, Mr. Wardle, Sam Weller, the guide, the boy and the dogs. Winkle, the great sportsman, is here given a chance to show what he can do. Shooting with his eyes shut he brings down a bird out of a flock and is more surprised than the others, though with great presence of mind he acknowledges the applause. Mr. Pickwick, being lame, has been wheeled along in a wheelbarrow by his servant, Sam Weller. Luncheon is taken from baskets under a tree on Captain Bolding's land, which adjoins the hunting field. Pickwick becomes convivial at the meal and feels called upon to make an address. Before he gets far the listeners perceive that Pickwick is hopelessly "soused" and presently he topples over into the barrow and is soon slumbering in a comatose condition. The others leave him there and resume the hunt. Captain Bolding, a pompous little duffer, happens to be making an inspection of his estate. He comes upon Mr. Pickwick slumbering peacefully. The captain, highly indignant, becomes more so when all efforts to arouse the great man fail. Bolding orders Mr. Pickwick wheeled to the town jail, where his friends find him that evening.

The third episode opens with Sam Weller and Job Trotter at the watering trough. Sam upbraiding Job gets from him the false information that Jingle, his master, will that evening elope with a young lady from the seminary. Sam takes Job into the presence of Pickwick, who is wallowing in his bed like a hippopotamus in a tank. There Job repents and tells of his master's perfidy, to the great horror of Pickwick, who determines to frustrate the elopement at all hazards. That night he is boosted over the seminary wall by Sam and takes his stand by the kitchen door. It begins to rain in torrents and Pickwick is treated to a fine shower bath. The females within become alarmed; they descend in a body and capture their would-be benefactor behind the door. As an evidence of good faith he consents to be locked in a closet until his identity can be established. When his friends arrive he is liberated and his round face beams forgiveness upon all.

FAMOUS AUTHOR WRITES TWO-REEL "FLYING A" DRAMA.

Steward Edward White, who with Owen Wister and Ralph Connor, have done more to familiarize the world with the stories and traditions of the West than any other set of authors, is the writer of a two-reel subject just issued by the American.

Mr. White, taking into consideration the splendid histrionic powers of Warren Kerrigan, Jack Richardson, Pauline Bush, Jesslayn Van Trump and the other familiar characters in "Flying A" pictures, has turned his remarkable story powers to the evolution of a two-reel subject, especially fitted to the people and the field of production. In "Ashes of Three," the world of picture enthusiasts will receive a distinct treat in the novel story, clever acting and superb backgrounds.

Director Allen Dwan, to whom much credit is due for the general excellence of the offering, has quite surpassed himself in those little details which go to stamp a perfect production. Especially for this subject a Western town was built as correct to minor touches as the long experience of Mr. White and himself in matters of that nature would permit.

"Ashes of Three" is the first two-reel production made by the American in which those favorites, Kerrigan, Richardson, Bush and Van Trump have ever worked. This in itself, is enough to predict a warm welcome when the subject is released.

DOBBS' PICTURES AT CARNEGIE HALL.

Beverly B. Dobbs' original Alaska-Siberia pictures "Atop of the World in Motion," will be shown at Carnegie Hall, New York, beginning Friday, February 7th. Earlier in the season the pictures were shown at Weber's Theater where they attracted large and well pleased crowds. Negotiations are now pending for a theater in the vicinity of Times Square, and before very long "Atop of the World in Motion" again will be seen on Broadway.

Judge Lindsey and Moving Pictures.

By James S. McQuade.

Judge Lindsey of Denver, and his famous Juvenile Court are familiar to nearly every adult reader in the country. The great and noble service rendered by Judge Lindsey in dealing with boys and girls of tender years, who have violated the law, has been eulogized again and again in sermon, lecture and magazine article. Therefore when this upright judge, who has ever sought to reform the minor who has run foul of the law, makes the charge against moving pictures that they have a "depraving influence" on the childish mind, one is not only startled, but shocked.

A recent dispatch from Denver, which appeared in several Chicago dailies, describes the case as follows: "Four Sunday school girls, ranging in age from 8 to 10 years, confessed to Judge Lindsey yesterday that they are a part of a band of girls who have been robbing fashionable homes in Denver for two months. More than $1,000 worth of jewelry, it is estimated by the officers, has been stolen by the children.

"When arrested by the Juvenile Court officer, Katherine Gress, aged 10, who says she is the leader, had in her possession a promissory note for $300 and a $20 bill. The other girls arrested, and who confessed their misdeeds, are Mary Kenehan, 10; Frances Marlin, 8, and Jessie Kenehan. The Gregg girl was sent to the Girls' Training School at Morrison, and the others were sent to the House of the Good Shepherd in Denver.

"In her confession to Judge Lindsey, Katherine Gregg says she got her idea of robbing houses from moving picture shows. She declared her 'gang' would attend the shows where pictures of robberies were being displayed, and would study the methods of execution by the actors. Then, she says, they would go out and exemplify them.

"The 'gang' was broken up when one of the girls went into a confectionery store and offered a promissory note for candy. The storekeeper suspected that there was something irregular in the girl's possession of the note, and notified the Juvenile Court officers. Most of the money taken by the children, they say, was spent for candy and amusements.

"Judge Lindsey, in passing upon the case, said: 'This is the worst case of immorality among children I have ever had come before me. I am surprised, and all the more so since these girls' parents are fairly well-to-do people, and they tell me that they go to Sunday school every Sabbath. It is another case of the depraving influence of motion pictures upon the childish mind."

Without wishing to cast the shadow of doubt on Judge Lindsey's sense of justice or any reflection on his keenness as lawyer and judge, one must ask the question, in all fairness to the reputation of moving pictures, Did little Katherine Gregg, aged 10, tell the truth, and nothing but the truth, in her confession? When one remembers that Judge Lindsey has had many years of experience in dealing with such cases, and that he is expert in gleaning the truth from youthful law breakers, it is hard to suppose that he could have been imposed upon in this instance.

But there is another side to the question. May it not be true that the distracted parents of this child, when they discovered her transgressions, sought, in their great mental distress, to assign a cause? And from the fact that she and her companions frequented picture theaters, may it not have been the case that they, in her presence, laid all the blame on moving pictures, without any proofs whatsoever? The child could thus have been impressed that moving pictures were to blame, and impressed so strongly that she believed it. Her story to the judge could thus have been glibly told, and in a way that would convince even him.

But assuming that the child told the truth of her own volition, and that she and her companions did receive suggestions of crime by watching the presentation of a moving picture, it is a very serious matter. Such a conclusion can lead to only one plan for the safeguarding of minors in picture theaters. There must be a censorship of films for minors, and another for adults. There must be, in other words, children's programs and programs for adults. The destiny of the moving picture is for the uplift and education of all.

Wesley Memorial Church, of Atlanta, Ga., began the new year with a series of Sunday evening picture shows and lantern slides to illustrate the sermon. The program is amplified by the addition of the chorus choir of sixty voices. The first sermon was on "Saul."

MINNESOTA EXHIBITORS' SECOND ANNUAL CONVENTION.

On January 28, 150 managers of motion picture theaters attended the second annual convention of the Minnesota branch of the Exhibitors' League of America, held in St. Paul. Mayor Keller made an address of welcome. He referred to the adverse criticism leveled at the motion pictures within recent months, and said that the exhibitors can do a great deal to arouse public sentiment in favor of correcting any existing evils.

The exhibitors voted in favor of drafting a bill to be presented to the legislature in favor of a state board of censorship, composed of men and women, which is intended to act in conjunction with the National Board. The bill is designed to make it a misdemeanor to show any film not passed by the National Board, or, in case that organization has not passed upon it, by the State Board. The Women's Welfare League of Minneapolis also wants a censorship board provided by the legislature, but objects to one having any affiliation with the national body. One of the women representatives was present at the convention, and while she did not address the body she did hold conferences with Otto N. Raths, president of the league. "We are just as anxious as any class of people in the state to have all objectionable features eliminated from the films," said Mr. Raths, "but with the judgment of the National Board passed upon a picture we do not see the need for further censorship by local boards on the same films."

George Osborne of St. Paul, was strong for the league's bill and against the plan of the women. "If we trust to the women for censorship," he said, "we couldn't show any pictures. Everything would be horrible. Believe me, if the women ever get to censor our pictures it'll be 'good night' for the show business."

The convention adjourned on January 29.

PHILADELPHIA LEAGUE ELECTS OFFICERS.

The annual election of officers of the Philadelphia Exhibitors League took place Jan. 24, with this result: Walter Steumpfig, president; Charles Rapaport, first vice-president; George H. Roth, second vice-president; M. T. Walsh, treasurer; J. W. Pierce, secretary.

Arrangements for the big exhibitors ball, to be held on March 26, in Turnergemeinde Hall, Broad and Columbia Avenue, are about complete. The hall accommodates about 5,000 people and it is expected that it will be filled. Mr. Wallraver of the Franklin theater, is in charge of the arrangements.

MOVEMENTS OF PRESIDENT NEFF.

President M. A. Neff, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, of America, has issued calls for meetings of the exhibitors of Oklahoma, to be held in Oklahoma City, on February 11 and 12, at the New Skirvin Hotel, and of the exhibitors of Arkansas, to be held in Little Rock on February 14, at the Marion Hotel.

President Neff requests Oklahoma exhibitors to communicate with Carl Gregg, of Tulsa, and Arkansas exhibitors with S. A. Arnold, of Mena, who are acting as the chairmen of the arrangements committees. In his call Mr. Neff says:

"As evidence of the importance of exhibitors organizing and co-operating, I am forced to leave Cincinnati to-night to appear before a legislative body at Lansing, the capital of Michigan, to explain why an obnoxious state bill which has been introduced in the state legislature of Michigan should not pass, namely, a bill to charge $100 state license fee to run a moving picture theater in Michigan. Of course, it is unjust and should not be passed, but, nevertheless, without an organization this law would probably be passed by the state of Michigan.

"There are many unjust laws that are being proposed throughout the country and you will sooner or later have to meet the same conditions that other states have had to meet. You need a censor board, a state board for examining operators, a specially competent inspector for picture shows and many other things, which will later present themselves to you."

Mr. Neff will be present at both conventions. From Little Rock he will probably go to Houston, Texas, to meet with the Texas exhibitors and there to Gulfport, Miss., where a state meeting will be held. Fred Abbley will be the chairman of the committee on arrangements for the meeting at Gulfport.

President Neff will then go to New Orleans to hold a state convention for Louisiana; then to Birmingham, Ala., to meet with the exhibitors of Alabama and organize them. From Birmingham he will go to Nashville, Tenn., where a state meeting will be held under the direction of W. H. Wasserman.

PREPARING TO FIGHT SUNDAY LEGISLATION.

Judge A. P. Tugwell, president of the Los Angeles, Cal., Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, was selected by the picture men to represent them before the committee of the State Legislature, which will report on the proposed bill closing motion picture theaters of California on Sundays and allowing ordinary playhouses, concert halls and other places of amusement to operate. Tugwell left for San Francisco, January 29, and will there join the San Francisco delegation and proceed to Sacramento. The exhibitors of the entire State seem to be thoroughly aroused over this bill. They feel that it is unreasonable and unfair and they are prepared to fight it to the bitter end which, if the legislature insists upon passing it, will include the preparation of a State wide referendum petition and a reference of the bill to the voters of the State.

Since Tugwell was appointed to represent the Southern California exhibitors at Sacramento, further word has come down from the North to the effect that a so-called "Sunday rest" bill has been introduced in the legislature. If this should become a law it will make it a misdemeanor for any proprietor of a motion picture house to employ any person in his theater on Sunday. This bill is probably a piece of half-baked legislation which would be declared unconstitutional the first time it was taken into court, but the exhibitors will oppose it just the same.

The mention of Tugwell's name in this connection suggests also that he has recently become an exhibitor himself, having purchased the Rose Theater on Spring Street, between Fifth and Sixth, where he will cater to the Hotel Alexandria guests. When he bought the theater he sold his interest in the Sunset Film Exchange. He is still a member of the local motion picture censor board and is the oldest man in motion picture business, in point of service, in Southern California.

POWELL.

EXHIBITORS FILM INSURANCE.

An organization to be known as the Exhibitors Film Insurance Company has been organized for the purpose of affording some protection to owners of picture theaters for loss of film by fire while in their possession. The headquarters of the company is at 421 Saks Building, Indianapolis, Ind., and the officers are F. J. Rembush, president; A. C. Miller, vice-president; M. M. Miller, secretary; and J. M. Rhodes, treasurer, officers and members of the Indiana Exhibitors League. The company's proposition is to issue a policy covering one or more films at a rate of $6.00 per year for each reel, the company assuming a liability of not more than $100.00 for each reel. Full particulars can be obtained from the company at the above address.

BIOGRAPH RELEASE DATES.

The Biograph Company announces that, in view of its forthcoming additional release, its release dates, commencing with the week of March 3, 1913, will be Monday, Thursday and Saturday. The new release will come on Saturday.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

THE moving picture business has grown to such proportions and plays so important a part in the lives of millions of people by furnishing entertainment and instruction—not to speak of the great aggregate of capital invested in its manufacturing, distributing and exhibiting departments—that all who are heartily interested in its continued progress and welfare should view with alarm at the present time the birth of any influences that might tend to retard its march towards its certain and ultimate goal. That goal is not in sight, nor will it be reached until a higher civilization enables mankind to discover the successor of the moving picture; and until that higher step is taken from the plane of our highest present intelligence, the moving picture will perform a great work in the uplift of humanity.

Men now in partial control of the business may retard the progress of the moving picture in various ways, but they can never destroy it. It matters not whether millions of dollars be lost or gained in commercial strife over its development, the moving picture will fulfil its purpose. It does not matter much, however, if the accomplishment of that purpose is delayed; and it also matters much if men who have waged honorable competition in the business and worked zealously for the common good of all concerned in it should be losers because of the gross commercialism of others.

If there is to be competition among manufacturers, allied under whatever title, let it be confined to the production of films of better quality; if among exchanges, let it be shown by giving the greatest satisfaction to customers, and if among exhibitors, let it be demonstrated by success in pleasing their patrons.

The greatest, best and most lasting success to be achieved in any industry can be gained only by an equitable distribution of the fruits of success among all who have contributed to it. Friction means wasted power and the loss of opportunities.

Valuable Educational Films in the Near Future.

Dr. Edward Burton MacDowell, globe trotter, lecturer and expert camera man, has again been heard from. The last mention made of him in these columns he was in New Zealand, but since then he has traveled extensively in China and has sent back to Wm. N. Selig some remarkable negatives showing life in that country.

For several months past Dr. MacDowell has traveled in the Philippines, and about eight full reels have been taken, the educational value of which can only be estimated by viewing them. It is safe to say that these eight reels of film will tell Americans more about their Philippine possessions than they have heretofore learned from all other sources.

Writing of his trip from Manila south, Dr. MacDowell says: "I made stops at Iligan, Camp Overton, Zamboanga and Jolo. At the latter place I remained seventeen days, until the steamer returned. I don't know when I have been so royally treated as at Jolo. Governor Gordon did everything in his power to make my visit pleasant, and was of invaluable assistance to me in my work. I desired first of all to see a Moro dance, and through his influence between four and five hundred Moros assembled on the drill grounds with their spears and shields, and performed the dance in a thrilling manner. I made a film of this.

"I then expressed the desire to meet the Sultan of Sulu, and the Governor sent over to Maibung, a distance of thirteen miles from Jolo. The Sultan came over and seemed to enjoy having a moving picture taken of him. A few days afterward I went over to visit the Sultan at his home, where I took other pictures of him and his surroundings.

"The next event was a caraboa fight, in which one pair hammered each other in lively fashion. Then the Governor organized a Moro fish drive. The news was spread, and next day 100 or 150 native outrigger canoes, or vintas, formed in a circular line around the point of a bay, and then closed in slowly with a rhythmic, rapping noise, made by the paddles on the sides of the canoes. When they get close together, men with seines and spears catch the fish."

Dr. MacDowell continues that he made motion pictures of a vinta race, with their multi-colored sails, which he describes as one of the prettiest in the boat line he had ever seen. At Camp Overton he saw the Reina Christina waterfall, one of the most beautiful viewed in all his travels. This is a perfect cataract about 200 feet high. It comes out of a canyon, which gives it a perfect formation and ideal surroundings. Dr. MacDowell got a fine picture of it, with the sun on the upper part and the lower part in the shadow.

Upon his return to Manila, Dr. MacDowell turned his attention to the schools, about which I shall let him speak for himself.

"The first school picture I took in the islands was a little nipa school on the island of Bongao. When I returned to Manila I planned a systematic visit to the schools here. First I visited the Normal school, the exterior of which had impressed me favorably, but when I went inside I was astonished at its completeness, the beauty of it and the work they are doing there, as will be shown by my pictures, which will surprise the American people.

"I was much interested in the School of Domestic Science, particularly in the kitchen, where little Filipino girls, dressed in their serving costumes, were engaged in an orderly manner serving a lunch to the pupils at a cost equivalent to the price of a street car fare. I made pictures of the girls at work, the pupils lined up at noon, and the pupils at lunch. Then I went into the weaving room and made pictures of the girls at work making native cloth on looms; also embroidery, hat and basket making."

Dr. MacDowell then visited the Deaf and Blind School, where he took pictures of the forty children while they were reciting "The Star Spangled Banner," with flags displayed, and also while they were at play. The funniest thing he saw there was a boxing match between two blind boys, who lambasted each other cordially while the bout lasted. Dr. MacDowell then visited Pagsanjan, of which he writes: "I have seen many beautiful gorges in my travels in the United States, Japan, Australia and elsewhere, but I must say this is in many respects the most beautiful gorge scenery I have ever witnessed." The gorge is 300 feet deep and 50 feet wide. The onlooker is struck by the beauty of the vegetation, which clings to every available holding place. The falls, too, are very picturesque. Among the pictures taken were some showing the banqueros tugging the boats up through the wild rapids and racing down them.

Dr. MacDowell next made about 1,500 feet of negative showing the cocoanut industry in its various stages. Among other pictures taken are several beautiful sunset views—one taken from the deck of a steamer and two from the Bridge of Spain, showing the tugs and cascos and the glow of the setting sun on the water.

All the negatives taken by Dr. MacDowell in his travels have been contracted for by President Wm. N. Selig of the Selig Polyscope Company. Dr. MacDowell is at present in Calcutta, and will make an extensive tour of India and adjacent countries.

Chicago Film Brevities.

The forty-ninth annual meeting of the Chicago Dental Society, held in this city January 31st and February 1st, was marked by the interest taken in the presentation of a special film entitled "Toothache and Its Ravages on a Happy Home." The film was shown in the private projecting room of George Kleine, by special courtesy, and two exhibitions were required so that all present could see the picture. The exhibitions were held on Saturday, February 1st. Dr. Fred W. Gethro delivered an appropriate lecture during each exhibition. All present were highly pleased and declared the moving picture a marvelous and most interesting teacher.

In my review this week of "The Wages of Transgression" (Eclipse) I omitted to state that on the split reel is a most instructive educational subject of about 200 feet in length, entitled "Primitive Potteries in Dorsetshire." The fashioning of various vessels from clay will be followed with great interest. The trick photography at the close of this subject, which is quite amusing, will tax the wits of many in trying to account for it.

President Henry of Illinois Branch No. 2, Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America, in speaking of the letter written by him to the American Song Slide & Poster Company, which appeared in an advertisement of that company in the issue of The World of January 18th, expressly states that the said letter was purely personal, and in no way connected with the league, and that it did not represent any expression of opinion by the league.

Mrs. R. R. Nehls, wife of Manager Nehls of the American Film Manufacturing Company, was seriously injured by an automobile January 22nd. She received severe injuries on the head and remained unconscious quite a time after the accident. Mrs. Nehls is in a very serious condition, but the doctors state that she will recover. The danger is heightened by the fact that Mrs. Nehls is in a delicate condition. Manager Nehls has been extended the warm sympathy of a wide circle of friends.

Doings at Los Angeles

Long at Los Angeles; Horsley, Too—Kinemacolor Active—Some Doings at the Selig Plant—A Big Batch of News.

PRESIDENT Samuel Long, of the Kalem Company is due here this week for an inspection of the Kalem studios at Glendale and Santa Monica. George Melford, the producer of the Glendale company, had planned a trip out to the Mojave desert to start a new two-reel picture, but postponed it when he heard that Long was on the way from New York. Without going into a trance, a clever fortune teller might predict that Mr. Long will form a third Southern California company before he returns East, although there has as yet been no announcement to this effect.

Melford's latest picture, finished this week, is another characteristic Kalem sermon. The subject treats of the honor system in the handling of convicts and will prove to be another strong presentation of the ideas which are being followed with such success by Governor West of Oregon.

Down at the beach gentle jolly jovial P. G. Hartigan is spilling off comedy releases with the regularity of clockwork.

Horsley Comes, Too.

Another motion picture potentate who is in our midst is David Horsley, of the Universal company, formerly owner of the Nestor brand. Horsley has become a plain downright tourist for he comes to California every winter, alleging that business brings him when as a matter of truth he is stuck on the country and wants to live here. This time he is due to buy the piece of property he has coveted for three years and the next trip is scheduled to make a Californian of him.

Out at the Universal studios A. M. Kennedy, Pacific Coast manager, continues to make things hum. Ever since he arrived it has been a case of daily expansion. Today a new company is organized, tomorrow a new stage is being built, or plans for a new group of buildings are approved. Half the companies are at the Gower street studio in Hollywood and the other half at the big Oak Glen ranch. Kennedy insists on giving his personal attention to everything and the only problem he has not been able to solve is how to be at both places at once. In order to make the jumps backward and forward between the two places on what is his idea of schedule time he has been obliged to become his own chauffeur, for none of the hired drivers will drive fast enough to satisfy him. He has been caught twice by the speed cops and the next time, according to the speed ordinance, the Universal company will have to dispense with the services of its general manager for thirty days.

Here are some of the things Kennedy accomplished this week.

Organized a new company for Lincoln J. Carter, appointed Jack O'Brien assistant director to work with Carter, and himself supervised the starting of "The Flaming Arrow" which will be Carter's first production.

Completed the organization of a new Rex company for Director Lucas.

Reorganized the commissary department at the ranch.

Bossed the carpenters and mechanics while they pulled down the scenario department over the heads of the scenario editors and rebuilt it.

Hired Ethel Grandon, former leading woman for the Imp company and put her to work as leading woman for Director Ford.

Captured and killed the hoodoo which dogged Ford's footsteps during the making of his first release and pulled out a good picture where otherwise, in the course of natural events, it should have been a complete failure. This needs an explanation which is as follows:

There were twelve Universal companies at work in Southern California before Ford's company was organized, consequently it was No. 13. There were thirteen members in the company and thirteen scenes in the story. Ford made the first scene on January 13, 1913 at 10 o'clock in the morning. The last foot of film—a short retake—was finished at 11 o'clock the following Monday morning. Someone figured out that the elapsed time was exactly 169 hours which is 13 times 13. The name of the production was the only thing out of character. It is "The Atonement," a title which contains only 12 letters. It is a big military picture of the kind Ford does so well. During its production six soldiers were more or less seriously injured by accidents resulting from the careless handling of explosives.

"Dickie and Jimmy," the Oak Crest pets, otherwise Richard Willis and James Dayton the Universal scenario twins, are to be triplets for word has come from New York that the head office has captured another tame scenario writer and is shipping him on to this city. He is said to be a wonder, though his name was not given.

David Wall, a new director, now heads one of the Powers companies.

The Universal Indians who probably take their work more seriously than any other motion picture actors in the business, tendered Kennedy a formal vote of thanks the other day because they were permitted to play the part of Confederate soldiers in a Civil war picture. They explained that even Indians are human and like to win sometimes, and that they got tired of having to be defeated in all the pictures where they play their natural selves.

Miles Busy with Kinemacolor.

Effective and really legitimate use of the vision effect in trick photography has been made by the Kinemacolor company in a three reel production which Producer David Miles is just completing. The title is "Steam" and assuming that Mr. Miles has carried out the scenario with his usual skill it promises to be one of the really notable films of the year. It will combine historical, scientific, dramatic, biographical and educational elements for it traces the development of steam from the time James Watt watched the tea kettle to its culmination in the modern high power locomotive. The chief incidents in the lives of James Watt, who made the first steam engine, and George Stephenson, who built the first locomotive, are woven into the story. Many weeks of research and preparation preceded the production. The film will show a faithful model of the original Watt engine in operation and also a working reproduction of Stephenson's locomotive. The first trip of this interesting engine is worked into the story and even the details of the man on horseback preceding it with a red flag to warn people off the track is reproduced.

In one of the vision scenes Watt dreams of the locomotive which Stephenson built after his death. Stephenson in turn has a vision of the ultimate development of his engine. In this picture there will be shown one of the largest and most powerful high speed locomotives ever built drawing a train of Pullman coaches at a speed of a mile a minute.

Another picture which Mr. Miles will undertake as soon as the costumes are completed will begin a historical series showing important events in the lives of great historical characters of this country. The first subject will be Nathan Hale. Mr. Miles proposes to close this picture with his hanging by the British as a spy. Following this there will be a sub-title "137 Years Later. 'Lest We Forget,'" introducing a view of the Nathan Hale statue in City Hall Park in New York City.

Two "Utah M. P. Companies."

Harry A. Kelly calls attention to a similarity in the names of two Western motion picture companies which may lead to confusion. The recent production of the five-reel feature "100 Years of Mormonism" has given considerable publicity to the Utah Moving Picture Co. by whom it was made. The Utah Moving Picture Co., is a California corporation organized last Fall to take over from the Golden State Motion Picture Co., all rights to the Mormon picture and to exploit it. Mr. Kelly was the originator of the idea and sold to the Golden State company the original scenario and the contract with the Mormon church. There is also another motion picture organization called the Utah Motion Picture Co. It is organized under the laws of the state of Utah and has its headquarters in Salt Lake City. The incorporators were E. S. Wallace, D. Archer, J. A. Lee and H. A. Birch, all of Salt Lake City. Mr. Kelly has been employed by the latter company as general manager and producer. The company will manufacture dramas, comedies and educational subjects and has already completed two 1000-foot Western dramas. A studio and manufacturing plant is now being built in Salt Lake City. The company will operate there in the summer and in Southern California in the winter.

Mr. Kelly also alleges that he is the author of the scenario followed in the production of "100 Years of Mormonism." The makers of the film say that Nell Shipman was engaged by them to write the scenario, and that although a scenario was taken over from Mr. Kelly by the Golden State company it was found unsuitable and was not used. Mr. Kelly retorts that he employed a detective to watch the entire production of the picture and that his scenario was faithfully followed from start to finish. With both sides of the story now before them readers are invited to accept the version they prefer.

K-B Active.

The Kessel-Baumann motion picture group at Edendale, where the offices of the Kaybee, Keystone and Broncho companies are located, has been branching out. A second Keystone company was organized this week with Henry P. Lehrman as director. This company will produce farce comedy of the kind the original company is doing under the direction of Mack Sennett. The new leading woman is Betty Shade who has been seen heretofore in Selig, Essanay and American releases.

The intellectual heftiness of the Edendale office, already the most highbrow motion picture institution in town, was considerably increased when Miss Jessie Booth was engaged as assistant photoplay editor. She will work with Richard V. Spencer who has charge of scenarios for the Kaybee and Broncho companies, but will practically devote her attention to the needs of the Broncho company.

Karl Coolidge is editor for the Keystone companies. Mack Sennett has just finished another military farce which Coolidge thinks will eclipse "The Battle of Who Runs." The presence of 500 persons in the battle scene will make it spectacular as well as laughable.

More Color Pictures.

The probability that a studio for the manufacture of "Tricolor" process motion pictures may soon be located in Los Angeles was announced this week by Carl Walker, local representative of Alex Pantages, head of the Pantages circuit of vaudeville houses. Pantages has just concluded negotiations with the French inventors of the new process for the exclusive rights in all cities covered by his circuit.

According to Mr. Pentages' local agent the tricolor pictures are superior to the Kinemacolor pictures, a statement with which the Kinemacolor people probably will disagree.

"Kinemacolor films give reds and greens and the combination of the two colors in various tints," Mr. Walker explains. "Tricolor gives red, blue and yellow, and their combinations, orange, violet and green, in a thousand different tints. From these three primary colors every tint of nature is derived. The new tricolor process is analogous to the well known three color photography and color printing, and gives absolutely perfect results under the new French invention. Three films are run through the machine together and this necessitates a new pattern of projector."

At the Selig Plant.

James L. Magee, one of the veterans in the Selig service, is back in the harness again managing affairs at the Edendale plant. Magee was relieved from duty a couple of months ago and instructed by Mr. Selig to pick a special company and prepare to leave January 1 for a trip around the world. He was to have sailed from San Francisco for Japan this month. Pending the arrival of Mr. Selig, who is expected in Los Angeles within the next thirty days, the journey was deferred, but it has not been abandoned.

Another big African hunting picture is on at the Animal Farm studio of the company. Passengers on the interurban line between this city and Pasadena were started one afternoon this week to see a long foot-train of negro native porters winding over one of the hills near Eastlake park with a elephant and several mounted men in white helmets at the head of the procession.

Lanier Bartlett, Selig's scenario editor, has gone to Panama on a sight seeing expedition.

News Notes.

Seventeen seems to be the magic membership number for The Photoplayers. At each of the last three meetings seventeen new members have been taken in. The total active membership is now very close to 250. The next meeting is certain to produce enough new members to put the club over the 250 mark. That a social organization of such proportions could be formed in about two months exclusively among men actively engaged in the production of motion pictures shows what an important producing center Los Angeles has grown to be. The members of the club held a special election at their last meeting to decide which of the many leading women of the Southern California companies should lead the grand march with President Fred Mace at the St. Valentine's ball in Shrine Auditorium the night of February 14. There were 22 nominations and Mabel Normand, of the Keystone company, won by a small margin.

A bad fire in the building next door interrupted the business of the Optic Theater on Main Street, between Fifth and Sixth, the afternoon of January 23. When the first alarm was given, employees of the theater notified the audience that there was a fire in the neighborhood and announced that, as a precaution, the performance would be discontinued. The audience was dismissed quietly and without disorder, but five minutes later the theater was filled with smoke and for a time it seemed doomed. Meanwhile the Ocean to Ocean Motion Picture Company had sent a cameraman to the scene and one of the films he caught showed the audience leaving the building. Two days later, before the fire department had removed its men from the building, the Optic Theater was again in operation and its program included the motion pictures of the fire.

A. Lawrence Valk, a Los Angeles architect, who recently made a business trip to New York City and who, on his way home, stopped at the principal cities of the United States to study motion picture theaters, says that Los Angeles picture houses as a whole are far ahead of those of any other city, not even excluding New York. This city, he says, has more big, beautiful, modern picture houses and fewer cheap, inadequate, uncomfortable "store" theaters than any city he visited. His opinion is that of an expert, for he is a picture theater specialist who has devoted his attention exclusively to buildings of this class for the last five years, during which time he has designed and superintended the construction of 171 theaters.

"Gettysburg," in three reels, is the next big Civil War picture motion picture patrons the world over are promised. The Kay-Bee Company is producing it at Santa Monica canyon and Thomas Ince of course is directing it, with the assistance of Charles Giblyn. In the week it has been under way several of the big battle scenes have been finished. They called for so many men and such a layout of money that Ince did not dare risk having to retake any of the scenes and so eight cameras were turned simultaneously on each scene. During the first week 800 extra men were employed, and the problem of getting them down to the beach in the morning and back again at night was a grave one until the railroad company consented to put on four extra cars.

Plans for a new business block on South Hill Street just below Seventh, which will have a modern motion picture theater on the ground floor, were completed this week and the contract will be let within the next ten days. The theater has already been leased for a term of years by the Tally Amusement Company and Ed. Tally, of the College Theater, will manage it. The building will be completed in about five months and the theater will be in operation soon after July 1. It will have a seating capacity of 900.

Frank Powell, formerly director for the Thanhouser Company, has left that organization and is now kicking about foot loose and fancy free. He had several opportunities to go to work as director with companies in the East, but says he likes California too well to leave. The probabilities are that a man of Powell's ability and reputation will not be allowed to enjoy much of a vacation. This boost is not a family matter. Neither of us can trace far enough back to find where the genealogies come together.

The West Coast Magazine, a California illustrated monthly, in its January issue publishes an illustrated article by Nell Shipman, of Los Angeles, on Photoplay Manufacturers of America. An original idea is that of scattering throughout the article side-column thumb nail reproductions of the familiar trade marks of the different brands.

F. E. Norton and Frank V. Biggy have opened their commercial motion picture plant at 230½ South Spring Street. Instead of organizing a new company, as they planned, they have reorganized the Sunset Motion Picture Company. Norton is an expert photographer and Biggy is an experienced cameraman.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS AT ESSANAY STUDIO.

The Essanay Film Mfg. Co., was honored last week by visits from several national celebrities. Among the most prominent was Mr. Clair Briggs, the cartoonist of Chicago Tribune fame. Mr. Briggs drew a cartoon of "When a Feller Needs a Friend," (which a series of the above are now running in the Tribune), depicting a young boy standing in front of a motion picture theater broke and gazing toward the bill poster which reads "Broncho Billy here today." The youth was sadly wishing for a friend to come to his assistance. Mr. Sidney Smith, also of the Tribune, went through the Essanay plant. Thurston, the great magician, was more than delighted at the process of the "making of the photoplays." Battling Nelson and his wife called at the studio and had their photos taken.

SAVE THE BIRDS.

An Appeal to Children and How to Answer It.

JOHN BURROUGHS and Ernest Thompson, the naturalists, have issued a joint appeal to the school children of America. "An urgent appeal to you on behalf of our native birds, many species of which are in danger of extinction. The destruction of bird life in America is costing the farmers millions of dollars annually, through the constantly increasing devastations of harmful insects, upon which the birds feed. A measure is now before Congress to protect all migratory birds by the Federal government. Such a measure is greatly needed, or our birds will continue to decrease in alarming proportions." This universal appeal is timely, if the children of America ask the Senators and Representatives of their respective States to support this measure, there is no doubt their petitions will have weight. Another question here suggests itself. Would it not be a good thing to interest the children of America in birds more thoroughly? Without doubt both of these eminent naturalists would answer in the affirmative, this can in no way be done better than by the moving picture.

Birds in their Nests is a good subject at this time. This film shows the nests of different birds, also their modes of living in their native haunts.

Sea Birds and their Haunts. This film shows at close quarters how sea birds care for their young.

Bird Sagacity (also animals), showing the proficiency attained by birds that have been taught.

African Birds. Although a film of foreign birds, it will be of help in generally illustrating bird life.

Such an occasion as this affords a splendid opportunity for the exhibitor. An afternoon and evening devoted to a program of this timely and popular subject will secure for him the co-operation of parents and authorities; in addition to the value in responding to the nation-wide appeal of these eminent naturalists. To increase the program and make it more effective a picture showing the ravages of insects so detrimental to the farmer and which the birds destroy would be very appropriate. The Gaumont Company has a splendid film entitled "The Cabbage Caterpillar," which shows the detail, thoroughness and extent of the damage they accomplish. This combination would fulfill the immediate object of the exhibition, be highly interesting, very educational, and enhance the value and importance of the moving picture.

For all occasions and purposes of this kind, exhibitors should know that the Moving Picture Educator is at all times ready with advice and information, and will only be too pleased to answer all inquiries.

LIVING PICTURES—PICTURES WHICH SURVIVE.

There are many pictures which are valued according to their age, irrespective of quality, value, or merit; the reason for this is two-fold, they either belong to an every-day appearing class, and strike no special note in the progress or signs of the times; or they are only "born for a day" and were never intended to amount to any more: each of these in the vernacular of the trade becomes "junk." There are other pictures which are destined to live—become useful, and permanent, as such, they may justly be termed "pictures which survive or living pictures," as they will not only live out their "day and generation," but will be useful for "generations yet unborn."

These living pictures are divided into three classes: entertaining, interesting, and educational. The entertaining are usually classed as "special feature films" and reproduce chiefly works of great authors successfully. The interesting are scenic, travel, descriptive, and illustrating industrials.

The educational are generally scholastic and deal with all subjects taught in any educational institution. Of these three classes the writer has a selected list of over one thousand distinct films, each one a "living picture." Is it therefore not to the advantage of many people (not exhibitors only) whom the exhibitor may influence to become acquainted with this wonderful and valuable collection. To any interested person or persons the Moving Picture Educator is ready to give the benefit of this accumulated knowledge and experience for the asking, with the hope of increasing the value and power of the "living picture."

QUALITY REPEATING ITSELF.

For the second time within a few days the writer has seen the intelligent picture in the ascendant; not only justifying itself, but redeeming its faulty associates from unworthiness. In this instance the honors fell to Pathe's Weekly, always good because always interesting and satisfying to the mental appetite. Civic events in San Francisco showing the development of municipal ownership in street railroads is recorded. The funeral of Ambassador Reid in New York is an event of national interest. The English warship is shown together with the landing of the remains, and the procession to St. John's Cathedral. A picture of this kind with its international setting is of interest to every person who can see a moving picture.

The "Rose Carnival" in Pasadena, Cal., is a most picturesque event; it was particularly noticeable how the automobile gives occasion for greater and larger "floats" on occasions of this kind, some of those seen being marvels of design and decoration, affording excellent suggestions for those seeing these pictures who are interested in similar events. A four-horse chariot race is unusually good, being as genuine as any of earlier times and equally thrilling.

The royal rulers of Sweden are reproduced in excellent portraiture; the King and Queen are present at the unveiling of a memorial statue to a former Queen perpetuating her beneficent reign. Pictures of the after effects of disasters on both sea and land possess their own interest. The latest winter fashions in furs as seen in Paris pleased the ladies of the audience. Of the other pictures seen at this same exhibition none were of special moment; one a gambling house where "everything is on the level"—according to a notice posted over the bar, singularly contradicts the plot of the story, in that, after causing a youth to lose all his money, the honest gambler advises him not to play any more, "because he does not understand the game." The whole question was, is it possible to do evil that good may come of it? Another picture is of an unhappy home in which the wife threatens to retaliate for her husband's abuse; at this juncture he is shot, and for several years she suffers a wrong imprisonment until proved innocent. All such pictures, if they do not have a depressing effect, certainly cannot have any mentally invigorating results. People seeking pleasure and amusement cannot find them with a program of this character; it is here where the intelligent picture comes in and "saves the day," and people go away to forget, if possible, the sordid, yet carrying contented impressions of that which has met the receptive powers of their faculties.

SOME OPINIONS.

It is worthy of special notice, that everywhere the subjects of those pictures which carry with them instructive or interesting information, are best received. A New York clergyman says in a daily paper, "I have seen the enthusiasm which greeted the films showing the features of travel in foreign lands." This opinion will be shared by all those who are sufficiently interested to notice what pictures afford the greatest satisfaction, as manifested by every audience of average intelligence. It is often given as excuse for an indifferent exhibition, that it is "what the people want," this is only true in part, it is what the people have been led to expect; hence the lower taste has been cultivated. Judging from the reception given to the intelligent pictures it is safe to assume that a cultivation of this taste will change the answer to the present reason given as to "what the people want."

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Talking to Mr. Kehrlein.

MR. EMIL KEHRLEIN, JR., has been in New York for the past few weeks, and finding content in the fact that the Turner and Dahnken circuit does these things better than the average New York house. Mr. Kehrlein has not been "knocking," nor has he been bragging, but a few questions, innocently asked, permitted us to guess at what he thought.

The Turner and Dahnken circuit believes in enterprise, as we have shown before, and it seems to believe in the Kehrleins as representing enterprise, for there are Kehrleins all along the California coast. Emil Kehrlein is not so very long out of college, but he talks like a veteran showman.

"The house is the best advertisement," he declared the other day. "You must have a place where people like to come, where they are certain of a good bill, or all the direct advertising you can do will be wasted. We try to treat people so they want to come every time we change our bill. We get the biggest we can, and use all the licensed specials. It is a pity there are not more, for we could use many more than we get.

"We raise the price in accordance with the supposed value of the attraction, running from 15 to 25 cents for reserved seats, and we find that they pay both in direct return and in raising the standard of the entertainment the house is able to offer. Nothing is more valuable in making into regulars the occasional patron, and I think that the idea of reserving the seats is a good one, not alone in connection with the specials, but at any time. A man likes to know just what sort of a seat he will have. Lots of people do not care to stand in line in the lobby to wait their turn.

"Of direct advertising the newspaper column—if it carries reading matter with it—is the best, despite the cost, and we use as much space as we can afford. One thing wherein we differ from many exhibitors is the stress we place upon the educationals. Some houses, I understand, refuse to take the scenics, industrials and travel views. I think this is a mistake. We get all we can.

Class Lists.

"At a considerable expense we maintain classified lists of professional men and others. If we have something like the Panama Canal, for example, we make a special appeal to engineers and contractors. The announcement of a visualized book is followed by the circularizing of the literary clubs and the school teachers. Medical topics, like some of the Edisons, are brought to the especial attention of the physicians, and ministers are approached when we know we shall have biblical or purpose plays.

"We do everything in our power to make the people realize that the motion pictures are something beside the 5-cent entertainment they used to be, and while this educational campaign is costly and helps those exhibitors who will not help themselves or us, we think that we derive the most benefit from it and make sufficient gains to repay this rather costly form of direct appeal.

"If all the exhibitors would follow our example and make their patrons realize what a tremendous power for good the pictures are when they are properly displayed and used, the 5-cent theater would soon be a thing of the past everywhere, save in the very smallest towns."

Expensive, But—

Those classified lists are costly to keep up, and it takes many 2-cent stamps for mailing, but if you send a teacher an announcement of something that should interest her pupils, she is apt to tell the class, and the investment may show a thousand per cent. of profit. It's not so costly when you figure on that basis, is it?

Why not prepare a card like this:

> Name of Theater.
> Address.
> I am particularly interested in pictures dealing with............
> ..............................................................
> ..............................................................
> ..............................................................
> Please notify me (at your expense) when you have any pictures on these topics.
> Name ..........................................................
> Address ........................................................

Give these cards out to those in your audience who look as though they would appreciate such a courtesy. Then have a slide to be flashed at each performance to read:

> If you are interested in any particular subject, fill in the card to be had at the box office, and we will notify you, at our expense, when we have such subjects.

Build up a list and use it. If you will work for the list the list will work for you.

Good for Winstock.

Melvin G. Winstock sends us a photograph and a letter. We cannot use the photograph, because it will not reproduce well, but here is the letter:

> I am sending you a photograph of a testimonial presented to me at our monthly entertainment, Tuesday evening, January 14. There is a little secret attached to this which I ought to explain.
> At Christmas time the employes of the company saw fit to go around and make a collection for the purpose of presenting me with a present in the shape of furnishing all sorts of things for my automobile—robes, cigar lighter, etc. I heard of it, and it has always been my principle while I have controlled the employment of men never to accept presents, and when I heard of it I delivered an address to the employes at the last monthly meeting, near Christmas, in which I as nicely as I could stated my views regarding this matter and absolutely refused to accept a present. The employes were then determined to show in some way their feeling for me, and it took the form of this little expression of good will, which was signed by every employe. I am very proud of it.

That's the sort of manager we like to hear about. We have regretfully parted with more than one $5 bill in our own theatrical days, and we know that even where the gift is made in the pure spirit of appreciation it hits some folks hard.

The photograph is that of a handsomely engrossed resolution, signed by all the employes, but in a cut it would look like a sample of printing ink gone bad, and so we will not smudge the column.

Booming Mary.

The Tenth Street Theater, Kansas City, has something new in handling the "What Happened to Mary" series. This announcement is self-explanatory:

> ANNOUNCEMENT.
> On account of the great interest displayed in, and to accommodate numerous patrons who were unable to see
> The Woman's World Series of
> "WHAT HAPPENED TO MARY"
> Which was shown last week at the Tenth Street Theater, the management has arranged to show this same series at the > TWELFTH STREET THEATER,
> 211 East Twelfth Street,
> For the week beginning January 20, 1913.

The first story is run Monday, the second Tuesday, and so on until the entire series, up to date, is concluded on Saturday, with the seventh story as part of the regular program and the sixth as an extra. With the exception of the seventh, all of the subjects are in addition to the regular program.

The Tenth Street holds its advertising well, using 24 pages and cover, about a third of it being outside advertising. It is our understanding that the program is farmed out, as is done in the case of most dramatic theaters. If you can't get ads for your own program, why not follow suit and turn it over to someone who can? It pays and is not lacking in dignity. To the contrary, a program well patronized by business concerns give the house added standing in the eyes of the patrons, no matter what you may think to the contrary. The artistic program is all well and good, but the wise man makes it a source of profit and gets just as much advertising for himself as though he paid for it.

And the Cameraphone.

One of the Cameraphone bulletins in Pittsburgh (there are several houses so titled, the bulletin being changed for each) now carries some advertising, and some of these days we look to see the Bulletin a local film weekly for the public, with a paid subscription list that will get it the second class mailing privilege. There is a lot of good reading matter in the columns, and a lot about the films, so mixed that you get both, and the miscellaneous matter is well selected and properly edited. We are watching for a 16-page paper from them. It might be done now by using the advertisements, running the film stories once and telling which houses will have them, and when.

From Inverness.

K. L. Allardyce-Arnott, resident manager of the Central Hall Picture House, Inverness, sends in a copy of his opening program and one of the book marks that formed the souvenir on that occasion. He writes that he has gathered many useful hints from this paper. The Moving Picture World long since outgrew a purely local circulation in the United States, as our correspondence clearly shows. We wish that others in foreign countries would follow the example of this management, the Arcade and others, and send to this department their advertising novelties.

The book mark souvenir is really novel—an oblong card 2¼ by 7 inches, with a 4-inch ribbon at each end. In a tiny window is inserted a single frame of film. The letterpress explains:

> The picture in the square is a piece of film, and if held to the light the picture will be clearly seen.
>
> This is the actual size of each picture, which, by means of powerful projectors and lenses, is magnified about 5,000 times, to reproduce our large and elegant pictures.
> Our program as shown measures over a mile and a half of these pictures.

The size of the picture on the screen is not stated, but it must be large since the house seats 1,500 persons. In that case the estimate is too low. An eight-foot picture is magnified 9,216 times, and a ten-foot picture 14,000 times, as a little figuring will show.

It is possible that Mr. Allardyce-Arnott got the idea of the film from an item in this department some time ago. At any rate, it is a good one, and something that will be preserved. In case anyone wants to try it over, here it should be noted that in this improvement on the original idea the card is double, the ends of the ribbon and the film being glued to one card and the other pasted over. This increases the cost considerably, but it makes a far neater job, and this is something that will be kept as long as it will hold together and treasured as a curiosity.

In Great Britain civic dignity is highly thought of, and the fact the Central Hall was opened by the Provost (Mayor) magistrates and town councillors. Portraits of the Provost and his wife appear on the marker.

The back cover of the program gives a cut of a very handsome 50-foot front, the first cover page carrying a portrait of the Provost. As the programs cost 2 cents each, they do not represent an expense. There is a greeting on the third page, the opening program on the fourth and fifth, and the sixth carries the following day's bill. The prices of admission range from 6 to 24 cents.

We would like to hear from the management on the subject of newspaper and other advertising.

Mulish Reindeer.

The Lyric Theater, Texarkana, Texas, sends a photograph of an advertising wagon used at holiday time. It is plainly to be seen that the reindeer are mules in masquerade, but we can't expect reindeer to flourish in Texas even in winter, and the really clever make-up no doubt excited attention and kept the house in mind at a time when holiday shopping was a distraction. This sort of thing is good for the house if it shows cleverness. It's a sign of enterprise, and enterprise usually is the assurance of a well-run house.

Mr. Chaney Enlarges.

N. E. Chaney, of the Orpheum Theater, Hillsboro, Ohio, writes an apology for coming in so often, which is very foolish, because Mr. Chaney always comes with ideas, and managers with ideas are more than welcome to these pages.

Mr. Chaney's "excuse" for this latest appearance is a sixteen page and cover monthly program. He uses a lithographed front, and in this stands on the same plane with the two-dollar dramatic theater, except that the cover is not specially drawn for him; a fact not apparent to his patrons.

The larger space gives him more room, and he makes good use of what he has. He takes for his own use much more than half the space, and the rest is sold to local firms, including the first automobile advertising we recall having seen in a photoplay theater program. The foreign ads not only make possible an inviting issue, but ensure a small profit as well. Mr. Chaney's argument may interest others. It reads:

> TO MR. ADVERTISER.
> We call your especial attention to the fact "that program circulation is based upon the popularity of the theater and the number of patrons attending daily." That as a publicity medium through which the up-to-date advertiser can gain immediate and far-reaching results, our program has no equal in this city. Our program runs for one month at a time and goes into and remains in every home in this city for that period. It is made attractive by giving the full synopsis of every photo-play shown during the month, together with cuts of the most popular players. In view of these facts we claim your attention as an advertising medium.

Read Proofs.

The proof reading on the first issue is poor. A Modern Atalanta becomes A Modern Atlanta; the First Settler's Story, the First Settles, and little things like that, but the hints as to the subjects are well done, snappy and interest provoking. Take that for A Modern Atalanta, which reads:

> A pretty girl had three suitors. She agrees to run a foot race with each one separately, the one beating her in the race she will marry. Well, she runs away from the first two, but the third man comes in first. The other fellows, when they find they cannot win, help the third man. There was a cow mixed in the affair, and you will have to see the picture to find out the trick. She got the fellow she wanted anyway. Edith Storey was the girl; Morrison, Lincoln and Richmond were the men. Which one do you say got her?

This piques the interest and holds the attention. It is much better than the full synopsis where it can be done with snap, but it is not easy to write.

Much attention is paid to names where these are available, and names are played up in a heavier type than is used for the titles, which shows what Mr. Chaney thinks about it. We think that a better effect could be had by using a heavy type for the titles and running the names in a heavy italic, which makes the names stand out even better without detracting from the titles.

Cuts are used to embellish the pages and they are well printed, more particularly in view of the fact that fine screen cuts are mostly employed. Mr. Chaney has every reason to be proud of his issue. We look to see a magazine supplement the next development

A Novelty Card.

The Scenic theater, Oakland, California, uses a novelty mailing card that will attract attention. The centre of the card is black with the white outline of a man's head, the mouth being open. To the left is a white ball and by a familiar law of vision the man seems to swallow the ball as the card is brought close to the face.

The top of the card carries the line "This is a moving picture." Below the cut is a line of direction and then merely the name of the theater, its manager, location and the statement that the pictures are changed daily. We think that something like this would have been better in connection with the top line:

> But the Moving Pictures at the Scenic Theater are very different. They represent the best that can be produced with the aid of $10,000,000 capital invested in twelve plants. That's what's back of the entertainment at the Scenic—ten million dollars—and brains.

The card lives up to one of the chief requirements in that it is something that will be carried about by the recipient and not immediately thrown away, but that is all the more reason why the argument should have been made stronger. Herman Muhr runs the house and we think that he'll do better with the next card.

Still a One Sheet.

The Orpheum theater, Haverhill, Mass., still sticks to a one-sheet weekly program, announcing the three features on the three programs. They put a lot on one sheet of paper and put it "punchily" to coin a word. Spending as much money for features as they seem to do, we think that this single sheet should be augmented by some small pocket card for those who want to keep track of the coming events without carrying the big sheet about with them. The large sheet is about 7 by 21 inches and not handy. It does well enough to display to advantage the titles, but a pocket card might be appreciated by those who appreciate good shows.

Where a really attractive list of offerings is given the list itself should be attractive.

Not Quite.

The Tenth Street theater, Kansas City, prints a picture of Miss Gene Gauntier, whom it calls a Vitagraph player. Miss Gauntier is so well known that the break is a bad one.

It is so seldom that the Tenth Street goes wrong on its data that we are surprised but forgiving, but many managers are showing an increasing carelessness in labeling their portraits. It is bad for the house as it affects unpleasantly those fans who know all the players. They are apt to think less of a house that seems to know so little of its subject.

A Selig Envelope.

The Selig Special envelope for A Cowboy Millionaire, has been prepared with the usual completeness by the Publicity Department. It carries a large sheet of press material, full data as to cuts, electro advertisements and a special musical program. It also announces a cut in the price of special paper to ten cents a sheet when ordered in lots of ten of a kind at one time. These envelopes are such a help to the exhibitor that it is a pity that all manufacturers do not follow the Vitagraph example in supplying press notices for each release and the Selig plan of printing these on a special sheet that may be cut up without spoiling the other matter of record.

Managers appreciate these helps and consciously or otherwise look with the greater favor on those brands which offer the most complete service.

Reproachfully Stated.

Carey Wilson told us that he was going to send us one of the anniversary programs of the Criterion theater, Rutherford, New Jersey—but he did not.

There Are Others.

Dean R. Daynes, of the Broadway Theater, Salt Lake City, writes that he has his own printing plant. He was intending to keep this for a writeup later, but he states the fact in answer to our suggestion that there are others besides the Canadian manager possessing their house printing plant. We are going to withhold the data until Mr. Daynes comes forward with his promised description of the new house plans. We do not want to use the few facts until we have the complete story and samples of the work. We hope that Mr. Daynes will repeat what he has already told us and add the other essential facts.

We think that many houses might establish a small plant for the purpose of doing rush jobs. Where the local paper does the work, and the slight cost carries also press notices in the paper, it is not worth while, but now and then there are times when houses could make a good percentage of the cost if they could get a bill out more quickly than the local office can do it. It does not have to be a very large press to get out a rush job, and with type properly chosen the outfit need not cost above $50 or $75 plus the cost of the press itself, which will run from $50 to as much as you care to pay.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Eats!

WE'VE been waiting more or less patiently for one of the committee appointed to conduct the next photoplaywriters' dinner to make a noise.

There has been no noise!

None the less, there is going to be a photoplaywrights' dinner, probably on Saturday evening, March 1st, also probably at the Taverne Louis, which is French for the former Flatiron Restaurant. The price probably will be two dollars a cover, and no extra ten cents for bread and butter.

These are the rules:

Any photoplaywright or person interested in photoplaywrighting is eligible to attend, irrespective of their connection with the business.

Each guest is entitled to escort a person of the opposite sex, though such an escort is not insisted upon.

No ticket can be had later than Thursday, February 27th. Positively no one will be admitted without ticket, and there will be no tickets sold after the above date.

As the full price will be turned over to the restaurant, it is required that each application be accompanied by cash, express or postoffice order and a stamped and self-addressed envelope.

We had a bully good time last dinner. Let's make this even better!

As this dinner is being run for the photoplaywrights, and not for the financial advantage of any one person, it is requested that no orders be sent by those who do not expect to attend, "to help the thing along." If you can't come, do not send for a ticket. If you can come, come.

At this dinner the long-talked-of Inquest Club will be brought into being. It has long been on our mind to start this, but we've been busier with work than a hound purp in the sand flea section. We are ready now. It's up to you.

Low Down.

Recently a Western concern filmed "The Face on the Floor," perhaps better known by the incorrect title of "The Face on the Barroom Floor." The fact that the author of the poem, H. A. D'Arcy, is press man for the Lubin company makes the swipe seem a bit mean—but why didn't Mr. D'Arcy put on the poem himself?

Just the same, it is coming it low down to pirate the stuff of a fellow filmer, and we hope that Mr. D'Arcy gets after the infringers. We believe that he still has his copyright protection.

Copyright.

We are getting sick of the copyright question, particularly as most of the inquiries are practically requests for information as to just how far the inquirer may go in stealing the work of another, but we are going to tackle the subject once more, and after this those who want to know will have to buy this copy.

Copyright is no more than this: You have created, from your own mind, something of general interest. To induce you to give this matter to the public, or "dedicate" it, as the expression goes, you are assured by the Government, by act of Congress, that if you publish or "dedicate" this work and copyright it, you will be protected to the full in your rights.

Certain classes of submissions are provided for. If your work falls within this classification you are entitled to register your work with the Copyright Office, which is a part of the Library of Congress, and administered by a Register, the present incumbent being Mr. Thorvald Solberg, who has done more to bring the idea to a state of perfection than probably all of his predecessors combined.

But by act of Congress, Mr. Solberg can do only certain things. If you have written a book he can accept for registration two copies of this book. If you have written a play, a lecture or an article for some paper, he can accept a manuscript of the lecture or play or a printed copy of the newspaper article. He can accept for registration a copy of a map, a copy of a song or instrumental composition, the photograph of a work of art or two copies of a photoplay produced for sale, or one copy of a photoplay not produced for sale. This last may be in manuscript form, accompanied by cuttings from the film.

The Copyright Office makes record of this entry according to class, issues a certificate to this effect, and this matter is either turned over to the Library of Congress, certain other libraries designated by Congress, or returned to the writer for preservation, properly marked for identification.

This is as far as the office can go. It accepts for registration any proper matter offered it. If you and I both write the same story it does not matter whether you or I really have written it. Both stories will be accepted and registered. It remains for you and I to fight the matter out in the courts. Unless fraud very clearly is shown the practice is to accept the first entry of registration.

But the office deals only with matter dedicated to the public. A script of an unproduced photoplay has no more standing in copyright law than has the unpublished novel or fiction story. The office deals only with matters published or "dedicated to the public," and not with matters that at some future time will be so dedicated through publication. But a clause in the copyright law specifically provides that no such matter shall be deprived of its right at common law before publication. It is only after this publication that the copyright office intervenes, but once matter has been published it is taken for granted that unless copyright protection of the matter is claimed through entry and registration, the matter is dedicated to the public without reserve.

But should you publish a novel, for example, and enter the same with the Copyright Office, all rights remain with you. You have entered the story, but a play made from this story is your property; a photoplay made from this story is your property, because in copyrighting the story and printing the copyright notice you give warning that this idea is your own property and that you claim all rights.

If you write a story, and John Smith makes a photoplay of it, if you can show that John Smith got his idea from your story you can collect the damages provided by law. If you do not copyright the story, it is the inference that you do not regard the matter of sufficient importance to be deserving of protection, and John Smith and Jim Jones and Henry Smith are equally at liberty to make your idea into a play, a photoplay or a song, because you have given to the public an unprotected idea.

More than this, if Jim Smith copyrights a play done from your unprotected story, another dramatization, following the lines laid down by Smith, cannot be offered. Smith makes into a play your unprotected fiction story. He is entitled to protection and profit if he wishes to claim it.

But you must copyright the idea as a whole. If you write a poem on the sunset, and call it "Sunset," and Sue Springer also writes and copyrights a poem on sunset, you both have the right to call your poem "Sunset" so long as your own and the Springer version are unlike. But if you write a poem on sunset, and Sue Springer uses the title and the idea of the verse so closely in approximation of your own thought and phraseology that one seems a steal from the other, you can shut off the Springer version at common law.

In copyright law you stand on an equal footing, and neither has the right to a title apart from the idea, but if it is apparent that you have written a play called the "Inner Law" because another play called "The Inner Law" has been a big theatrical success, common law will ignore the fact of copyright and regard the infringement as an invasion of the civil rights of the owner of the original title.

More than this, if you have written a play called "When Men Grow Old" and have laid it on the shelf after a brief experience with the theater; if another author comes along with a play of the same title and makes a hit, you cannot prevent the use of that title, and may, perhaps, be liable to suit if you revive your own dead play.

A title alone cannot be copyrighted. It is but a part of your offering. You can use the title used by another if the two stories do not conflict and it is plain that you are not merely seeking to make gain on the strength of a more popular production of the same title. Under copyright law your rights are the same, but under common law you never relinquish certain privileges, one of which is to profit by the work of your brain or hands.

In other words, you can use a book title for a photoplay, but not if you clearly seek to convey the impression that this photoplay is taken from the book.

Copyright runs for 28 years, and may be renewed for a similar period. You are not permitted to make use of any matter appearing under copyright since about 40 years, as the renewal may have extended the original 14-year period.

You cannot secure copyright protection until your work has been dedicated to the public through publication either in print or in film, but the publication of a book holds to you the dramatic and photoplay rights, and a book may be anything printed and actually offered for sale, the offer for sale being more or less technical or theoretical.

If you want to protect your photoplays before sending them out, have them printed as a book, and copyright the book. If you wish to protect a certain type of play, have a series of stories printed as a book, and trust to common law to uphold your rights in other and similar stories.

In brief, copyright is simply legal entry of your claims and a legal establishment of priority. It is not a cure-all, and when you write on your script that "this story is copyrighted and all infringements will be prosecuted," you make the editor laugh a little, but you do not scare him. He knows that he can have you punished if he wants, because you cannot copyright a photoplay not printed as a book, and the erroneous statement that you have done so lays you liable to prosecution under Federal law—which is a most inconvenient thing.

If you are a photoplaywright, keep away from copyright and trust to the honesty of the companies. Don't say you have copyrighted what you have not, and do not steal the copyrighted property of others.

Harry Furniss Speaks.

Sir Henry Furniss, who came over here to put on some of his own plays for the Edison company, doesn't seem to like photoplay writing as a business, and he takes a rather unique stand in an article in the London Bioscope. One curious contention is that:

> One must not lose sight of the fact that to write plays is essentially work for an artist rather than an author or dramatist, for the artist sees and thinks in pictures, and, if in addition, he is gifted with the faculty for construction, he is pre-eminently the individual to cope with this particular class of work.

We do not agree with Mr. Furniss. We have yet to see an artist materialize into a good photoplaywright. Mr. Furniss did some capital work, but it was because he is as much a writer as a caricaturist. It was not because he could, as an artist, think pictures that he got his stuff over, but because he had the ability to write down what he thought in such a fashion that the director could understand. At that Mr. Furniss stood over the director and practically directed Mr. Miller who directed the pictures.

One does not have to be an artist to think in photoplay. One has to be a photoplaywriter. One does have to think in a picture, but not the still picture. The man who can, in a few brief sentences, convey his idea to a director must be able to see the picture act itself with reasonable distinctness, but seeing pictures of this sort is vastly different from thinking out some work of still art. We do not say that an ability to see the action is absolutely essential, but most of those who do good work can see the picture as they write it. They do not write it to conform absolutely to what they see, but seeing the picture gives them an idea of the possibilities of the action and they convey as much of this action to the director as will permit the scene to be gotten over.

Mr. Furniss goes on to explain that the outside writer gets about $15 a script on the average (he must have been sending in to Hal Reid), but that the advanced writer gets from $20 to $25. And this from England, where two guineas (about $10) is regarded as something extra!

Many writers will take $15 to $25 for a full reel, knowing that their work is inexperienced, but Mr. Furniss was in a studio that probably pays more for its stuff than any other maker of film we know of.

He goes on to argue that most writers fail because they do not realize that the average story is written about some property or mechanical effect, which will be news to many producers. We wonder if Mr. Furniss saw "The New Church Carpet," which was being run when he was in the Edison studio. Unless a church sociable is an "effect" we don't know what novelty there was in that—outside of story and real heart interest.

Later on he gives it as his opinion that "the game is not worth the candle," because plays are hard to sell, and they must be played on an "eight foot stage."

We are afraid that someone has been rejecting the Furniss scripts, for he entertained no such soured views on photoplay while he was here, about a year ago, and expressed himself then as being delighted with everything. Surely he has had some scripts back.

Detail.

We saw a script the other day in which the rather good idea was hopelessly buried beneath a mass of useless detail. The first scene was a wedding, and the writer took a page and a quarter to tell how the wedding was run. There were the pews shut off with white ribbons, there were six ushers in afternoon dress, and there were as many bridesmaids in "lawn party dresses," whatever that may be. All the details of the entrance and exit of the wedding party and the ceremony itself were given in full, about thirty-five lines in all. Cut to proper length, it looked more like this:

> 1. Church—wedding ceremony just concluded –Tom and Bess come down aisle toward the camera and exit—others follow.

That's less than two lines of typewriting, but it tells all that really needs to happen in the scene. The rest is overweight. The average director probably knows as well as the average minister just how to run off a wedding, even though some pictures may not show it. Take it for granted that he does, and merely indicate the essential. The essential in this case was that the hero was just married to the heroine, and about nine minutes of business was written into an eighteen-minute play just to get that fact over.

When you write an office set do not state that there are desks and chairs and a hat rack. The director has an office of his own, with a chair and a desk and possibly a hat rack. Just write it "office" and leave the rest to him, unless you must have something that most offices do not have. "Office, large waste basket essential," calls attention to the fact that some of the business of the scene calls for a large waste basket, but if any old waste basket will do, leave it to the director. If Harold has to throw a letter into the basket, write that "Harold throws letter in waste basket," and the property man will be told to get a waste basket somewhere between eighteen and forty-eight inches high.

In spite of all that has been said on the subject, writers persist in hiding their essential action in a mass of unimportant detail. There surely is a happy medium between the page to a scene and the brevity of another recent script which recorded that "they gave her the money; she drops dead." Of the two, the latter is to be preferred, but average up.

The Fifty-Seven.

Do not try and have fifty-seven varieties of story in one script. If you start it as a drama, keep it dramatic, and do not suddenly turn on the tears in a comedy. And above all, do not turn to comedy unconsciously. We read a story the other day that started as a comedy, turned into drama and wound up in burlesque, and the writer was blissfully unconscious of having travestied the dramatic. In an effort to obtain an unusual finish he became so wildly improbable that even the kiddies would have laughed at the situation.

The Fiction Writer Again.

We are in receipt of another letter from one of the sort of writers that gets five cents a word from Collier's. He makes the same plea that everyone else does not write from that point of view. He thinks that if three and four hundred dollars are offered for stories that the photoplays will become real literature.

Personally we do not believe that the offer of three hundred or three thousand dollars will materially improve the output of stories. For that matter we do not believe that the average writer of five-cent-a-word fiction can write a story worthy thirty dollars. We have seen the work of writers in that class, but we seldom saw one of their stories that was worth as much as the average output of the photoplaywright as distinguished from the general literary worker.

It's not a question of price, but of training. The high-priced fiction writer thinks in words and ideas. He invents novel plots, cunningly contrived situations, but he does not think in action and the butcher boy who does think in action is apt to develop into a better photoplaywright than the man who thinks in polished phrase.

The writer suggests the experiment but ignores the definite fact that the experiment has been tried repeatedly in the past three years. We know companies right now that would gladly give $300 for stories worth $250, but they cannot find them, because the work of well known and highly trained writers when deprived of their fluency of phrase is of no greater value than the play of someone who has made a stufy study of photoplay but who could not sell a story to the Saturday Evening Post in a thousand years.

For that matter there is no reason why the work should command as much as the story. The story must be written and polished and repolished before it will pass one of the large companies. The trained photoplaywright should not take two hours for a full reel. We wrote a $50 play this morning in fifty minutes. Does the fiction writer average that?

The situation suggests the old act of the Russell Brothers. Jimmie Russell couldn't think of a name short of two dollars, but came down to fifty cents by half dollar cuts. The author who thinks that he could write a story for $300 should start at $50 and work up. That's what he had to do with fiction. More than this writer have sold stories to Courtlandt Young for three dollars without prejudice to what came after.

There are but eighteen minutes to a photoplay. It is a rarely skillful writer who can put the laughs and the tears into that brief space. Do not try it unless you know positively that you are one of the few. Frankly, we would not try it—not more than once.

Take a Vacation.

If you find that your ideas are drying up and that the work comes hard, drop writing for a week and see how much better you can do when you go back to the typewriter. You are not losing time, for quicker work will soon enable you to catch up.

Doesn't Pay.

We got another of those near-onion-skin scripts the other day, with the ingenious statement that the sender saved two cents each way on every script he sent out.

Nothing of the sort. He lost the full sum of postage each way on the scripts, because no self-respecting editor with two or three hundred scripts on his desk is going to bother with tissue scripts. He has not the time. If it costs eight cents a round trip, instead of twelve, there is an actual loss of eight cents, to say nothing of the lost chance of a sale.

It doesn't pay to be too cheap. Postage mounts up, but if you spend postage to no avail, stop spending postage and write and study without making submission until you can turn out a better script.

Inquiries.

NOTE—Replies cannot be sent by mail. State name of character. Do not ask for "leads" or "that man." Addresses cannot be given here, but a list of studio addresses will be sent for a stamped and self-addressed envelope. Only questions of general interest will be answered. Replies cannot be repeated.

M. J. McC.—The only thing you can do seems to be to wait. If the company voluntarily got in touch with you, it argues an intention to be decent. Give them until March first at least As we said before, we know nothing of the company. It does not regularly release.

W. R.—The successful suitor in "Pirate Gold" was J. Jiquel Lanoe.

DOROTHY—Harold Lockwood played Frank Franklyn in "Harbor Island." Fernando Galvez played the Squaw Man in "When Edith Played Judge and Jury."

T. N. G.—Do not ask for "female leads," ask about the characters you are interested in, please, and then we'll know what you are talking about. How can we tell whom you think the lead when there are two parts of almost equal importance? In "The God Within" the blonde girl was Miss Blanche Sweet, the Angel of the Camp, Miss Clair McDowell. After this ask for characters if you want definite information.

TEMPORA—You're a bit out of date with your questions. Eighteen months is the general limit. Sorry.

M. E.—You've got us. No company that we know of maintains a herd of camels, but any company in Los Angeles or Florida could do Arabian stuff. Look at Selig's "In the Tents of the Asra." No camels, but the real desert flavor. Selig also likes battles, ditto Kay-Bee and Bison.

532 COLLEGE STREET—That's a funny sort of name to sign to a letter, don't you think? Is it your own, or assumed as a pen name? Give us your real name next time. Any company will take "a story with a bride in it." if it is the sort of story the company wants. Most any company will take a "running" story, if by the latter you mean a story about foot racing, but it must be a story.

L. K. C.—Miss Mabel Normand has not been acting with "The Perfect Woman" company. If she has been advertised as being with this aggregation, we think Miss Normand would appreciate information to that effect. Miss Normand is not "formerly" with the Keystone. She is an "is-er."

M. F. L.—Miss Pickford was in neither of the plays mentioned by you

H. H. P.—Miss Florence Geneva played only in "Two Daughters of Eve." After that she went to a dramatic company, "Oh! Oh! Delphine."

ORIENT—We do not get that first question in our cards. Robert Heron was the tender-hearted boy in the Biograph of that title. We have named the three friends. Miss Marie Wierman was Ellen in "The Old Oaken Bucket."

A. M. M.—Please give the correct title of the Thanhouser.

O. S. M.—Read this paper and keep posted. Mr. Johnson has not been out west and Mr. Costello cannot very well go into vaudeville and around the world for the Vitagraph at the same time.

MARIE—Solax does not give casts and the number of inquiries has not seemed to call for a special identifier. The Biograph Identifier is sending the reply to the second question. Miss Mignon Anderson was the little stenographer in "A Will and a Way."

J. S.—Joe King played Lieut. Burr in "The Blue Grass Romance."

J. A. T.—You have not the correct title for that supposed Vitagraph. Biograph, Solax and Eclair have used the title, but not Vitagraph. There is no cast extant, in or out of the Lubin office, for "The Senorita's Butterfly." Adele de Garde played the child in "The Vulture and the Doves." The other children we do not place.

A. N.—Miss Gauntier was not "replaced" at Kalem's. Mr. McGovern and Miss Elder are both with Pathe. As for those other questions! ! !

L. A. F.—We know of no company besides Keystone asking for synopses alone.

B. M.—When you want to ask a lot of questions take a sheet of paper. Don't crowd it all on a postal card. We have no catalogue of companies in New York City. Send a stamped and addressed envelope for a free list of the companies in New York and elsewhere

MRS. T.—Where the synopsis alone is asked for the story should be told in greater detail than where it is all told in the plot of action and the main points only mentioned in the synopsis. As many scenes make a split reel as are needed to tell the story. If the action is not too long it is a split reel. If it is too long it is a whole reel, but the action and not the number of scenes determine the length. Some split reels run ten scenes and some fifty.

BIOGRAPHER—Even so. Miss Mary Pickford was the stenographer in "The One She Loved."

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON

A Queer Proposition.

MR. J. FRANK MARTIN, president and secretary of the Photoplay Entertainment Company, Pittsburg, Pa., sends in description and blueprints of what is claimed to be a method of removing the heat from the light ray, at least—and this is the queer part—insofar as it affects celluloid. Patent is applied for, if not already granted. Briefly the idea is this:

Just in front of the condensers place a ray filter constructed as follows: Between two glass discs hermetically seal a sheet of clear celluloid .05 to .1 of an inch in thickness, to which has been applied, on one side, a film of emulsion similar to that used in photographic processes. The idea is explained thus, the correctness or incorrectness of the theory not being vouched for by this department. To the ordinary person heat is heat, with no variation, except as to its intensity. From a scientific standpoint, however, several varieties of radiant energy exist, each of which is propagated through space by waves of different length. What will heat one substance will not always heat another, and some substances are susceptible to all the varieties of radiant energy. If a piece of clear glass be placed at or near the aperture of a moving picture machine, with a celluloid film behind it, and both subjected to the concentrated light from the condensers, it will be found that the glass will show but little or no rise in temperature, whereas the celluloid will heat and quickly ignite. The explanation is that the glass condensing lenses absorb all the heat waves which effect glass; the air between the condensing lenses and the aperture absorbs all the waves affecting air, but both those mediums afford free passage to those waves affecting celluloid, or other substances than glass or air. There is much more to the explanation, but it is along the same lines. The whole thing sums up in the claim that celluloid and photographic emulsion placed next the condensers will absorb all those heat rays affecting celluloid and photographic emulsion, thus preventing any considerable rise in temperature of the film at the aperture, even though exposed to the light which would promptly ignite wood, were it held in front of the film.

Now when I first looked that proposition over I was inclined to scout the whole thing. But I've learned that things which seem strange and improbable ofttimes are facts, nevertheless. I therefore procured a clear stereo slide cover glass, and, much to my astonishment, when held in front of the aperture of a moving picture machine, with the full light of projection on, it showed but very slight rise in temperature. Try it out for yourself. However, I am in doubt as to the feasibility of the scheme presented, even allowing that the celluloid will remove the heat rays affecting that substance, as claimed, thus rendering the film itself immune. The celluloid performing this duty will, I should presume, get very hot and, inasmuch as celluloid furnishes, in part, its own oxygen for combustion, will probably carbonize at least enough to cause discoloration, even though hermetically sealed. But in all this I am but speculating, not even being convinced that the claim made by Mr. Martin will hold water—or heat, rather. As the inventor proposes to market his invention, we shall see what we shall see. It is all very interesting, anyhow.

Many Thanks.

Mr. J. H. Hallberg, New York City, writes:

> Have just received copy of your new Motion Picture Handbook, second edition, and take this opportunity to congratulate you upon the very complete work you have produced. The book cannot fail to be of great benefit to each individual reader and, at the same time, to the motion picture industry as a whole, because it will educate those interested in the exhibition of motion pictures.

Also Mr. Robert W. Kiewert, of the Chas. L. Kiewert Company, Bio Carbons, says:

> You surely deserve words of praise for the splendid "get up" of the second edition of the Motion Picture Handbook. You have covered every point so minutely that it surely will be a great help to the motion picture manager and operator.

For these words of commendation, gentlemen, accept my thanks. Both Mr. Hallberg and Mr. Kiewert are men whose opinion is of value, therefore their approval of the work is highly appreciated.

Toggle Gear Trouble.

Beaumont, Texas, elucidates his difficulty as follows:

> Cannot get the grind out of toggle gear of my Power's Six. Have tried every way I know. If you can tell me how to get rid of this trouble you have my thanks.

Turn to P. 284 of the new handbook. With framing lever clear up, grasp horizontal bar 683, and if you can move it sidewise, and if connecting link 682 moves with it, then loosen screws 745 and tighten setscrews (2 of 'em) 744 just a little, until horizontal bar 682 is held snugly, after screws 745 are re-tightened, but without binding. Now, if bar 683 can still be moved sidewise, tighten screw 728 tight. Now, if this does not help matters, examine and see that shaft 679 (setting on base of machine), which fits in hole 742 and carries toggle gear 678 (lying at base of machine), is not badly worn. If it is, order another at once. Meanwhile set shaft 679 up snugly against the gear endwise, so as to hold all the "wobble" possible out of the gear. Now when all this is done, if matters are not helped, try casting 684 and see if it is, by any chance, loose (might try this first, by the way). If not, then, with a brass, or copper punch against one side or the other, using a light hammer, carefully tap on the punch so as to force the casting slightly sidewise. If this helps, all right. If it makes matters worse, tap it the other way. If all this fails, I'm afraid the machine will have to go to the factory or a repair shop. Presume you have your handbook now, as you have one ordered.

Troubles Galore.

Bryn Mawr, Pa., forwards a bundle of troubles as follows:

> An operator in a house seating 500. Modern in every way, but, alas, like many another, they skimped on the most important part of all—the operating room. It is of asbestos board on 1-16 inch angle iron frame, hung from ceiling by 1/8 inch flat iron hooks bolted to rafters of the roof. There are no diagonal braces to insure rigidity. Floor is of lumber, with asbestos board on top. The floor, held by that light frame, is so flexible that I cannot move about without having moving pictures (wrong kind of "moving") on the screen. Have two Power's Six A projectors, Hallberg a.c. Economizer and a 70-foot throw. Ordered lenses to give a 16-foot picture, but only get one 14-foot. House opened Xmas and we are doing good business. The loop setter on my machine doesn't work. The bracket and roller of setter seem to be too heavy for the film to lift, and the film tightens around the roller and clatters. Am having troubles of my own with the exchange. We pay $50.00 per week for four reels per day, with extra feature Saturdays; supposed to be 20 to 30 day service. One reel came apart in 15 places in the machine. Found splices made with pins. Don't have time to go over the films before showing, as we don't get them until after noon and start at 2.

It is too bad that exhibitors will persist in economizing on the most important part of the whole house—the operating room, whence comes practically the entire show. I note they have gotten up-to-date equipment in the operating room, but have spoiled it all by building a flimsy shell which moves every time the operator does. Also, I'll bet there is no proper vent flue (for safety in case of fire, see P. 80 of handbook), though the room is right up against the roof, rendering its installation childishly simple. As to the films, unless you can secure service from an exchange which inspects its films properly, it is up to the management to have some one, other than yourself, inspect and repair them. The reports on Power's loop setter are universally favorable. The trouble you name is probably due to your making too short a lower loop, so that when you frame the carriage up the loop tightens against the roller of the setter, but not sufficiently to trip it. The remedy is to quickly frame the carriage clear up, which will probably trip the setter, and lengthen the loop, or else reach in and trip the roller up with the finger. But if you do this don't hold the roller up. Just flip it up with the finger tip, releasing it instantly. If you hold it you will make the loop too long. Try making your lower loop a trifle longer. Show this answer to your employers and explain that it is utterly impossible to avoid vibration of the picture on the screen unless they brace that room and make the floor perfectly rigid. Probably they don't realize the error they have made. Show them pages 76 to 81 of the handbook and ask them to read them over carefully. Then get them to read all the subject "The Operating Room," beginning on page 65.

Focal Length of Condensers.

Columbus, O., asks:

> You advised me to use two 7½ cond. lenses on a 10-foot picture at 70 feet. Field is white all over in stereo, but through M. P. lens it is yellow around edges. Have another house with 12-foot picture at 60 feet. What condensing lenses do you advise?

Same thing—two 7½ lenses. Due to the difference in stereo lens and M. P. objective lens focal length it may be necessary to move your lamp forward or back when switching from stereo to M. P. or vice versa. Theoretically you should have much longer focal length lenses than 7½, but they are hard to get and expensive and you can get good results with the ones you have though switching from stereo to M. P. brings in complications. You should have a separate dissolver for best results. You will find this dealt with, briefly, on P. 363 of the handbook. I advise two 7½ lenses with all objectives (M. P.) over 4½, except where objective focal length is excessive—say 8 inches and up.

That Bug.

Washington, D. C., writes, ordering a handbook and remarks:

> Would say that I have seen pictures in which a letter is shown and a common fly would calmly promenade across it. Suppose Mr. or Mrs. Fly lit on the letter as it was being photographed. If this is true of a fly, then any other insect might do the same thing. I think New York is right.

Yes, dear boy, that's all right, but all the placards I've seen being photographed had letters at least one inch high. Now several samples of brother

Bug have reached me already, and in them all the insect is as long, or longer than the letters. Thus, if the sizes of these placards have been reduced, then your explanation holds good; otherwise the fly would have to be of very heroic proportions. I have taken steps to get at the facts. Will publish them when received.

Hats Off, Gentlemen!

For this is from a lady operator, Muriel Rhode, Cincinnati, O. Now don't get excited for she is m-a-r-r-i-e-d, and her hubby is right there on the job with her. She writes:

> Enclosed find money for handbook. So many of the brothers speak of the glass port scheme. Should think it would affect the focusing of the picture. I found the light from the lamp and spot hurt my eyes, so I wear a light-weight hat pulled down tightly over my head and peaked up in front, so I can see the picture without any light shining in my eyes. Another advantage is, one does not feel the heat so much. My husband and I are partners in the theater. He has the management of the business while I have charge of and operate the mechanical part. Have two Power's Fives, which is a pretty good machine. Have a 1913 model Motiograph on the way to us now. House seats 200. Is quite a nice little place. The decorations are in dark red. Plaster screen, with black border. Electric piano. Four bunches of red grapes contain the exit lights.

It's a good thing you're married, Mrs. Rhode, or there would doubtless be an exodus of bachelor exhibitors to Cincinnati. Some of 'em don't like to pay operator's salaries anyhow, and they'd figure—well, never mind what they'd figure, for it would take two to make the bargain. Seriously, Mrs. Rhode, we are glad to welcome you to the department as a genuine working lady motion picture operator, having charge of an operating room in a sure enough theater. The hat you sent would serve it purpose very well, indeed. It is a very coarse Panama, by mail, 55c from H. W. Davis & Co., Cordova Blk., St. Augustine, Fla.

Higher License.

Mr. Wm. C. Phillips, High River, Alberta, Canada, writes, setting forth certain troubles.

It seems, from a clipping enclosed, that a law is proposed to be passed in the province of Saskatchwan, where the operator's license is, by the way, $15 per year, raising the theater license from $20.00 to $300.00 per annum. Also it is proposed to limit the number of picture theaters to one for each 5,000 population. Brother Phillips, after setting forth the above, continues:

> Have noticed many complaints as to condenser breakage. Here is how I prevent that trouble, and, with me, at least, it works perfectly. I simply remove the entire top of my lamp house. To break a lens would be a novelty to me. Am not only an operator of long standing, but a camera man as well, having worked with the Chas. Urban Co. for a number of years. I wish yourself and the department all success.

As to the license threat, it is but a threat as yet, the bill not having passed. It would be well for Sask. exhibitors to have slides made calling attention to the proposed law, and to the fact that a $300 license will very likely mean a raise of admission fees. The people will probably do the rest. Exhibitors have a much-neglected way of reaching the public through slides. A $15 operator's license fee simply amounts to putting a tax on the fact that a man is willing to labor and earn his daily bread. Fifteen dollars is even more than the worst grafting lawmakers we have here in the United States have dared to impose on operators. If a man won't work he is dubbed a "bum;" if he will work, in Sask., he is to be charged about 1-52 of his wages for the privilege. Glorious. Removal of the lamphouse top cannot be recommended. It would not be allowed in cities. Removing the back is better, but even that is not allowable in cities, though perfectly safe.

Local Union No. 160.

Cleveland, O., informs us that No. 160 I. A. T. S. E. still has its hat in the ring, as follows:

> Do not often see Operator's L. U. 160 mentioned and take this opportunity to assure you we are very much alive. Our boys have always worked very hard to build up and maintain good working conditions, rather than a great name. We believe we will compare favorably with any local in the country, when it comes right down to "things accomplished." I submit the following: Much enthusiasm was shown at last meeting of L. U. 160, which was largely attended. Annual reports of officers showed progress all along the line. Retiring officers were given a rousing vote of thanks. New officers are as follows: President, S. M. Hulbert; Vice-President, S. Shaw; Financial Secretary-Treasurer, H. Holmden; Recording Secretary, L. Shafranek; Segeant-at-Arms, H. J. DesChambeault; Inner Guard, O. Kurr; Business Agent, Benj. Brown; Delegate to I. A. T. S. E. convention, S. M. Hulbert. The office address is 310 Prospect Ave. The fact was brought out that we are about 98% strong in this city. With the new members just initiated we are now in position to supply the new non-union houses with union men as soon as we can persuade them to accept union service.

Glad to hear such good report. Trust you will prosper in the coming year, and make the union slide synonymous with good results on the screen, remembering always, that good pay and good working conditions bespeak good service.

Indian Head Disputed.

Toronto, Canada, writes as follows:

> Have read, with interest, Indian Head's explanation of Canadian license law, P. 46, Jan. 4 issue. Am afraid his knowledge is gleaned from laws governing his own province. In Canada we have no uniform law governing theaters or taxation. Each province has its own set of laws. In Toronto the exhibitor pays a business tax to the city, based on the value of his business, plus $50.00 a year for his theater license. In addition he has to pay the government of the province $75.00 a year. (Whew! Anything else? Ed.) for a machine license on each machine. You may therefore see that the Chesley brother was quite correct in his assertion, Nov. 23 issue, and your criticism was perfectly justifiable. I was near forgetting the fact that the operator also must contribute his little five every year for his privilege of earning his living. In return for this the competent operator is supposed to be protected from Jimmy-The-Usher, but, up to date, this part of the programme has not been enforced, though the five is carefully collected. I heartily indorse the stand taken by the World on the cigarette coupon matter. Such schemes only serve to lower the dignity and standard of the business as a whole.

And there you are! What I have said previously covers the matter. I am opposed to any "license" fee exceeding $2 per year for operators. As to the theater tax, why not educate the general public on that matter through the medium of slides? A number of theaters could club together and have slides made from carefully prepared matter. They could then run them successively in the various houses. One of the slides might read like this, for instance:

> "LAWMAKERS HIT POOR MAN'S THEATER!
> We are assessed $75.00 for the privilege of installing a second projection machine in order to give you a better show. Ask your representative why this should be so."

That is, of course, merely a suggestion as to matter to be prepared. Exhibitors can reach more people, in a more effective way, through the medium of slides on their screens, than can a newspaper. You are neglecting opportunities lying at your hand.

Loses Upper Loop.

Albert Lea, Minn., orders a handbook and writes:

> Everyone has troubles. Here is mine. Have a 1912 Motiograph and lose my upper loop. Except on two occasions it has been on the same brand of films. I also have a knock, which seems to be in the intermittent sprocket. Have set all bushings up, but it seems to do no good.

Possibly the loop-losing is caused by (a) badly worn teeth on intermittent sprocket. (b) idler roller 108, Fig. 110, P. 250 of handbook, not being set closely enough to, or too close to the sprocket. It should be away from sprocket by about twice the thickness of a film. Adjust with screw 23½, Fig. 110. Also see General Instruction No. 3, P. 214, General Instruction, No. 8, P. 216 and General Instruction No. 12, P. 217 As to the knock, it may be that your intermittent sprocket is loose on its shaft. Take carriage out (see Inst'n No. 35, page 257, handbook) and examine. Possibly the star and cam need adjustment. Directions will be found in Inst'n No. 36. However, I think you will find the trouble lies in the ball and socket of ball arbor O55, Fig. 112, P. 254. When this becomes worn it usually makes some noise. Read Instruction No. 49, page 261. I think after carefully reading the Motiograph instructions in the handbook you will readily locate your trouble and be able to apply the remedy.

Reducing Flicker.

Rome, Ga., writes, ordering a handbook and says:

> Have gained many valuable ideas through the Department. This little city has 15,000 people. Projection is good. We use two Edison Model B projectors. One has a three-wing and one a two-wing shutter. The two-winger flickers unless run at pretty high speed. I reduce the tendency to flicker as follows: without a film in strike an arc and frame the carriage up and down slowly, while running the machine, until the point of least flicker is found. Then thread in frame and the trick is done.

I'm afraid, brother, your imagination worked overtime when you evolved that particular scheme. I know of no reason why the position of the framing carriage should make any difference in the flicker. I guess you would have to show me that, Rome. Glad to know projection in your city is good. Keep it that way.

In Trouble.

Avon, Ills., orders a handbook and says:

> What I want to know is what focal length condensers I ought to use with a 10 foot 4 inch picture at 58 feet. Have a 6½ next the arc but don't know what the other one is. Have used as much as 30 amperes, but don't get the light I should.

I think you will find that two 7½ condensing lenses will fill the bill, your objective being about 5½ e.f. Keep the lenses, both condensing and objective, perfectly clean. Use either ½ inch or ⅝ cored above and ½ inch solid below, set as per Fig. 101, P 211 of handbook and you should get good light. You ought to get very good illumination on a 10-foot picture with 20 amperes, but try ½ inch cored above with that amperage.

Your Opinion, Gentlemen.

Pennsylvania sends in the following:

> Kindly inform "New York City" (P. 262—Jan. 18 issue) that "bugs is bugs" and the ones he saw were the real thing. This is easy enough to explain. A bug crawls across the letter or title-card while the camera is taking and hence appears in the finished film. Now something about myself. I was employed as assistant in a certain theater in town. Had been there but a few days when the operator went out to smoke a cigarette (smoking is strictly prohibited), leaving me alone with a machine which he knew was not working right, although I did not. The lower magazine rollers were so close together that they would not pass a large, or badly made patch easily. Not suspecting that anything was wrong, I was watching the screen, when an especially heavy patch caught between the rollers. The film bunched up under the lower film guard till the pressure became so strong as to force open the guard and, although I tried to close it in time, the film caught fire. Now I do not think that this was my fault and I did all I could to put it > out and avert a panic. Unfortunately the operating room was in the course of reconstruction and the fire shutters were not put up. However, I put the fire out without any property damage except a few feet of film and started the other machine in time to prevent any loss of life or injury by panic. However, the whole thing was blamed on me and I was discharged. I have tried to get employment in other theaters but everybody seems to have heard of the fire. I spoke to a friend about this, and he said that Mr. ————, my former employer, had told all the other managers in town about the accident and that I could not secure another place as assistant unless I would go to another city. This I am not in a position to do. I think it is a dirty trick if he is doing this, as work is hard enough to get in this place under any circumstances. How do you think I could regain the good opinion of the managers in this town? For obvious reasons I do not give the manager's name, and for the same reasons, I wish my own name and that of the city suppressed.
